

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. IN submitting the present volume to their numerous patrons and the public, the proprietors feel it an imperative duty to tender their best thanks to the various literary, scientific, and official gentlemen of the county, who have so readily furnished their agents with valuable contributions and corrections, as well as to those who have honoured the publishers with immediate communications. A work of this character embraces a great variety of subjects only thoroughly known to those whose engagements make them familiar with the requisite details; therefore, the assistance thus rendered has been of the utmost value, affording too, as it does, the surest means of giving to this publication that degree of authenticity and usefulness which the proprietors anxiously desire should be its characteristics. To their friend, John Rooker Esq. of Akehead, Wigton, Cumberland, they are deeply indebted, for his excellent essay on the Geology of the Lake District, which they doubt not will be found to contain much valuable information,—and to the subscribers, who have so munificently supported them in their arduous undertaking, they beg, in an especial manner, to offer their warmest acknowledgments.

As the utility of publications like the present entirely depends on their correctness, simplified arrangement, and copiousness of information, the proprietors' attention, in the compilation of the present work, has been unremittingly devoted to the attainment of these objects, and to secure them every town, parish, township, village, and almost every house has been visited, the best topographical authorities have been consulted, and neither labour nor expense spared, in order to secure accurate and authentic information. And, though it would be presumptuous to expect that a volume containing such a great body of matter, and such a diversity of subjects, could be entirely free from errors, yet, it is hoped, that any which may appear in the present one, will be of no material deterioration to its general utility. The proprietors, therefore, feel confident that, for general accuracy, comprehensiveness, and typographical execution, this work, which they now with much deference submit to the ordeal of public criticism, will be found to give general satisfaction.

The plan of the work embraces an Introductory Review of the Early History of Britain, derived from the best accessible authorities, both ancient and modern, with especial reference to the Roman, Saxon, and Danish invasions, and exhibiting the manners and customs of the various races formerly dominant in this country, together with interesting details respecting the civil and ecclesiastical divisions of England, the various changes which have taken place in the ancient sub-divisions of the country, and a resumé of the rise and progress of trade, commerce, and manufactures. This is followed by a General History and Description of the County of Durham, comprehending its geological features, rivers, climate and soil, animals, civil divisions, internal communication, agriculture, mining industry, manufactures, government, income and expenditure, ecclesiastical polity, charities, poor-law unions, lieutenancy, magistracy, members of parliament, &c. &c., with separate historical sketches and statistical descriptions of the city of Durham, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and all the boroughs, towns, ports, parishes, townships, and hamlets in the county, their locality, territorial extent, population returns from 1801 to 1851, charitable, educational, and other institutions, churches, chapels, public buildings, historical events, eminent men, picturesque scenery, curiosities, and a variety of statistical and commercial matter, extracted from parliamentary reports and other authentic sources,—the whole constituting, for this important county, a faithful epitome of historical and local information.

To the historical and descriptive sketch of each place succeeds a DIRECTORY of its inhabitants, presenting, in a classification for easy reference, the names, designations, and addresses of the principal residents, alphabetically arranged in copious miscellanies, or classified under the heads of their respective trades and professions, with the Post-office and railway regulations, and every medium of public conveyance. The work is accompanied with a large new Map of Durham, on which the various divisions of the county are neatly coloured, and the different lines of railway accurately delineated.

INTRODUCTORY REVIEW

THE ANCIENT BRITONS.

TWENTY-SIX centuries have passed away since the Phœnicians of Cadiz, whose tin-mines were beginning to be exhausted, discovered certain islands where that metal was found in great abundance. In order to monopolise so valuable a branch of commerce, they carefully concealed the place from the knowledge of their neighbours, and, about five centuries before the birth of Christ, Herodotus candidly acknowledged his inability to discover the real position of the "Cassiterides," or "Tin Islands." The Carthaginians, then in the pride of youth and victory, had made repeated efforts to discover them, and, determined to be no longer baffled, sent out two powerful fleets, under the command of the celebrated brothers, Hanno and Himilco, who undertook two separate voyages of discovery. Having passed the Pillars of Hercules, Hanno turned to the left, and explored the coast of Africa. Himilco, shaping his course to the north, crept along the shores of Spain and Gaul, stretched, by accident or design, across the ocean, and in the fourth month discovered the object of his search. In the fragments of his journal, preserved by Fœstus Avienus, he calls them "Œstrymnides," describes them as close to Albion, and two days' sail from the sacred isle of the Hibernians." He also tells us that the people of these islands were courageous, proud, and industrious, and that they traversed considerable distances on sea, by means of boats made of wicker-work, and covered with hides. From this description there can be little doubt that he alludes to the Scilly Islands.

The success of the Carthaginians awakened the hopes of the Grecian colonists of Massilia, the present Marseilles; and Pytheas, their most celebrated navigator, during his voyage in the northern seas, had also the good fortune to discover the Tin Islands. He tells us they were ten in number, abounding in mines of tin and lead, and divided by a narrow but boisterous strait from the coast of the Damnonii. The natives were sociable and becoming in manners, sober, and unacquainted with luxury. When the Greeks of Marseilles and the Roman colonists of Narbonne, found means to share in the traffic, they conveyed the tin to the opposite shores of Gaul, and then over land to the Mediterranean.

The constant intercourse kept up between this island and the opposite shores of the continent, seems to have partly civilised the natives of southern Britain. These people were divided into several tribes, the principal of which were the Cantii, or men of Kent; the Belgæ, or inhabitants of the present counties of Hampshire and Wilts; and the Damnonii, who extended from the river Exe to Land's End. Unlike their brethren of the interior, they were acquainted with a rude kind of agriculture, and with the common arts of life. Their dress was of their own manufacture. A square mantle covered a vest and trowsers, or a deeply plaited tunic of braided cloth; the waist was encircled with a belt, rings adorned the second finger of each hand, and a chain of iron or brass was suspended from the neck. They improved their land by the application of marl, raised great quantities of corn, and stored up their superfluous grain in the cavities of the rocks.

Their huts resembled those of their Gallic neighbours. A foundation of stone supported a circular wall of timber and reeds, over which was thrown a conical roof, pierced in the centre for the two-fold purpose of admitting light and discharging smoke. It was customary for several families to dwell in the same house. Their furniture was obtained from the foreign traders, and was as scanty as the construction of the house was simple. A little earthenware, a few vessels of iron or bronze, and some rude instruments of agriculture or war, were probably all of which the wealthiest Briton could boast. Beyond the borders of the southern tribes, these faint traces of civilisation gradually disappeared. The midland and western nations were unacquainted with either agriculture or manufactures, and their riches consisted in the extent of their pastures and the number of their flocks.

On the eastern coast of the island, between the Thames and the Stour, lay the Trinobantes, whose capital was London; and from the Stour to the Humber stretched the two kindred nations of the Iceni, called Cenimagi and Coitani. The Dobuni and Cassii extended along the left bank of the Thames, from the Severn to the Trinobantes; and above them dwelt the Carnabii and several septs of minor importance. The Brigantes, the most powerful of the British nations, occupied the country between the Tyne and the Humber. To the north of them were the five tribes, known by the general appellation of the Maetæ, and beyond these were the Caledonians. From the river Severn to the Irish sea, dwelt the Silures and the Ordovices; and the Dimetæ inhabited the northern mountains and western district of Wales. Of these, the tribes between the Tyne and the Thames subsisted on the milk of their flocks and herds, and, clothed in skins, they bade defiance to the inclemency of the seasons. The tribes that wandered among the mountains of the north, were yet more barbarous, and depended for support on the casual produce of the chase. The other Britons stained their body with a blue dye, extracted from woad, but these adopted the practice of tattooing; and, if sometimes they enjoyed the shelter of a hut, they seem for the most part to have known no other covering than the heavens, no other bed than the heather—men of iron frames and unbending courage, fit champions to withstand the conquerors of the world—to stem, and finally to repel, the tide of Roman victory.

It is now almost universally agreed that the inhabitants of this country, at the time preceding the Roman invasion, were a portion of the great Celtic family, which had once overspread the greater part of Europe, and which still peopled Gaul, Britain, Ireland, and part of Spain. There is, however, reason to suppose that the Belgæ, both Irish and British, as well as the Caledonians, were not of the Celtic, but of the Teutonic or German race. Of the forms of government among the Britons, all that we know with certainty is, that females were not excluded from political power; that the succession in some cases depended upon the will of the dying chief; that sometimes a tribe was ruled by one, sometimes by several warriors; and that occasionally many tribes confederated under the guidance of a single leader. How far the people had any share in the government; what were the various classes, and their privileges; what the nature of their institutions; and what their local divisions, are questions often asked, but never satisfactorily answered.

Of the religion of the Celtic races, our knowledge is principally derived from Greek and Roman descriptions of Gaul; of its actual condition in Britain we seldom obtain even a passing glimpse. An order of men called Druids were at once their legislators, judges, teachers, and priests. They are said to have been under the control of a chief or arch-druid; and there is every reason to believe that those of Britain and Gaul were the same: both were Celts; both were living under similar circumstances, and in close proximity; and, more than all, we have Cæsar's authority that the Druids of Gaul resorted for instruction to those of Britain. Their principal abodes were the two Monas, the isles of Anglesea and Man; and we find from the Roman writers that they were exempted from taxes, and from military service. In national assemblies their opinion was always asked and generally obeyed; and in trials, both civil and criminal, they were the only arbiters. Those that refused them obedience were driven from the sacrifices, and put out of the protection of the law.

The Druids, we are informed, were acquainted with the Greek alphabet, but to what use they applied this knowledge can only be surmised. It is certain, on the other hand, that to secure their doctrines from the uninitiated, they not only required profound secrecy, but in great measure, if not entirely, prohibited the use of letters, communicating all their learning through the medium of verse. Of tenets thus carefully concealed, it is not to be expected that much should be distinctly known. The following particulars have been collected from the few notices contained in the ancient historians, compared with the doctrines peculiar to the bards. The Druids discussed the nature and the providence of God; the motions and influence of the stars; and the figure, size, formation, and final destruction of the world. They practised divination, and professed to have some acquaintance with medicine and botany. They declared that the object of their order was to reform morals, to secure peace, and to encourage goodness; to effect this, they inculcated obedience to the laws of God, kindness to man, and fortitude in all the vicissitudes of life. Man, according to them, is in a circle of courses: good and evil are placed before him; if he choose the former, death places him in a circle of felicity; if the latter, his soul is doomed to animate the body of a beast or reptile, and again that of a man, until it be sufficiently purified for its destined happiness. It was to the influence of this doctrine that the Romans ascribed that contempt of death that was so strongly characteristic of the Celtic nations.

The dwelling of the Druids was a hut or cavern in the gloomiest recesses of the forest; and there, in the middle of the day or night, the trembling votary of superstition was admitted to offer his prayer, and listen to the oracles of the god. The deities that were thus consulted and worshipped, differed in little but in name from those of Greece and Rome. They regarded the oak and its productions as sacred; to its trunk they bound the victim intended for sacrifice; and its leaves they wore in chaplets on every solemnity. When it bore the mistletoe, two white heifers were immolated beneath its branches; a Druid then mounted the tree, and lopped the plant with a golden knife, while a second Druid standing beneath, caught it in the folds of his robe, and a religious feast terminated the ceremonies of the day. They believed that their gods exacted life for life, and that they would not spare one without the substitution of another; hence, in danger or calamity, they sacrificed their fellow-men, that they themselves might be preserved. On such occasions, they predicted their impending happiness or misfortune, from the gush of blood, and from the last convulsions of the victim. In peace, they offered the fruits of the earth; in war, their prisoners and spoils. Their captives were thrust into large wicker cages, and there consumed; criminals shared the same fate. Four principal festivals were annually observed by the Druids: the first day of the year, which was then on the tenth of March, May-day, Midsummer-eve, and the last day in October. The bonfires, which in some places are still lighted on those days, and the use of the mistletoe, are lingering traces of Druidism. Stonehenge, on Salisbury Plain, is supposed by some to have been a temple of the Druids; while others, judging from the religious edifices in Hindostan, have ventured to call it a temple of Buddha; but, after all that has been said, its real use still remains a mystery.

The warlike weapons of the ancient Britons were the bow, arrows headed with flint, a short clumsy sword, an oaken club, and a spear or javelin. The cavalry were armed with shields, broad swords, and lances. They were accustomed to dismount, at fitting seasons, and fight on foot; and their horses are said to have been so well trained, as to stand firm at the places where they were left till their masters returned to them. The infantry of the Britons was the most numerous body; and, according to Tacitus, the main strength of their armies. They were very swift of foot, and expert in swimming over rivers and crossing fens and marshes, by which means they were enabled to make sudden attacks and safe retreats. They wore no defensive armour, carrying nothing of that sort but a small light shield. When formed in battle array, the infantry generally occupied the centre, being disposed in several lines and in distinct bodies. The cavalry and chariots were placed on the wings, but small parties of both manœuvred along the front. In the rear, and on their flanks, they placed their travelling chariots and their waggons, with their respective families in them, in order that those vehicles might serve as barriers to prevent attack in those directions, and that their courage might be inflamed by the presence of all who were most dear to them. Their war chariots were of various forms and sizes; some being rude, and others of curious and even elegant workmanship. They were at once strong and light, and were made to contain each a charioteer for driving, with one, two, or more warriors for fighting. The extremity of their axles and other salient points, were armed with scythes and hooks, for cutting and tearing whatever came in their way, as they were driven rapidly along. The horses attached to them were perfect in training, and so well in hand, that they could be driven at speed over the roughest country, and even through the woods, which then abounded in all directions. The way in which the Britons brought the chariots into action was this:—At the beginning of a battle, they drove about the flanks of the enemy, throwing darts from the cars; and, according to Cæsar, the very dread of the horses, and the noise of the rapid wheels, often broke the ranks of his legions. When they had succeeded in making an impression, and had winded in among the Romans, the warriors leaped from the chariots, and fought on foot. In the meantime, the drivers retired with the chariots a little from the combat, taking up such a position as to favour the retreat of the warriors in case of their being overmatched.

THE ROMANS.

In the year 55, B.C., Julius Cæsar, who commanded the Roman army in Gaul, crossed over into Britain, whose inhabitants, he alleged, had offered provocation to the Romans by aiding their enemies on the continent. With an army of 12,000 men he quitted the shores of Gaul, and in a few hours reached the Kentish coast, where he met with a vigorous and determined resistance; but the veteran legions of Rome soon routed the undisciplined crowds of natives who had flocked to the shore to defend their soil against the invader, and Cæsar was gaining a knowledge of the country, when, on the fourth night after his arrival, a violent storm shattered or dispersed the greater part of the fleet, and threatened to cut off his return to Gaul. The Britons, being aware of this disaster, soon resumed the offensive, and made an attack on the fortified Roman camp, but were repulsed, and driven back to the woods. The season being now far advanced, Cæsar re-embarked his troops, and returned to the continent after an absence of only seventeen days. In the following spring he returned, with a force of five legions, 2,000 cavalry, and a fleet of 800 ships. This formidable armament alarmed the Britons, who retreated into the interior of the country, and gave the supreme command to Cassibelan, prince of the Casii, a powerful and warlike chief, whose territories lay along the left bank of the Thames, and included the present counties of Essex and Middlesex. Cassibelan proved himself worthy of the position to which he had been raised; and in the arrangement of his forces and his method of carrying on the war displayed both courage and discretion. Avoiding a general engagement, he led his army through the woods and marshes, and watched the operations of the Romans till they came to Wallingford, where he disputed with Cæsar the passage of the river. Resistance was of no avail; the Romans forced the passage, and advancing into the country, stormed Verulam, the capital of the British chief, and exacted from the Britons the promise of an annual tribute. After these achievements Cæsar returned to the continent; the only result being a series of barren victories which struck terror into the inhabitants; and a breast-plate of British pearls, offered at the altar of Venus, was the chief trophy of his exploits in Britain.

For nearly a century, the island continued in undisturbed possession of its freedom. The pacific policy of Augustus and Tiberius secured the independence of the Britons, till Claudius, the fourth Roman emperor, determined to reduce the island. In the year of Christ, 43, this emperor landed in Britain with a numerous and veteran army. Caradoc, or Caractacus, and Togidumnus, brothers worthy of each other, held the place of Cassibelan, and, like him, carried on a war of incessant skirmishes. But their efforts were vain, the German auxiliary troops were able to cope with them in the marsh and the forest, and the formidable legion encountered them on the plain. Camalodunum was taken, and the neighbouring tribes submitted; but still the contest thickened. Vespasian, whose talents afterwards raised him to the imperial throne, crossed the Thames, and attacked the Belgæ: Again and again he defeated them; but after each victory, he found that he had another host to vanquish; and it was not until thirty battles had been fought, that he was able to completely subdue the men of the south. Plautius meantime found a still more arduous field among the Cassii and the Silures. Weary of observing the progress of the struggle, of hearing of battles without cessation, of victories without fruit, Claudius was glad to withdraw in the earlier part of the contest, and enjoy a triumph which others had earned.

On the departure of Claudius, Plautius was appointed to the chief command in Britain, and five years after he was superseded by Ostorius, who endeavoured to pursue a more systematic line of policy. He erected forts to protect the conquered provinces, and endeavoured to disarm the disaffected Britons; but this measure exasperated the free spirit of the natives, and in the war which ensued, Caractacus was taken prisoner and sent to Rome, although it was at this time customary with the Romans to put to death the princes whom they captured. Caractacus, when summoned before the emperor, preserved his native dignity and courage, and remarked that it seemed to him strange "that a people possessing so great wealth should envy him his humble cottage in Britain."

The natives, though vanquished, and deprived of their leaders, still maintained the same determined struggle. Worn out with anxiety and disappointment, Ostorius sunk into the grave under a complication of diseases (A.D. 53). The Romans finding it impossible to reduce the island, so long as the Druids continued to exercise their power over the minds of the people, determined on the utter extermination of that order. In pursuance of this design, in the reign of Nero, Suetonius Paulinus prepared to reduce Mona, now Anglesea, on the coast of Wales, as the chief seat of the Druids, and the centre of resistance to the Roman power. While engaged in the destruction of the Druids, Boadicea, queen of the Iceni—a people of Norfolk and Suffolk, who had been insulted by some licentious Roman soldiers, raised the standard of revolt; and the infuriated Britons, entering the Roman province, put every one to the sword, and gave every edifice to the flames. Suetonius, alarmed at these reverses, returned by forced marches, but was unable to save the flourishing colony of Londinum and the municipal town of Verulam, in the destruction of which above 70,000 Romans and their allies are said to have perished. But this massacre was soon avenged. Suetonius chose a position enclosed on three sides by dense woods, and there, with 10,000 men, he silently awaited the rushing multitude. The Britons having left their wives and children with the waggons in the rear, collected around their respective chieftains, and, with fearful yells, threw themselves upon their enemies. But Roman discipline prevailed over the valour of the natives, and the fury of the victors knew no bounds; men, women, and children were involved in one promiscuous carnage. If we may credit the Roman historians, above 80,000 Britons were left dead upon the field; while the unhappy Boadicea, unwilling to survive the fortunes of her country, terminated her life by poison.

The Romans continued the war with varying success; but the island was not completely subdued till the reign of Titus and his successors, when Julius Agricola and the Emperor Severus introduced into Britain the arts and sciences of Rome. Agricola, distinguished both as a general and a statesman, no sooner received the command than he effected a complete alteration in the government of the country, by establishing a strict discipline amongst his troops, and treating the conquered people with justice and moderation; the whole island in consequence enjoyed peace, and the natives, who had formerly feared and hated the Roman name, now began to admire and imitate the superior civilisation and refinement of their conquerors.

In the third year of his government, Agricola marched through the eastern lowlands, and forced his way even to the Pentland Frith; the wildness of the country and the inaccessibility of its mountains offering many difficulties to his progress. The northern tribes, who had previously contented themselves with harassing his line of march, now made a stand on the declivity of the Grampians, where they drew up their forces in three lines, under the command of the celebrated Galgacus. Armed, like the Highlanders of the last century, with dirks, targets, and ponderous swords, the natives repelled every attack, and maintained a desperate contest till the fall of the night. At the break of day, not one of them was to be seen; they had burnt their huts, and withdrawn to the mountains. Agricola, learning by the experience of his predecessors, the impossibility of drawing supplies from the southern provinces, was accompanied on this expedition by a fleet, which, sailing along the coast, supplied the army with provisions and stores, without the danger of their being intercepted by the enemy. When the land forces found it necessary to retrace their steps, after the battle of the Grampians, the fleet continued its course northwards, and, returning by the Land's End, first ascertained, by actual observation, that Britain was an island.

The government of Agricola may justly be considered the most important period in the Roman occupation of Britain, as the arts of civilisation were then first introduced into the island. The use of the Roman toga began to supersede that of the British mantle; monuments of Roman magnificence filled the country; the arts were cultivated; eloquence expanded its powers in the polite language of Rome; and the ruins of the temples, the theatres, and the baths of that era, excite at the present time our wonder and admiration.

On the recal of this popular governor, the conquests in the north were speedily lost, and the Emperor Hadrian, who endeavoured to retrieve the Roman name, contented himself with erecting a line of forts, still known as Hadrian's Wall, from the Solway Frith to the German Ocean. In A.D. 198, during the reign of the Emperor Antoninus Pius, Lollius Urbicus, when governor of Britain, advanced the boundary of the empire as far as the Friths of Forth and Clyde, which he connected by means of an entrenchment, surmounted by quadrangular forts. The Caledonians, however, continued their incursions, reckless of the storm that was gathering around them. Severus was now emperor; and, after the defeat of his two rivals—Niger, a Roman general, and Albinus, the governor of Britain—he avowed his determination to tame the unruly spirit of the unconquered Caledonians. The task was not so easy as he had anticipated. He contrived to reach the Frith of Cromarty, and there deigned to receive the submission which he had hitherto rejected. This nominal obedience was, however, a poor compensation for the loss of 50,000 of his troops, who perished during the campaign. To render, if possible, the southern provinces more secure from the incursions of the northern tribes, Severus, before returning to the south, re-constructed of stone the rampart, formerly raised by Hadrian; but the Caledonians soon resumed the offensive, and, while preparing for a second expedition, the emperor died at York, and his son, Caracalla, hastened to Rome to secure the imperial power.

The wall of Agricola, above alluded to, was no more than a long bank or mound of earth, with a ditch, on the borders of which were erected at unequal distances, a range of forts or castles. This work very nearly extended across the island, beginning three miles and a half east of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and terminating twelve miles west of Carlisle. After existing about thirty-seven years, it was repaired about the year 121, by Hadrian, who added works of his own to strengthen it. He caused an additional and much larger ditch to be made, and raised a higher rampart of earth, making his new works run in nearly parallel lines with the old. Ninety years afterwards, Severus constructed a stone wall, twelve feet in height, and eight feet in thickness, to which were added, at unequal distances, a number of stations or towns, eighty-one castles, and three hundred and thirty castelets or turrets. At the northern side of the wall was dug a ditch about thirty-six feet wide, and from twelve to fifteen feet deep. The works of Severus are situated north of those of Agricola and Hadrian, with which they run nearly parallel, and are never far distant, but may be said always to keep them in view. The greatest distance between them is less than a mile, the nearest distance about twenty yards,—the mean distance about forty or fifty yards. Exclusive of the wall, its ditches, stations, castles, and towers, the same emperor constructed a variety of roads, twenty-four feet wide and eighteen inches high in the centre, which led from turret to turret, from one castle to another; and still larger and more distant roads from the wall, which led from one station or town to another, besides the grand military way, now the main road between Newcastle and Carlisle, which covered all the works, and no doubt was first formed by Agricola, improved by Hadrian, and after lying neglected for about 1500 years, was made complete after the rebellion in 1745.

As long as the Roman power lasted this barrier was constantly garrisoned by four squadrons and fourteen cohorts, comprising an army of 10,000 men, quartered in eighteen stations along the line of wall. The stations were so near each other that, if a fire was lighted on any one of the bulwarks, it was seen at the next, and so repeated from bulwark to bulwark, all along the line, in a very short time. By the historian of Severus, this stupendous erection is pronounced the principal glory of his reign, and by the traveller of the present day its ruins are viewed with feelings of astonishment and delight. The ancient and modern names of the places through which this celebrated wall passed, and where its castles and towers were situated, stand in the following order in the Notitia Imperii.

For about seventy years after the death of Severus, we have no record of the state of Britain, and from this time to the departure of the Romans we know but little of its history. In the year 288 it was severed from the empire by Carausius, an experienced naval commander, who had been honoured by the emperor with the title of "Count of the Saxon Shore," and entrusted with a powerful fleet in the British Channel, to repress the depredations of the Scandinavian freebooters, who already infested the northern seas. But the ambition of Carausius was stronger than his gratitude, and, taking advantage of a favourable opportunity, he threw off his allegiance to Rome, and during his whole life maintained the integrity of his dominions inviolate; but, under his successor Allectus, Britain was again united to the empire.

The Roman power was now fast declining, and the removal of the imperial court to Constantinople, perhaps more than any other circumstance, hastened its final overthrow. The distant provinces were neglected or left to their own resources, and the Roman legions set up several competitors for the purple in the different provinces. In Britain, Maximus, a soldier of fortune, was chosen by the legionaries, and led his forces to the continent against the emperor Theodosius, leaving the insular province entirely unprotected. The Britons, through long habit, and the loss of their national independence, had become accustomed to indolence and ease, and possessed neither arms nor courage to resist the fierce attacks of the northern tribes, who, rushing like a torrent over the Roman frontier, devastated the whole country, and plundered the flourishing city of London. Although it was the custom of the Romans to train the youth of the conquered provinces to arms, the countries themselves derived little security from this practice; for as soon as the new levies were accustomed to military discipline, they were drafted into the Roman legions, and sent off to serve in some distant part of the empire, lest, taking advantage of a favourable opportunity, they should assert the national independence, and throw off the Roman yoke. It was thus that the emperors, amidst the universal degeneracy which prevailed so long, warded off the dismemberment of the empire, and secured the fidelity of the troops, while they accustomed the conquered nations to look to Rome for their guards.

On the descent of the Germanic nations into the empire, the Britons again regained their independence. Honorius had written to the "British cities to provide for their own defence;" but, whatever his meaning, they were unable to secure the liberty of their country. A variety of petty governments rose and fell; British customs and Roman institutions divided the country into hostile factions; city was arrayed against city, chief against chief, till the torch of the Picts and Scots consumed the substance of all. Many of the fortified towns were dismantled, the temples and villas deserted, and the island was fast returning to that state of barbarism from which it had been raised by the arts and sciences of Rome, when a new enemy appeared upon the coasts. Previously, the Britons had only to contend against the fierce tribes of the north, but now every east wind brought fleets of hardy warriors from the shores of Germany. Even in the Roman times the Saxons and Angles from the north of Germany and the mouth of the Elbe had made their appearance on these coasts, but they had always been successfully resisted, and Carausius had swept the northern seas of their piratical fleets.

Though suffering from this accumulation of miseries, the natives were engaged in theological disputes. Pelagius, a Briton, and Celestine, a native of Ireland, had propounded several new opinions respecting the nature of original sin and divine grace. At the command of Pope Celestine, Germanus, bishop of Auxerre, visited this island, and condemned the new opinions. During one of these visits, a body of Picts and Scots began to ravage the country. Germanus, who had been a soldier in his youth, put himself at the head of the Britons, and led them to a defile, where they awaited in ambush the approach of the invaders. On a sudden, by his command, they raised a general shout of Hallelujah; the cry was reverberated from the surrounding hills; the enemy fled in amazement, and numbers perished in an adjoining river. But this Hallelujah victory, as it was called, was far from being sufficient to arrest the progress of the invaders, and at length the British king, Vortigern, took his memorable step, and called in the Saxons to his assistance. A Saxon squadron of three chiules, or long ships, was cruising in the channel, in quest of adventures, and its two commanders, the brothers Hengist and Horsa, eagerly accepted the invitation of the British prince, to aid in fighting his battles, and to depend for their reward upon his gratitude. Vortigern appointed his ready guests to dwell in the east part of the country, and gave them the Isle of Thanet for their residence, an insulated and secure tract to those who, like the Saxons, had the command of the sea; for the narrow, and, at times almost invisible rill which now divides Thanet from the mainland, was then a channel of the sea, nearly a mile in width. It was in the year 449 that the Saxon auxiliaries landed, and from that date begins the history of the Saxons in Britain.

Before, however, proceeding to the Saxon conquest, let us take a brief retrospective view of the influence of the Roman civilisation. On the arrival of the Romans in this country the physical aspect of Britain was very different from what it is now: the uplands were covered with furze or shaded by dense forests, while the banks of the rivers and the fertile plains were overspread with marshes. The first advance to civilisation was the establishment of a grand military way, which, traversing the island from north to south and from east to west, kept up a constant communication between the military stations or fortified towns, which were generally distinguished by the name of Castra. This term, retained in the names of many modern towns, as Chester, Winchester, Cirencester, &c., indicate in most instances the site of a Roman fortress. Amongst the gigantic undertakings for which the Romans were celebrated, their military ways deserve especial mention; they were cut through mountains, hill, and vale, and paved with huge stones which resisted the action of the atmosphere, and for many ages formed the only means of communication between different parts of the country. They were indeed great road-makers, these kings of the world; and they went about their work in a scientific style, like the iron road-makers of our own age, with labouring pioneers,

A multitude with spades and axes armed,
To lay hills plain, fell woods, or valleys fill,
Or where plain was raise hill, or overlay
With bridges rivers proud, as with a yoke.

PARADISE REGAINED.

Their work has lasted. Though we cannot trace their "highways from sea to sea" through their whole lines with perfect distinctness, yet enough can be traced to show the genius of the great civilisers. All the old writers inform us that there were four chief ways in England; modern researches have traced other trunk roads than these four of the Watling-street, the Erming-street, the Ikenild-street, and the Fosse-way. "What the great lines of railway have accomplished," says a popular writer, "according to the wants of our age, within the last thirty years, the old roads accomplished sixteen hundred years ago. They made this island, to a certain extent, one whole. We have a circuitous railway from Dover to London; the Romans had their direct road, the Watling-street, through Rochester. The Great Western Railway follows its sinuous course from London to Bath; the Romans had a direct road through Staines, Silchester, and Marlborough, to their great city of medicinal waters. If the descriptions of the Fosse-way may be relied upon, it followed very closely the present track of the Great Western from Totness to Bristol; and connected the midland counties, as far as Lincoln, with the western coasts, as completely as the net-work of railways does at this day. The Ikenild-street is held to have connected the eastern coast with the interior, as the Eastern Counties Railway now effects the same object. The Erming-street is affirmed to have run from St. David's to Southampton, a line which railways have yet to thread. Lastly, the Watling-street, after it had reached London from Dover, is understood to have passed towards the North to St. Alban's, and thence, in a direct line very little verging from that which we call the Great North Road, to York and Chester-le-street; accomplishing the connection between the capital more directly than the existing railways, but going straight to its point like a projected great line. For purposes of internal communication 'from sea to sea' the direction of the Roman roads was, there can be little dispute, sufficiently complete."

Buildings of stone and brick were unknown to the Britons; as soon, however, as the Romans obtained possession of the island, they erected magnificent temples and villas, and founded the towns of London, York, Rochester, Bath, and St. Alban's, which soon became the seats of wealth and commerce. The whole of the conquered territory was divided into five or six districts. The country south of the Thames was called Britannia Prima; that between the Severn and the Dee on one side, and the Irish sea on the other, was called Britannia Secunda; the middle of the island, from the Thames to the Humber and Mersey, was called Flavia Cæsariensis; northward of this, and extending to the Tyne and Solway Frith, was called Maxima Cæsariensis; from thence to the Friths of Forth and Clyde, was Valentia; and still more to the north there was, perhaps, a sixth district, known as Vespasiana. Throughout these provinces were scattered a great number of inhabited towns and military forts, the names of which are preserved in the itineraries of Richard of Cirencester and Antoninus. The towns were divided into four classes:—Coloniæ; towns inhabited by veterans, and generally built in situations that combined the possession of a fertile district with that of a strong military post. Each colony was a miniature representation of Rome; and of the lands in its neighbourhood, one third at least was divided amongst the veterans, generally on condition, that their sons, when of age, should render military service. There were nine Coloniæ in Britain, two of a civil, seven of a military description. They were Richborough, London, Colchester, Bath, Gloucester, Caerleon, Chester, Lincoln, and Chesterford, near Cambridge. 2. Municipal towns; their inhabitants were exempt from the operation of the Imperial statutes, enjoyed the rights of Roman citizens, made their own laws, and chose their own magistrates;—privileges so valuable were reserved for the reward of extraordinary merit—and Britain could boast of only two municipalities, Verulam and York. 3. The "Jus Latii," so called from having been first granted to certain states of Latium. It conferred on ten of the British towns the right of electing their own magistrates, who, at the expiration of their year of office, could claim the privilege of Roman citizens. Their other rights depended on the terms of their charter. The British towns thus privileged were Inverness, Perth, Dumbarton, Carlisle, Catterick, Blackrode, Cirencester, Salisbury, Caister in Lincolnshire, and Slack in Longwood. 4. The remaining towns were tributary, and governed by Roman officers, who received their appointment from the præfect. When Caracalla granted to all provincials the privileges of Roman citizens, many of these distinctions became entirely obsolete.

The exports of Britain were rich and numerous, the trade being carried on by the Roman merchants, as the Britons were not expert in ship-building or in maritime enterprise. When the lands were cleared, corn became the chief article of export; and so abundant were the harvests, that Britain was designated the northern granary. British cattle, horses, and dogs were highly esteemed on the continent; and tin, lead, iron, and the precious metals, as well as pearls and oysters, were offered in the Roman markets in exchange for the manufactures of Italy and the luxuries of the east.

Christianity had early found its way into the Roman legions, and it was perhaps through them that it first became known in this island. Its propagation the British traditions ascribe to the instrumentality of Lucius, otherwise known as "Lever Maur," or the "Great Light," who, according to Bede and the Saxon chronicle, wrote to Pope Eleutherius, entreating him to send missionaries to Britain, that he and his people might be instructed in the Christian faith. From that period, Christianity made gradual and uninterrupted progress till the death of Allectus. When the edicts of Diocletian were published (A.D. 309), Constantius, who was at that time in Britain, summoned all the Christians of his household, and bade them sacrifice if they wished to preserve his favour. Those who refused he loaded with fresh honours, those who prepared to obey he drove from his presence, telling them they could not be faithful to man when they were traitors to God. The moderation of Constantius was not always imitated by the inferior magistrates; the churches were destroyed, and those that had not escaped to the woods and mountains were tortured and put to death. Gildas has preserved the names of Julius and Aaron, citizens of Caerleon-upon-Usk, and the memory of Alban, the proto-martyr of Britain, was long celebrated both in his own country and among the neighbouring nations.

The influence of the Roman occupation of Britain on the civilisation of these islands was exceedingly transitory; many material monuments still remained, but life and energy had fled; and on the withdrawal of the imperial legions, it has been justly observed, the very remembrance of the Roman name vanished like a dream. One circumstance, however, has been overlooked by historians, which bears on the after history of the country: it was the industry and skill of the Romans, which first converted the land from a wild or wooded waste to a richly cultivated country. The Roman conquest was for Britain what the English settlements in New Zealand and Canada are for those parts of the world; whatever nation may in future possess them the traces of English civilisation will remain.

In the Saxon conquest of these islands we have no reason to infer that the Roman inhabitants of London, Colchester, and other municipal towns were in the least affected, except so far as they took part with the native Britons; the Saxons interfered but little with the towns, and devoted themselves to agriculture and arms. The various cities submitted without much resistance, and in all probability the remains of the Roman population incorporated themselves with the conquerors. This supposition is strengthened by the early introduction of Latin words into the Saxon tongue, while comparatively few traces of a British element exist. "Had the Saxon conquest never taken place," says Dr. Latham, "the language of England would not have been Gaelic, but Latin; had the Norman conquest never taken place, it would not have materially differed from what it is at present."

THE ANGLO SAXONS.

Having once turned their arms against the Britons, the Saxons dreamed only of conquest. They retained possession of the Isle of Thanet, whence they issued forth in search of greater acquisitions; and, joined by numbers of their countrymen, they revelled for years in all the savage license of barbarian war. Such was the commencement of a contest which was waged without intermission for a hundred and fifty years, and which never entirely ceased till the conquering Saxon yielded in his turn to the Dane and Norman. The Saxon race, destined as it was to give laws to half the globe, had no larger territory in the second century of the Christian era, than the scanty tract of woods and marshes that lay between the Ems and the Elbe. Two hundred years later, however, the term Saxon was the common appellation of all the tribes from the Rhine to the Baltic, and the north of Jutland. Of these tribes the principal were the Saxons Proper, the Angles, and the Jutes; they were all of Teutonic race and kindred blood. These tribes, like the other German nations, were distinguished by their love of liberty, their voluntary obedience to their chiefs, and their respect for the female sex, which national characteristics, under a more advanced and artificial state of society, produced the institutions of chivalry.

The supreme government was in the hands of a council, composed it seems of all, or of most of the influential freemen. The cultivation of the land was generally left to the women and slaves; for nothing was deemed worthy of a freeman but idleness and rapine. Like the rest of the Germanic tribes, the Saxons enjoyed an almost uncontrolled personal freedom; even the murderer, had he but a strong arm and a daring mind, could laugh at the impotence of human justice, and guilt was only punished by revenge. The endless feuds that resulted must have been a fearful check upon the enjoyments of liberty. They were never obliged to engage in war, except to repel invasion; but when not embroiled in domestic strife, troops of men associated under some renowned leader, and both by sea and land made destructive inroads upon the Roman provinces. It was chiefly on the coasts of the German Ocean and the English Channel, that these marauders loved to display their daring. Their vessels at first were little better than the British coracles; but at the beginning of the fifth century they were more strongly built, and each was sufficiently large for a band of fifty or a hundred warriors.

In three such chiules or ships, arrived the little band of Saxons, or rather Jutes, that lent its aid against the Picts and Scots, and that was destined to effect so great a change in the fortunes of Britain. After their quarrel with the natives, fresh bands continued to arrive, until, despite the valour of Ambrosius, the British leader, the whole of Kent was won. As early as the year 477, a Saxon chieftain named Ælla landed with three sons and a chosen band, upon the isle of Selsey; and, after a struggle of two years, established the kingdom of Sussex, or South Saxons. A few years later, Cerdic conducted five ships to the coast of Hampshire, and despite of numerous reinforcements, was at length totally routed by Natanleod, the chief of that part of the country. Unfortunately for the Britons, Natanleod was attacked in the heat of the pursuit by a fresh band of Saxons, and was left dead upon the field with five thousand of his warriors. Undaunted at so heavy a loss, the Britons maintained for eleven years an incessant warfare; but their power was completely broken at the battle of Charford-on-Avon; and the territory from which they had been driven became the kingdom of Wessex, or the West Saxons. The third and last kingdom erected by the Saxons Proper, was that of Essex, or the East Saxons. It was founded by Erconwald, and consisted of the present counties of Essex, Middlesex, and the south of Hertfordshire. Except this kingdom and the British territory on the west, the whole country, from the Thames to the Frith of Forth, was colonised by the Angles, who had entirely abandoned their native bogs, and had swarmed in a mass upon the bewildered Britons. Uffa led the first division, and founded the kingdom of East Anglia, containing the present counties of Norfolk and Suffolk. In forty chieules, Ida led the second division of the Angles to the north of the Tees, and founded the kingdom of Bernicia, extending from the Tees to the Forth. Seomel soon afterwards founded the kingdom of Deira, between the Humber and the Tees. Under Creoda a party of the Angles of Deira crossed the Humber, and, penetrating to the very centre of the island, founded the kingdom of Mercia. Thus were the Britons not only a second time conquered, but deprived for ever of the most fertile and extensive portions of the island. The length of the contest, and the alternation of victory and defeat, proved that the Britons were no longer a trembling, spiritless race. Of all the provincials of the Roman empire, only they and the Armoricans had dared to encounter the barbarians. Their want of success must be attributed to their want of unity; for at the very time that the Saxons were conquering the south of the island, 12,000 Cornish Britons sailed to the Loire to render aid against the Visigoths.

Among the Anglo-Saxons all freemen were included in one of two classes, that of eorl, or that of ceorl, the men of noble and ignoble descent. The former were said to be ethel-born, and among them the first place was held by the cyning, or king, who was the lord of the principal chieftains, and through them of their respective vassals. He was the chief commander by land and sea, and the supreme judge on all cases of appeal from every court of judicature. His peace or protection secured the man to whom it was granted from the pursuit of his enemies. Breaches of this peace subjected the offender to heavy fines; while, if the infraction were of a grievous nature, his life and property were at the disposal of the monarch.

Next in dignity to the royal family were the ealdormen or earls, who governed in the king's name districts which were denominated shires. It was the duty of the ealdorman, as the representative of the monarch, to lead the men of his shire to battle, to preside with the bishop in the courts of the county, and to enforce the execution of justice. The thanes were a numerous and distinguished order of men, divided into several classes of different rank, and with different privileges. There were greater and lesser thanes, and we read of the thanes of the king, and of those of the ealdormen and prelates. The heriot of the greater was four times that of the lesser thanes; and while the former acknowledged no superior lord but the king, the latter owed suit and service to the court of his immediate lord. The possessor of five "family lands" or hides, and, from the time of Athelstan, any merchant that had made three voyages with his own ship and cargo, were alike entitled to rank among the thanes. It seems, however, that the latter kind of thaneship was of inferior dignity, and that a family that had acquired this distinction was not reckoned among the ethel-born until the third generation.

The sithcundmen were men of the Sith, or military profession, and, on account probably of holding land, many, if not all of these, became known as lesser thanes. The person of whom such lands were held was called the lord. If a sithcundman held lands of no one else, and therefore had no such lord, he was still obliged to choose one, and to render him some acknowledgment for his protection. This obligation resulted from the maxim, that every person who had no territorial jurisdiction was bound to have an acknowledged superior, and that every superior was, in return, to be responsible for his "man." The form required to make this connection legal, was brief but significant. The man placed his hands between those of his lord, and exclaimed, "By the Lord, I promise to be faithful and true, to love all that thou lovest, and to shun all that thou shunnest, conformably with the laws of God and man, and never, in will or weald, in word or work, to do that which thou loathest, provided thou hold me as I mean to serve, and fulfil the conditions to which we agreed." If the lord's protection was thus necessary during the life of the man, it was still more so after his death, in order that his family might retain the lands which he himself had held. Hence, when making his will, the most powerful nobleman was always anxious to obtain the confirmation of his superior, and to make provision for the payment of what was termed in the Saxon laws the heriot, in the Norman the relief. This payment is recorded in the laws of king Edgar as a custom of great antiquity. It was exacted on many occasions, but particularly on the vassal's death. If, however, the latter died fighting for his lord, no heriot was required. By the laws it was provided that the heriot should be paid within twelve months from the death of the last possessor, and was apportioned to the rank he bore in the state. That of the ealdorman was four horses saddled, four unsaddled, four helmets, four coats of mail, eight spears, eight shields, four swords, and one hundred mancuses of gold. The heriot of a royal thane was the gift of his horse and arms, and the offer of his hawks and hounds.

The foregoing were the ethel-born: the unethel, the tradesmen, mechanics, husbandmen, and labourers, were comprehended under the general designation of ceorls. These were divided into two classes—the socmen or free ceorls, who held lands by conventional services, or chose their own lords, or possessed the right of disposing of their real estates by sale, or will, or donation. The others were attached to the soil, as part and parcel of the manor, transferable with it from one proprietor to another, bound to give their personal labour in return for the land which they cultivated for their own use, and liable to be punished as runaways if they withdrew from the manorial jurisdiction under which they were born. They had indeed certain rights recognised by the law, and could not, in many places, be dispossessed as long as they performed their customary services; nor could higher rents, or a greater proportion of labour be exacted from them than what was accustomably due.

All the above classes were in the ranks of freemen. There was, however, amongst the Saxons a class of absolute slaves, called Theowes, consisting of persons who had forfeited their freedom according to the law. If any one could not discharge the penalty or "wite" imposed on an offence of which he had been convicted, he became what was called a "white theowe," and liable to the utter loss of his rights as a member of the free community. His relations might redeem him within twelve months; but if they refused this office of kindness, he became a slave, and his degradation was inherited by his children. Traffic in slaves prevailed during the whole of the Anglo-Saxon period. These unhappy persons were sold like cattle in the market, and the price of a slave was usually estimated at four times the price of an ox. No impediments were offered to the importation of foreign slaves, but the exportation of native slaves was forbidden under the severest penalties; yet hatred and the love of gain had taught the natives to bid defiance to the most stringent prohibitions. Like the savages of Africa, they are said to have carried off, not only their own countrymen, but even their friends and relatives, whom they sold as slaves in the ports of the continent.

In what way the land that had been wrested from the Britons was appropriated by the conquerors, what portion was reserved for the state, and what for individuals, are questions that can be answered only by conjecture—even the nature of the most common tenures, those of “Bocland,” and “Folclaud,” and “Lænland,” has long tortured the ingenuity of the learned.

For the sake of national security all lands were subjected to a triple burden, viz.: the construction of bridges, the reparation of fortresses, and military service, in default of which, fines, or sometimes forfeiture, seems to have been inflicted. Both the grant and sale of land were unencumbered with the modern form of parchments, taxes, and lawyer's fees. It was accomplished by the simple delivery of a turf or spear, or some other emblem, in the presence of one of the customary public meetings. The following charter will give some idea of the almost Lacedæmonian brevity of the Anglo-Saxon deeds of gift: “I, king Athelstan giffys here to Paulan, Oddam, and Roddam, all gude and all fair as ever thei myn war, and thairto witness Mauld my wyf.” How different from the strictness of construction which in modern times renders almost every word in an instrument a snare for the unwary.

Among a people but lately emerged from barbarism, the administration of justice is always rude and simple, and the proceedings before the Anglo-Saxon tribunals would not have suited a more advanced state of civilisation. They were ill calculated to elicit truth, or to produce conviction; and in many instances which have been handed down to us, our more correct or more artificial notions will be shocked by the credulity or the precipitancy of the judges. The subject, however, is curious and interesting. These ancient courts still exist under different names, and the intelligent observer may discover in their proceedings the origin of several institutions which now mark the administration of justice in the English tribunals.

The lowest and most limited jurisdiction known among the Anglo-Saxons was that of “Sac” and “Soc.” It conferred the right of holding trials, and imposing fines within a certain district, and, with a few variations, was perpetuated in the manorial courts of the Norman dynasty. The power and right of these courts greatly varied, some took cognizance of all, some of a few offences; some of all persons, and others of none but their own tenants. From the custom of holding these courts in the hall of the lord, they were usually termed hall-motes. Superior to these was the court of the hundred, which assembled every month, and was composed of the ealdorman or his reeve, and of the clergymen and freeholders of each township within the hundred. Once in the year an extraordinary meeting was convened, when every male above the age of twelve years was obliged to attend. At these meetings the state of the guilds or tythings (or associations of ten families) was ascertained, and no man was permitted to remain at large who could not find bail for his peaceable behaviour. In these courts offenders were tried, and civil causes decided. When important payments, contracts, or exchanges, were to be made, it was done in the presence of the hundred, in order that the whole neighbourhood might bear witness to the fact. For, as reading and writing were but little known, men were obliged to depend upon the honesty of numerous witnesses. In the walled towns burgh-motes were held, which corresponded with the motes of the hundred, or meetings of the townships. Sometimes, when interests of great importance were at stake, or the parties belonged to different districts, and the authority of a single hundred was thought insufficient, the ealdorman summoned the neighbouring hundreds, or a third of the county; the meeting in the former case being termed the court of the "Lathe," and the latter that of the "Trything," or, as it was afterwards called, the Riding.

The shire-mote, or court of the county, was of still higher dignity and more extensive jurisdiction. It assembled twice in the year, in May and October, under the presidency of the bishop and ealdorman, who exercised equal authority, having for their assessors the sheriff and the most noble of the royal thanes. In this court ecclesiastical causes were first attended to, the rights of the crown were next enforced, then the laws and decisions of the Witenagemote were announced, and private grievances were examined and redressed. Kemble gives a remarkable instance of the simplicity with which even the most important affairs were transacted in these courts. A young man made his appearance before a shire-mote, and claimed some lands, which were possessed by his mother. A deputation was at once despatched from the court to receive her answer; her reply was, "There sitteth Leoflæd, my kinswoman, unto whom I grant both my land and my gold, both my gown and my dress, and all I have after my own day." This act, by which she disinherited her son, was communicated to the court, and judgment was immediately pronounced in favor of Leoflæd, and a record was made to testify the fact. Thus at once was the suit decided, the son disinherited, and the will in favour of Leoflæd recognised.

From these local courts, the hall-mote, the hundred-mote, and the shire-mote, appeals were allowed to the superior authority of the monarch, who by his office was the supreme magistrate in the state; but he had other duties to perform, and it was forbidden to bring any cause before him till it had been previously submitted to the decision of the inferior judges. Wherever the king was present, a court might be speedily assembled. To the thanes and clergymen who attended on his person, he added the prelates and nobility of the neighbourhood, and with their assistance either pacified the parties or pronounced a definite judgment. But these occasional courts were eclipsed by the superior splendour and dignity of the Witenagemote, or assembly of sages; termed also the "mickle" or great synod. This council was composed at first of all the landed proprietors, and such it probably continued during the greater part of the Heptarchy. In course of time, when Wessex had gained the supremacy, and its Witenagemote became the great council of all England, the number of its members was gradually reduced; owing to distance, expense of travelling, and the troubles of the times, they were seldom as many as thirty, never sixty. The "folc," whose presence is often mentioned, are supposed by Palgrave to have been the representatives of towns, and the borougholders of the tythings; but this supposition is deemed gratuitous, both by Lingard and Hallam. The Witenagemote was convened at the festivals of Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide, and occasionally at other times, as difficult circumstances or sudden exigencies might require.

At these assemblies the state of the nation was examined, laws were enacted, appeals heard, and, on the vacancy of the crown, a new sovereign was elected.

The Saxons, bringing with them their native customs, punished injuries of every kind by certain settled fines or penalties, which differed in amount according to the circumstances attending the wrong, but were not left to be imposed at the discretion of the judge. So far did the notion of compensation run through the whole criminal law of the Saxons, that every man's life had its value according to his rank, called a "were." This, by a law of King Athelstan, was two hundred shillings for a ceorl, for a sithcundman six hundred, and for a royal thane twelve hundred. The were of an ealdorman was twice, that of an etheling three times, and that of a king six times that of a thane. Although pecuniary compensation was thus extensively used, other punishments were occasionally imposed. Thus the frequent conviction of theft was punished by the loss of a hand or foot, while banishment or slavery was also sometimes inflicted. It was also enacted that house-breaking, arson, open robbery, manifest homicide, and treason against one's lord, should be inexpiable crimes, that is, not redeemable by pecuniary compensation, or by suffering mutilation, or the like.

With respect to the different sorts of crimes recognised by the Saxon laws, it seems that a person present at the death of any one was considered a participator in the crime; also the slayer of a thief, unless he forthwith purged himself by oath before the relations of the deceased, stating all the circumstances, was deemed guilty, and had to pay a fine. It does not appear that there was any distinction made in respect of degrees of homicide, except in one instance, which deserves particular notice, viz., where the fine called murdrum was to be paid. It is said that Canute, when about to leave the kingdom, being afraid that the English might take advantage of his absence to destroy his Danish subjects, passed a law,—that when any person happened to be killed, and the slayer escaped, the person killed should, unless his friends or relations proved him to be an Englishman, be considered as a Dane, and that the vill in which the crime was committed should pay a fine of forty marks for his death, and if such fine could not be raised in the vill, then the hundred should be compelled to pay it. This provision was made in order to engage every one by the bond of interest in the prevention of secret homicides, and upon this sort of policy it was that presentments of Englishry, as they were afterwards called, were founded.

False swearing was at first only punished by a fine amounting to one hundred and twenty shillings, but afterwards perjurers were considered as no longer worthy of credit, and therefore were obliged to purge themselves, not as they would otherwise have done, on oath, but by the ordeal, and sometimes they were excommunicated. Breaches of the peace were severely punished, as leading generally to bloodshed and death, and the people being also much addicted to quarrelling and broils. If any one fought in the king's palace, his life was forfeited to the king, unless he redeemed it with a fine; and particular penalties were inflicted on those who fought in the presence of the bishop or ealdorman, or in the city or town where these happened to be holding their court.

After the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, every consecrated church had the privilege of sanctuary, or of affording legal shelter to fugitives. At a time when sentiments of paganism still clung to the souls of men, when revenge was esteemed a sacred duty, and every man was armed and ready for battle, this regulation was not the less salutary from its being sometimes abused; it gave time for reason and religion to exert their influence, and often prevented the effusion of blood. For the traitor or the blasphemer there was no sanctuary, and he might at once be snatched from the altar. Resort was commonly had to this protection in order to avoid the instant resentment of the aggrieved party, and until the legal compensation was paid. Thus, the law of Ina declares, that the fugitive shall be protected as to his life, and make compensation as justice demands.

Having thus considered crimes and punishments, we will proceed to speak of the modes of trial, and the sorts of proof, which formed very remarkable parts of the Anglo-Saxon system of jurisprudence, and were as follows:—The prosecutor made his charge, which, it seems, was of itself sufficient to put the person accused upon his defence. The answer or defence to such charge varied according to the circumstances of the case. If it was a matter not of great notoriety, and admitting of doubt, the party purged himself, as it was termed, by the oaths of himself and of certain persons vouching for his credit, and declaring their belief of his speaking the truth, who were thence called compurgators. If these compurgators all agreed in a declaration in favour of the accused, this was held to be a complete acquittal. But if the party had been before accused of larceny or perjury, or had been rendered infamous in any other way, and was not thought himself worthy of credit, he was then obliged to prove his innocence by the ordeal.

Among the German nations the ordeal was the common means of solving a difficulty, and when it was resorted to pledges were given, and the time was fixed by the court. As the decision was now left to God, three days were spent by the accused in fasting and prayer. On the third he went to mass, and was adjured by the priest not to go to the ordeal if he were conscious of guilt; he was then communicated with these words—"May this body and blood of Christ be to thee a proof of innocence this day;" after which he again swore that he was guiltless of the crime of which he had been accused. The ordeals which were most practised were those of hot water and fire. In that of water, a fire was kindled beneath a cauldron, at the west end of the church. In a line on one side of the fire, stood twelve friends of the accused; and on the opposite side, twelve friends of the accuser,—all strangers being excluded. When it was agreed by all that the water boiled, the accused plunged in his arm, and brought up a stone which had been placed at a certain depth. The priest immediately wrapped a clean linen cloth around the part which was scalded, fixed on it the seal of the church, and opened it again on the third day. If the arm was perfectly healed, the accused was pronounced innocent; if not, he suffered the punishment of the offence with which he had been charged. In the ordeal by fire, the same precautions were employed in respect of the number and position of the attendants. Near the fire a space was measured equal to nine of the prisoner's feet, and divided by lines into three equal parts. By the first stood a small stone pillar. At the beginning of the mass a bar of iron, of the weight of one or three pounds, was laid on the fire; at the last prayers of the service it was taken off, and placed on the pillar. The prisoner immediately grasped it in his hand, made three steps on the lines marked on the floor, and then threw it down. His guilt or innocence was decided as in the former case.

Scarcely had the Anglo-Saxons settled in their adopted country, before dissensions broke out, and a long series of mutual quarrels commenced. Each petty kingdom strove for the mastery, and each monarch aimed at the paramount authority in the island. The principal object of contention was the title of Bretwalda, the wielder or sovereign of Britain. Whether this title was obtained by the influence of power, or given by the spontaneous suffrage of the other kings, is doubtful; nor do we know whether any duties or prerogatives were attached to this dignity. By Venerable Bede the title is given to seven of the Saxon princes, whose reigns, as might be expected, include the most important events in the early history of the Saxon nations.

ÆLLA, BRETWALDA I.—This monarch was the founder of the kingdom of Wessex, the smallest and the least powerful of the Anglo-Saxon states. By what means he contrived to become supreme lord of Britain, is as little known as are the events of his reign; and as he ruled at a time when the Britons were still masters of the greater part of the country, it is conjectured that the title of Bretwalda was conceded to him from some pre-eminence which he enjoyed in his native country, or for some exploit of which the memory has perished.

CEAWLIN, BRETWALDA II.—Ceawlin is mentioned in the ancient chronicles as a man of singular valour; the astonishment of the Angles, the detestation of the Britons, and eventually the destruction of both. He was king of Wessex, and during his government Ethelbert of Kent, aspiring to the supreme authority, led an army to Wimbledon, and had the temerity to confront the West Saxon. But his ambition was signally chastised; his two caldormen, Oslac and Cnebba, fell in the conflict, and he himself escaped with difficulty from the pursuit of Ceawlin. The Bretwalda, content with the humiliation of the Kentish monarch, turned his arms against the Britons, whom he defeated at the battle of Bedford, and added to his dominions the towns of Leighton, Ailesbury, Bensington, and Eynsham. Six years afterwards (A.D. 577) he gained the victory of Derham, defeating the British kings Conmail, Conðidan, and Farinmail, and acquiring the important cities of Gloucester, Cirencester, and Bath. On the demise of Cissa, the son of Ælla, Ceawlin added Sussex to his other dominions. But fortune deserted him in the midst of his power, and at Wodensburgh, in Wiltshire, he was overthrown and deposed by his own subjects. He survived his deposition but two years, and died in 593, when he was succeeded by his nephew Cerdic. Whether Ethelbert of Kent was present at the battle of Wodensburgh, we are not informed; but it is certain that the defeat of Ceawlin, and the acquisition of the dignity of Bretwalda by the ruler of Kent, were simultaneous events.

ETHELBERT, BRETWALDA III.—If the early part of the reign of Ethelbert was clouded by defeat, the remainder was glorious and prosperous; and at the death of Ceawlin, his authority was acknowledged by all the princes south of the Humber. While in the plenitude of his power, intelligence was one day brought him, that forty strangers in foreign garb had landed on the Isle of Thanet, and requested an audience. They spoke none of the German dialects, but they had brought some of the Frankish clergy as their interpreters, and at once disclosed the object of their mission. They had come, they said, from Rome, with good tidings to those that would obey them,—nothing less than joy and dominion that would never pass away. Ethelbert heard them patiently, ordered them to abide in the adjacent isle till he should decide what course to adopt, and commanded that everything necessary for their support should be abundantly provided. After a few days, he expressed his willingness to hear them, and having taken his seat in the open air, in order to baffle the power of magic, awaited their arrival. Bearing a silver cross and a painted representation of the Redeemer, and chanting the litanies in slow and solemn procession, the holy band drew near, and once more, but with fuller explanation, announced their important mission. "Your promises," replied the king, "are great indeed, but they are new and uncertain; I cannot then abandon for them what I and the whole race of the Angles have so long followed. As, however, you have come from so great a distance to make known to us what you believe to be true and excellent, we are willing to treat you with all kindness and consideration." He then appointed them a residence in Canterbury, and told them that they might preach without fear of molestation. They withdrew in the same order as they came, singing as they moved along, "We beseech thee, O Lord, in thy great mercy, remove thy indignation and wrath from this city, and from thy holy house, for we are sinners, Alleluia."

We cannot refrain from giving Wordsworth's fine sonnet on this inspiring theme, though the touching simplicity of the monk of Jarrow can scarcely be heightened in its effect upon the mind :—

"For ever hallowed be this morning fair;
Blest be the unconscious shore on which ye tread;
And blest the silver Cross which ye, instead
Of martial banner, in procession bear;
The Cross preceding Him who floats in air,
The pictured Saviour! By Augustine led,
They come—and onward travel without dread,
Chanting in barb'rous ears a tuneful prayer,
Sung for themselves, and those whom they would free.
Rich conquest waits them : the tempestuous sea
Of ignorance, that ran so rough and high,
And heeded not the voice of clashing swords,
Those good men humble by a few bare words,
And calm with fear of God's divinity."

The care of Ethelbert's queen had already prepared a residence for the missionaries. They were lodged in the ancient church of St. Martin, which had originally belonged to the Britons, and had lately been repaired for the use of Liudhard, a Christian prelate, who accompanied Bertha from Gaul. Curiosity led the Saxons to visit the strangers; they admired the ceremonies of their worship, compared their lives with those of the pagan priests, and learned to approve a religion which could inspire so much piety, austerity, and disinterestedness. Ethelbert, moved at length by the example and preaching of the strangers, declared himself a convert. Thousands followed his example; and as each district embraced the Christian faith, its old ruined British churches were repaired; or where these were wanting, the heathen temples were purified and consecrated.

Gregory the Great, who then was bishop of Rome, watched with joy the progress of conversion. He himself, before his elevation to the papedom, had been anxious to preach to the English. His attention had been arrested by the fair countenances of some northern youth that were exposed for sale in the Roman market. To the observation of a bystander, that they were Angles from the Island of Britain, he replied, "Non Angli sed angeli," not Angles but angels; and from that moment a strong desire for the conversion of England seized upon his heart. Prevented from going in person, by the remonstrances of the Roman people, he still thought of the noble features and benighted souls of the Angles in the market-place. The absence of his personal exertions he could easily supply by those of other missionaries, and from his high position in the church, he might direct their operations, and second their endeavours. His original intention was to purchase a number of Saxon slaves, and have them educated under his own eye, and at his own expense, and at a convenient time, raise them to the priesthood, and employ them in the conversion of their countrymen. But their progress was slow, and his zeal was ardent. After a short time he resolved to try the courage of his monks, ignorant as they were of the language and manners of the barbarians. Having selected the most learned and virtuous of the community, he explained to them his views, elevated their hopes with the prospect of eternal rewards, and confirmed their consent with his apostolic benediction. The monks, in obedience to his command, went forth on the all-important mission, under the guidance of Augustine, prior of St. Andrew's monastery. Their courage faltered on their long and toilsome journey, but Gregory's letters and exhortations urged them onwards, until at length they arrived at the Isle of Thanet; and the result, as we have seen, was the conversion of the Kentish monarch, and many of his subjects.

Ethelbert reigned fifty-six years, and before his death, published a code of laws to regulate the administration of justice. In this code we find the crimes which appeared most repugnant to the well-being of society, scrupulously enumerated; theft in its different branches, murder, sacrilege, insults offered to female chastity, and infractions of the peace of the king and the church; and to each was attached a proportionate fine, which rose in amount according to the dignity of the person against whom the offence was committed.

REDWALD, BRETWALDA IV.—Ethelbert died in 616, and the authority of Bretwalda passed to Redwald, who at that time filled the East Anglian throne. This reign is of little importance, except for its connection with Edwin and Edilfrid, the two princes of Northumbria. Edilfrid was grandson of Ida, and chief of Bernicia. He was a restless and sanguinary prince, whose valour and ferocity were dreaded by all his neighbours. At the death of Ælla, the founder of the kingdom of Deira, Edilfrid, who had married his daughter, took unceremonious possession of his dominions. Ælla had left an infant son of the name of Edwin, about three years old, who was conveyed beyond the reach of Edilfrid, and intrusted to the protection of Cadvan, the king of North Wales. The hospitality of the Briton drew on him the vengeance of the Northumbrian, and the two armies met in the vicinity of Chester. The city was taken (A.D. 618), and Bangor on the Dee, celebrated for its monastery of two thousand four hundred monks, was reduced to ashes.

After Cadvan's defeat, the fugitive prince of Deira wandered for a long time without any settled habitation; and at length came to the court of Redwald, who, pitying his misfortunes, received him into his protection. Shortly after there came messengers from Edilfrid, demanding either the surrender of Edwin or denouncing hostilities. Determined, by the advice of his queen, not to violate, through intimidation, the laws of friendship, Redwald raised an army, and resolved to assail the Northumbrian before he could collect his forces. Edilfrid was himself hastening with a small but select army to surprise the East Anglian, and was already in the neighbourhood of Retford, in Nottinghamshire, when the banners and innumerable spears that rose in endless succession upon the distant horizon warned him to prepare for a very different combat. The Northumbrian, disdaining to retreat, rushed forward and destroyed the first division of Redwald's army, but, overpowered by numbers, sank at length upon a heap of slaughtered enemies. The conquerors hastened to improve their advantage. By the men of Deira, Edwin was received with acclamations of joy, the children of Edilfrid fled into the north of the island, and the Bernicians cheerfully submitted to the good fortune of the son of Ælla. Redwald having placed his friend upon the throne, returned in triumph to his own dominions, and died in 627.

EDWIN, BRETWALDA V.—Edilfrid, by his martial genius, had raised Northumbria to an equality with the most powerful of the Saxon states, and under Edwin it assumed a marked pre-eminence, conferring the title of Bretwalda upon him and his immediate successors. History is silent with regard to the manner in which this supremacy was gained by Edwin, but Bede has preserved the account of his conversion to Christianity, which, we have no doubt, will be interesting to many of our readers. Edwin, in the ninth year of his reign, married Ethelberga, the daughter of Ethelbert, king of Kent. This princess, having been promised the free exercise of her religion, and having at heart the conversion of her husband, brought with her, as her chaplain, Paulinus, a Roman missionary, who had just received the episcopal consecration. Edwin made no objection to the practice of Christianity by Ethelberga, but he himself showed no inclination to embrace it. It was in vain that Paulinus preached, that the queen entreated, that Pope Boniface V. sent letters and presents, the king seemed immovably attached to the religion of his ancestors. That attachment was weakened by unforeseen occurrences, which prepared the way for Edwin's conversion. The kingdom of Wessex was, at that time, governed by two princes, who bore with impatience the yoke of the Northumbrian; and, unable to cope with him in the field, attempted to remove him by means of an assassin, whom they sent to Edwin in the character of an envoy. Introduced into the royal presence, the messenger drew a two-edged poisoned dagger, and aimed a desperate blow at the heart of the king. Lilla, one of the thanes, perceiving his design, threw himself between Edwin and the dagger, which reached the king through the heart of the noble thane. Every sword was instantly drawn, but the assassin defended himself with such desperate courage, that he made another victim before he was overpowered by numbers.

While Edwin lay ill of his wound, the words of Paulinus began to take effect; and, on his recovery, previous to his marching against the perfidious kings of Wessex, he declared that if he returned victorious, he would become a Christian. He triumphed, and from that moment abstained from the worship of his gods, though he still hesitated to embrace Christianity. He consulted alternately his priests and the missionary, and, revolving in his mind during his hours of solitude their opposite arguments, formed, at length, the resolution of embracing Christianity. Having made this resolve, he called an assembly of his witan, or counsellors, and required each to state his sentiments on the subject. The first who ventured to speak was Coiffi, the high-priest, who, instead of opposing, advised the adoption of the religion of the missionary. His motive, as recorded by Bede, was certainly a strange one. "None," said he "have served the gods more diligently than I have, and yet there are many who receive greater favours from you, are more preferred than I am, and are more prosperous in all their undertakings. Now, if the gods were good for anything, they would rather forward me, from whom they have received the most attentive service. It remains, therefore, that if upon examination you find these new doctrines, which are now preached to us, better and more efficacious, we immediately receive them without delay."

On the conclusion of Coiffi's speech, another chieftain arose, whose discourse, while it proves the good sense of the speaker, is valuable as exhibiting a striking picture of national manners. He sought for information respecting the origin and destiny of man. "Often," said he "O king, in the depth of winter, while you are feasting with your thanes, and the fire is blazing on the hearth in the midst of the hall, you have seen a bird, pelted by the wintry storm, enter at one door, and escape at the other. During its passage it was visible, but whence it came, or whither it went, you know not. Such to me appears the life of man. He walks the earth for a few short years, but what precedes his birth, or what is to follow after his death, we cannot tell. Undoubtedly, if the new religion can unfold these important secrets, it must be worthy our attention." At the common request Paulinus was now introduced, and explained the principles and doctrines of Christianity. When he had finished Coiffi declared himself a convert, and, to prove his sincerity, offered to set fire to the neighbouring temple of Godmundingham. With the permission of Edwin, he called for a horse and arms, both of which were forbidden to the priests of the Angles. As he rode along, he was followed by crowds, who attributed his conduct to temporary insanity. To their astonishment, bidding defiance to the gods of his fathers, he struck his spear into the wall of the temple. They had expected that the fires of heaven would have avenged the sacrilege. The impunity of the apostate dissipated their alarms, and urged by his example and exhortations, they united in kindling the flames, which, with the temple, consumed the deities, that had been so long the objects of their terror and veneration.

Gregory the Great had directed, that upon the conversion of the northern Angles, their metropolitan should fix his see at York. Edwin accordingly bestowed upon Paulinus a house and possessions in that city, and was baptised in a church hastily erected for that purpose. The happiest effects followed the conversion of the hitherto ferocious Northumbrians. The petty British tribes that still held out in Yorkshire were subdued, internal security was well preserved, and open robbery was so effectually suppressed, that it was a common saying among the Northumbrians for centuries, that, in the days of Edwin, a woman with a babe at her breast, could pass from one end of his dominions to another without harm. Edwin's power, however, was doomed to sink more rapidly than it had risen. Penda, an expert and savage warrior now occupied the Mercian throne, and scorning to acknowledge a superior, determined to win by the sword the dignity of Bretwalda, which Edwin had for many years enjoyed. Uniting his army with that of Ceadwalla, king of North Wales, he burst into Northumbria, and on Hatfield Chase, in Yorkshire, encountered the mighty Bretwalda. Edwin, his eldest son, and a great part of his followers were slain.

OSWALD, BRETWALDA VI.—On the death of Edwin, the Northumbrian kingdom was again divided; and Osric succeeded to the throne of Deira, while Eanred succeeded to that of Bernicia. Each of these princes had formerly professed Christianity, and each of them relapsed into the errors of paganism. Neither of them enjoyed long the possession of royalty, but quickly paid the price of it with their blood, being perfidiously destroyed by Ceadwalla. By their deaths the duty of revenging his family and country devolved on Oswald, the younger of the sons of Edilfrid. Impelled by despair, he sought, with a small but resolute band, the Britons, and at the dawn of day found them carelessly encamped in the neighbourhood of Hexham. His soldiers rushed with resistless energy upon the spoilers of their homes; Ceadwalla was slain, his invincible army annihilated, and the victor was hailed as king by the whole of Northumbria, (A D. 635).

Oswald devoted the whole of his reign to the propagation of the Christian religion. Paulinus had taken refuge in Kent, his converts had been scattered or destroyed, and the whole work of conversion was to be recommenced. In this emergency Oswald was not forgetful of his own instructors, the monks of Iona, whom he implored to save his benighted subjects. They responded to his call, and the king's desires were fully blest by the labours of Aidan and his companions, who, with unwearied perseverance, traversed every part of the kingdom, and converted great numbers to the Christian faith. Oswald's power was acknowledged by almost the whole of the Anglo-Saxon states, and the princes of the Picts and Scots were also numbered among his vassals. But the fate of Edwin awaited Oswald, and the same prince was destined to be the minister of his death. Penda again appeared in arms, and was met by Oswald on the field of Maser, in Shropshire, where the Northumbrian monarch died as became a king, his last words being "Lord have mercy on the souls of my people." After this battle Penda laid siege to Bambrough, but the Northumbrians rallied round the family of the beloved Edwin, and on the retreat of the pagans from the well-defended rock, they enabled Oswio, the brother of Oswald, to ascend the vacant throne.

OSWIO, BRETWALDA VII.—On the death of Oswald, Oswio, his brother, succeeded to the kingdom of Bernicia; Deira fell to Oswin, a chief, whose high endowments both of body and mind, could not shield him from the sword of Oswio, who thereupon assumed the government of the whole of Northumbria. Oswio, however, did not long enjoy the fruit of his cruelty. Penda, the Mercian monarch, seemed determined to obtain the dignity of Bretwalda, and gave the Northumbrian little time to enjoy his dignity in peace. After the battle of Maserfield, the victor carried fire and sword to the very gates of Bambrough, but baffled in his attempt upon that fortress, he withdrew to his own dominions. Again and again he sallied forth and slew and ravaged without mercy. Nothing would soften his ferocity, he scorned the offers of tribute, and at length boasted that he would extirpate the entire Northumbrian nation. The presents, which had been sent to mollify his resentment, were distributed among his auxiliaries; and thirty vassal chieftains, Saxons and Britons, swelled with their followers the numbers of his army. Despair at last nerved the courage of Oswio, who, with his son Alchfrid, and a small but resolute force, advanced to meet the invaders. The valour or despair of the Northumbrians prevailed, Penda was killed, and of the thirty vassal chiefs who served under his banner, only two escaped. The Mercian, who was in his eightieth year, had ravaged half the island for twenty years, and during the same period had imbrued his hands in the blood of three East Anglian, and two Northumbrian kings. The battle that closed his career was fought at Winwædfield, near Leeds; and the river Aire having overflowed its banks, few of the Mercians survived to tell the fearful tidings. The first news was brought by the conquerors, who annexed Mercia and East Anglia to the dominions of Northumbria.

Oswio was now Bretwalda in the fullest sense of the word, Britons and Saxons alike acknowledged his superiority, and the greater part of the Picts and Scots paid him tribute. Yet long before his death his power suffered a considerable diminution. The Mercians expelled his officers, achieved their independence, and conferred the sceptre on Wulphere, the youngest son of Penda. To add to Oswio's mortification, he was obliged to cede Deira, the price of murder, to his own son, Alehfrid. Oswio died 670, and with him expired both the title and authority of Bretwalda.

The smaller states, Kent, Sussex, Essex, and East Anglia, having disappeared, the three remaining kingdoms vied with each other for the superiority. Northumbria, weakened by internal dissensions and foreign invasion, gave way to Mercia, whose king, Ethelbald, in 737, asserted his supremacy over the whole country south of the Humber. Five years after, impatient of their subjection, the men of Wessex rose and recovered their independence at the battle of Burford, in Oxfordshire; and although Offa the Terrible, the most magnificent of the Mercian princes, wrested from Wessex all her territories on the left of the Thames, he never recovered possession of the whole country.

Previous to Offa's death a dispute arose between Beorhtric and Egbert concerning the succession to the crown of Wessex. Beorhtric being supported by the people, Egbert took refuge at the court of Charlemagne, where he remained fourteen years, till, hearing of the death of Beorhtric, who had been poisoned by his wife, he again returned to England, and was joyfully received by the people of Wessex. His first exploit was against the Britons of Cornwall and Devon, whom he compelled to submit to his authority. He afterwards turned his arms against Bernulf, who had usurped the Mercian throne, defeated him on the banks of the Wiley, in 823, and two years later gained a second victory over the allied army, when Bernulf was slain, and all Mercia, with its dependencies, added to the crown of Wessex. East Anglia and Northumbria voluntarily submitted, and the whole country south of the Humber owned the authority of Egbert.

THE DANES.

Four centuries had now elapsed since the landing of the Saxons in Kent, and the country for the first time enjoyed the blessings of peace, under the administration of Egbert, who, during the period he resided at the court of Charlemagne, had acquired those views of extended empire and well-administered justice, which, in a great measure, enabled him to consolidate the discordant elements of which his new kingdom was composed. Scarcely, however, had the king attained his desires, when he saw himself assailed by a new and dangerous enemy. The Danes, a race of men whose delight was the storm and the battle, who looked upon the sea as their home, and the spoils of nations as their right, were hovering on the coast of England, and marking out its loveliest scenes for pillage and desolation.

Under the general appellation of Danes were included the inhabitants of Norway, Jutland, and most of the countries around the Baltic. Their chiefs were known as Vikings, or, "sons of the creeks;" they were everywhere faithfully followed, and always zealously obeyed, for they were renowned as the bravest of the brave—as men who had never slept beneath a rafted roof, nor ever drained the bowl by a sheltered hearth. At first they pillaged alike either the lonely trader, or their brother robbers; and, as their light barks with two sails cut through the dashing spray, they would sing "The force of the storm is a help to the arms of the rowers, the hurricane is in our service; it carries us the way we would go." After a time they began to issue forth upon distant excursions, and robbed and murdered under the dignified name of sea-kings. Although allied in language, institution, and kindred, with the Anglo-Saxons and the Franks, these ruthless sons of the north retained no recollection of their ancient kindred. The conversion of the Teutonic nations of the south to the Christian religion had broken every fraternal tie between them and the Teutons of the north. In the ninth century the Northmen still gloried in the title of sons of Woden, and treated the Christian Germans as renegades, making no distinction between them and the conquered nations whose worship they had adopted. Franks or Gauls, Longobards or Latins, all were alike hateful to the men who had remained faithful to the ancient divinities of Germany. A species of religious and patriotic fanaticism was thus allied in the souls of the Scandinavians, with their disorderly spirit and insatiable thirst of gain. They shed the blood of priests with pleasure, were particularly gratified in pillaging churches, and littered their horses in the chapels belonging to palaces. When they had wasted with fire and sword some canton of the Christian territory, "We have sung the mass of lances," they would say in derision; "it began at dawn of morning and has lasted until night."

The manners and customs of these wild sons of Scandinavia differed but little from those of the Anglo-Saxons, and there is every reason to believe that their religion was the same kind of idolatry as that of which the latter had once been slaves. We are informed of its nature by its own votaries, the scalds or bards, who sung the feigned achievements of the gods they worshipped. Woden was their principal idol. He was the "father of slaughter," the "namer of those who were to be slain." The valkyrs, his messengers, determined the success, and selected the victims of battle. Thor, his son, was the god of summer-heat, of thunder, and of war. He was invariably represented with his head encircled with stars, and with the hammer, or mace in his hand, with which he used to crush the jokuns, or giants. These giants were Fire and Frost, who dwelt in a distant chaotic land, and maintained a perpetual war with the giants. In the extravagant fables of the north, the earth was a conquered giant, the land was his flesh, the sea his blood, the firmament his skull, and the clouds his brains. The whole creation was symbolised by a tree, at the roots of which, deep sunk in the kingdom of death, sat the Fates, weaving the destinies of men. Valhalla, the palace of Woden, with its walls of glittering spears, and roof of shining bucklers, was said to be destined for the warriors who fell in battle. Their occupation in this abode was to mingle all day in ceaseless conflict; at night their wounds healed, and they banqueted on the flesh of the boar Scrimner, and quaffed mead from the skulls of the vanquished. Cowards were doomed to the melancholy dominions of Hela, there to dwell with Famine, in the palace of Anguish. No one that died a natural death could share the joys of the Valhalla: hence it was that the slaves were sacrificed without scruple, while some, and even princes, did not hesitate to immolate their own children. The horrid gloom of this belief was increased by incantations and witchcraft, and nothing could be done without a spell. When the armourer was forging a coat of mail, he chanted a song that was to render it impenetrable, a similar charm over the sword was to render its edge resistless.

This state of things was, however, to have an end; the gods and giants were to expire of mutual wounds, while the Valhalla and the dominions of Hela were to sink in one vast conflagration. The earth was to be renewed, and another paradise more happy, and another hell more terrible, than those of Woden, were to be the everlasting places of punishment or reward. A God—the Ancient, the Infinite, the creator of all, was to decide the fate of the universe, and justice was to reign amongst men. Such was the remarkable creed of Scandinavia; containing, but not blending together, the principal traditions of the first men, and the more recent fabrications of idolatry and superstition. Several traces of the Scandinavian creed still linger among us, charms and incantations are still practised among our peasantry, our very nursery tales seem derived from Thor the giant-killer, while the days of the week are distinctly named from the gods of the Danes and Saxons. Sunday and Monday are the days on which the sun and moon were worshipped; Tuesday is 'Tuesca's day; Wednesday, Woden's day; Thursday, Thor's day; Friday, the day of Frigga, the wife of Thor; and Saturday, the day of Satur.

In the year 787 these fierce invaders first made their appearance on the southern coast of England, where they were met and defeated by Offa of Mercia. Their incursions soon became periodic, and being joined by the remnant of the British population, who gladly seized this opportunity to be revenged on their conquerors, they spread devastation and alarm through the whole country. The reigns of Egbert and his four immediate successors are little more than one continued narrative of sanguinary encounters with these hardy warriors; and their desultory manner of warfare, which enabled them to take to their ships as soon as a sufficient force could be brought against them, filled the Saxon inhabitants with such dismay, that at length, wearied out with fatigue, they were on the brink of the same servitude and extinction which their arms had, four centuries before, brought upon the British population. Mercia, Northumbria, and East Anglia had already sunk, and Wessex was on the verge of ruin, when Ethelred, dying of the wounds he had received in battle against the Danes, left the throne to his brother Alfred, a young man only twenty years of age, but who had already greatly distinguished himself by his courage and perseverance. After a series of sanguinary conflicts, Alfred was obliged to retire to a morass, formed by the waters of the Thone and Parret, in Somersetshire, where he remained in seclusion till an unexpected victory gained by the men of Devon, in which the Danes lost their chief Hubba and the enchanted standard of the raven, again afforded him an opportunity of taking the field. Having assembled the men of Wessex on the borders of Selwood Forest, Alfred fell unexpectedly on the Danes and completely routed them. His men, however, paused when they arrived at the Danish entrenchments. They closed around the devoted camp, but were too prudent to risk an assault; and, after a fortnight's siege, the Danes capitulated. The conditions prove that, although defeated, the Danes were still formidable. The king and the principal chieftains were to embrace Christianity, and evacuate Wessex. The boundaries between the latter kingdom and that of East-Anglia were to be the Thames, from its mouth to the river Lea; this river from its mouth to its source, a line thence to Bedford, and along the Ouse to Watling-street—the whole of England from Watling-street to the Frith of Forth was the territory of the Danes. By another treaty between Alfred and Gothrun, the lives of Englishmen and Danes were to be considered of equal value; all intercourse between the two nations was forbidden; the laws of the Danes were assimilated to those of the Saxons; and the two princes pledged themselves to support Christianity and punish apostacy. After a few weeks, Gothrun and thirty of his chiefs were baptised, and Alfred himself stood sponsor for the Danish monarch. The latter, full of admiration at the generosity and valour of his conqueror, departed to Cirencester, in Mercia, and ordered his followers to win their bread, not by the sword, but by the cultivation of the ground. In the following year he returned to his kingdom of East Anglia. He was faithful to his engagements, and the offers of his countrymen could never induce him to forsake his religion or make war upon his former enemies.

Alfred possessed more power than any of his predecessors, and was the first prince who bore the title of king of England; yet his authority was exceedingly circumscribed; and had not the conquest of Neustria for a time occupied the attention of the Northmen, England must have eventually succumbed—even those provinces which the Danish invasions had not entirely depopulated were wasted, and the Saxon population sunk into the greatest barbarism; the monasteries, then the only repositories of learning, had been destroyed, the monks dispersed, and the libraries burned. To remedy this fearful state of ignorance, Alfred instituted public schools and invited learned men to attend his court; and a law was enacted, making it compulsory on all free men possessed of more than two hides of land to send their children to these schools, and the king himself afforded an example of zealous devotedness to the study of literature.

While attending to the education of his people, Alfred did not neglect the national defence, for he re-organised the militia, constructed fortresses, and formed a powerful navy. The defence of the towns was entrusted to the inhabitants, under the command of the king's gerefa or reeve, while the population of the country was divided into classes, which were to serve in rotation under the king or ealdorman.

Commerce is the natural index of national prosperity, and, like all periods of good government, the reign of Alfred was distinguished by the stimulus given to commerce. The king had twice visited Rome in his youth; and, sensible of the importance of a mercantile navy, favoured the intercourse of his subjects with foreign states by many wise laws and regulations. The arts, too, received many additions, especially those of metallurgy and ship-building, on which the king is said to have bestowed his personal attention. After having devoted himself for thirty years to the improvement of his country, Alfred died in 901, leaving his crown to his son Edward.

The three immediate successors of Alfred,—Edward, Athelstan, and Edmund,—by their wisdom and perseverance, matured the successful system of consolidation which that prince had commenced. The next reigns, those of Edred and Edwy, were devoid of political interest; but on the accession of Edgar, in 959, the kingdom attained a degree of grandeur and prosperity previously unknown. Under the vigorous administration of the bishops Dunstan and Odo, the boundaries of the kingdom became co-extensive with the present limits of England, and the people enjoyed peace and security. During the whole of this long reign, the kingdom was not disturbed by a single war; the kings of Scotland and Man, and the princes of Wales and Strathclyde, tendered their homage, and the friendship of England was courted by neighbouring princes. The prevalence of general security facilitated the growth of commerce and industry, and many foreign improvements were introduced. Edgar was well aware that all his exertions would be fruitless, as long as the country lay exposed to the Scandinavian pirates. He therefore prepared a numerous fleet, which he divided into three divisions; and early every summer, when the Scandinavians were accustomed to begin their enterprises, he summoned his ships, and embarking successively in each of his squadrons, made the circuit of his dominions. Dismayed at this display of power, the sea-kings avoided the shores of England during the whole of his reign.

In connection with the administration of justice, a most remarkable institution had been gradually springing up: the civil wars of the Heptarchy and the lengthened struggles with the Danes had driven many men from their ordinary occupations into the fens and woods; when, losing their habits of industry, they took to rapine and plunder. To repress this disorderly state of society, many stringent laws were enacted; no man could quit his shire without the consent of the ealdorman, and every one above the age of twelve was obliged to attach himself to some patron, since, when found without a home, he was liable to be punished as a vagabond. During the reign of Edgar this supervision became extended into a regular system, known as the law of Frank pledge. By this law the whole population was distributed into a number of petty societies called tithings or free burghs, which consisted of ten householders, and extended over every village throughout the kingdom; so that if an offence were committed, the tithing was bound to present the offender in court, that he might make reparation in his own property and person; but if he escaped, the tithing was not answerable for his offence, unless they failed to exculpate themselves from participation in his crime or flight.

During the reign of Edgar, the Saxon power attained its greatest splendour, and the important subject of legislation received a corresponding advance. During this short but tranquil interval numerous laws were enacted, and jurisprudence began to be studied with a view to its practical application. After Edgar's death, however, in 975, the kingdom began rapidly to decline. Edward the Martyr, who succeeded him, before he had reigned three years was assassinated through the treachery of his stepmother Elfrida, to make way for her son Ethelred, a prince destitute of every noble quality. Perceiving the increasing weakness of the kingdom, the Danes, who had desisted from their depredations for nearly a century, now began seriously to contemplate the conquest of the island.

In the year 1002, Ethelred planned and executed a measure which has rendered his name infamous for ever. In the beginning of November, he gave orders to all his officers in the various towns and counties, to prepare themselves against a certain day for a general massacre of the Danes within their respective jurisdictions. On the thirteenth day of that month, the festival of St. Brice, the unsuspecting victims, with their wives and families, were seized by the populace, and the horror of murder was in many places aggravated by every insult that national hatred could suggest. At London, where they had fled for protection to the churches, they were massacred in crowds round the altars.

To avenge the wrongs of his countrymen, and of his sister, who had perished in the general slaughter, Sweyn, king of Denmark, undertook the conquest of England, and, after several times invading the kingdom, and harassing the inhabitants during a period of ten years, he succeeded in establishing himself upon the English throne. Ethelred fled to Normandy, and the whole country sullenly submitted to the Danish conqueror. But since their first invasion a great change had come over the Scandinavian nations; during this interval they had embraced Christianity, and were united under regular governments, so that the accession of the Danish dynasty produced no material change in the Saxon government, either as regards its institutions or laws.

The Danish warriors, who had followed the fortunes of their chief, quietly settled on the lands they had acquired, and gradually became assimilated to the native population, whose laws and language were not far different from their own. On the demise of Sweyn, his son Canute was chosen by the Danes; but the Saxon nobility, impatient of the foreign rule, invited Ethelred to return, having first extorted from him a pledge for the better government of the kingdom. The contest of the two princes had assumed the character of a civil war, when Ethelred dying, the command of the Saxon forces devolved on Edmund, surnamed Ironside, from his courage in battle. The armies being nearly equal, the two princes were prevailed on to come to a partition of the kingdom. Edmund reigned south of the Thames, and Canute retained possession of the northern provinces, whose population was chiefly Danish. Edmund, however, only survived this treaty a few months, and Canute took undisputed possession of the whole kingdom. England, Norway, and Denmark were now united under one sceptre, and Canute reigned the most powerful monarch in Europe; England was his favourite residence, and his vast resources secured his dominions from foreign invasion. In consequence of the distracted state of the country, the commencement of his reign was marked by insecurity and oppression; but as confidence increased among his Saxon subjects, and there was no longer fear of a successful rival, his administration assumed a milder form, and he gained the good will, if not the affections, of the English. This reign is remarkable for one important innovation—the formation of the first regular army which had been maintained in England since the withdrawal of the Roman legions. The former kings had solely depended on the voluntary services of their subjects, who were bound by the tenure of their lands to aid the sovereign in repelling foreign invasion. But Canute, on account of his extended dominions, found it convenient to retain constantly at his court a number of chosen warriors as a body-guard, who accompanied him on all his expeditions, and who were designated “Hus-carls,” or household troops.

On the death of Canute, in 1036, his extensive dominions were divided amongst his sons; a series of desolating wars followed, and the two short reigns of Harold and Hardicanute offer nothing of historical interest, though they were the termination of the Danish dominion in England. The Saxon population still outnumbered their conquerors, and on the death of Hardicanute, in 1042, the English gladly seized the opportunity to restore their ancient line, to which the Danes, who were quietly settled in the kingdom, offered no material resistance. Even Godwin, the powerful Earl of Wessex, proffered to Edward his aid in obtaining the English crown, on condition that he should espouse his daughter Editha. Although placed on the throne by the influence of Godwin's family, Edward never manifested a sincere attachment to that house; and on one occasion, Godwin having refused to chastise the people of Dover for resisting the insolent behaviour of Eustace of Boulogne, a Norman count, who had been on a visit to Edward, the earl and his sons were outlawed, and Editha deprived of her honours. Godwin and his sons fled from the kingdom and assembled a small force, with which they returned to the southern coast; and so strong was the national feeling in their favour, that the king was reluctantly compelled to come to an accommodation. Godwin attested before the assembled Witenagemote his innocence of the crimes laid to his charge; his lands and honours were restored to him, and the lady Editha returned to court; most of the foreigners and Normans were outlawed, and the kingdom returned to its former quiet state. Godwin, however, did not long survive this reconciliation. One day as he was sitting at the king's table, he was seized with a fit, and expired three days after in speechless agony, leaving his son Harold to succeed to his honours. The generosity of this young man's character conciliated the favour of most of the nobles, while his military talents were displayed by the facility with which he restored Malcolm to the Scottish throne, and chastised the encroachments of the Welsh princes.

Edward, who was childless, perceiving the danger of leaving the kingdom without an heir, sent to Hungary to invite Edward, the son of Edmund Iron side, to return. The joy of the nation at the prospect of an undisputed succession was quickly changed into astonishment and grief, for immediately after his arrival in England the prince was cut off by a sudden and mysterious disease. During the short interval between his landing in England and his death, he had by some means been kept at a distance from his uncle, and it was suspected by many that he was the victim of Harold's ambition. His son, Edgar the Etheling, was a mean competitor, by the side of the brave and accomplished Harold, and the English never bore a sincere regard to him, on account of his foreign birth and education. On the death of Edward, in 1066, Harold was proclaimed king in an assembly of the thanes and the citizens of London; and the next day witnessed both the funeral of the late, and the coronation of the new sovereign. To strengthen his influence with the nobility, Harold married Editha, the daughter of Alfgar, and sister of Edwin and Morcar, the two powerful earls of the north. Nevertheless, he had many difficulties to contend with; his brother Tostig, who had been expelled by the people for his bad government of Northumbria, fled to Norway, where he induced the king of that country to fit out an expedition against England. In the meantime, William, Duke of Normandy, as soon as he heard of the accession of Harold, sent to demand the surrender of the crown under the pretence of the bequest of Edward. As Harold refused to accede to the request of William, each determined to appeal to the sword, and the English no less than the Normans were astonished at the mighty preparations made to decide the important quarrel. Harold proceeded with an army to the Sussex coast, in order to oppose William, should he attempt an invasion, and while he was in the south, he was informed that Tostig and Hardrada, king of Norway, had landed in the north, where, having defeated the combined forces of Edwin and Morcar, they were preparing for the subjugation of the country. Harold hastened to the scene of action, and was the first herald of his own arrival. Surprised with only half his troops about him, the Norwegian king sent three messengers to the fleet to hasten the march of his men, while he retired slowly to Stamford-Bridge, on the Derwent. There he drew up his warriors in a compact but hollow circle. The royal standard occupied the centre; the circumference was composed of spearmen, while the whole was surrounded by a line of spears firmly fixed in the earth, and pointing outwards in an oblique direction. While thus arranging his forces, Hardrada was conspicuous for his black charger, gigantic stature, blue mantle, and glittering helmet. As he rode round the circle his horse fell. "Who," exclaimed Harold, "is that chieftain on the ground?" Being told that it was Hardrada, "He is," returned the king, "a gallant warrior, but his fall shows that his fate is approaching."

When all was ready for the onset, Harold offered his brother Tostig terms of peace, and the earldom of Northumbria. Tostig inquired what he would give his ally the king of Norway: "Seven feet of land for a grave," was the answer, and instantly the irregular masses of the Saxon cavalry dashed against the terrible array of the enemy. Unable to make an impression, they broke, according to their custom, rallied at a distance, again charged, and again recoiled. The excited Norwegians could no longer restrain their fury—they saw the enemy retiring in disorder, and they rushed forward to complete the apparent rout. Their movement left a gap in the circle, into which the Saxon infantry immediately poured, and the contest of discipline became a vast and complicated series of personal encounters. Amidst the struggle, Hardrada was shot through the neck with an arrow. Tostig, deaf to the repeated offers of his brother, continued the fight. The rest of the Norwegians now arrived, and the fury of the battle redoubled. The ardour of the Saxons finally prevailed, and all the Norwegian chiefs of note shared the common fate of Tostig and Hardrada. This action is considered as one of the most bloody that is recorded in our annals, and the whitening bones of the invaders lay for generations upon the field, the dread and wonder of the traveller.

The courage of Harold was tempered with humanity. He sent for Olave, the younger son of Hardrada, who, accompanied by his bishop and the Earl of the Orkneys, obeyed the summons of the conqueror. He experienced a courteous reception, swore to live in amity with England, and was dismissed with twelve ships to revisit his own country. A few days were necessarily employed by Harold in taking possession of the Norwegian fleet, securing the spoil, and refreshing his exhausted troops. He repaired to York; but the public rejoicings of the citizens could not tranquillise his impatience to learn the motions of his remaining and most formidable competitor. The king was seated at the royal banquet, and surrounded by his thanes, when a messenger entered the hall, and announced that William of Normandy had landed with an immense army at Pevensey, in Sussex. On the receipt of this intelligence, the king flew to the capital, where he was joined by thousands of his subjects, and so great was the celerity of his movements, that, although in the beginning of October he was feasting at York, yet on the fourteenth of the same month he had reached the camp of the Normans.

At Senlac, a place about eight miles from Hastings, where the town of Battle now stands, Harold selected for his post an eminence that looked towards the sea, and was protected in the rear by an extensive wood. He formed his men on the brow of the hill, the men of Kent occupying the van, protected in front by palisades. The royal banner, richly ornamented with gold and precious stones, bearing, as its device, the figure of a fighting man, floated over the centre of the army; around it stood Harold, his two brothers, Gurth and Leofwin, and the body-guard of Londoners. The Normans were arrayed in three lines upon an opposite declivity; the archers, the heavy-armed infantry, and lastly, ranged in five bodies, the dense array of knights and men-at-arms. William, we are told, "out of a pious care for the interests of Christendom, and to prevent the effusion of Christian blood, sent out, as mediator between both, a monk, who proposed these terms to Harold,—either to resign the government, or to own it a tenure in fee from the Norman, or to decide the matter in single combat with William." To this last proposition, the thanes, who surrounded Harold, replied,—“No strife between a man and a man shall decide the liberties of thousands.” On the messenger's return, both armies prepared for the great struggle in which they were about to engage; and at nine o'clock on the morning of the fourteenth of October, in the year of grace 1066, Tostig the Fair, advanced with the banner of William, chanting at the same time the song of Hollo. The Normans immediately raised the war cry, "God is our the suburbs ; he was unwilling or afraid to storm the walls, and resolved to punish his opponents by destroying their property in the open country. Leaving London, he spread his army over the counties of Surrey, Sussex, Hampshire, and Berkshire. Everything valuable was plundered by the soldiery, and what they could not carry away, was committed to the flames. Edwin and Morcar, seeing no means of retrieving the lost fortunes of their country, retired to the north, while Archbishop Stigand and a deputation from the citizens and clergy waited on the conqueror, and proffered to him the crown, stipulating only for their ancient laws and privileges. William accepted their submission, and appointed Christmas Day for his coronation ; but London was even at this period a wealthy and powerful city, and the Normans did not consider it safe to enter until a strong fortress had been erected, which now forms part of the Tower of London, to command the city.

On the day of his coronation at Westminster Abbey, the circumstance of an armed champion defying all competitors, was first introduced. When the English, who were present at the ceremony, were asked, whether they chose William for their king, they shouted their assent. Their acclamations became the signal for plunder and massacre. The Norman bands that had been stationed outside the abbey, feigned alarm at the outcry ; but instead of gathering about their king, they set fire to the houses in the neighbourhood, and began to plunder. William was left with none but the prelates at the altar. The English, both men and women, had fled to provide for their own safety ; and of the Normans, some had hastened to extinguish the flames, the others to share in the plunder. The service was completed with precipitation ; and the Conqueror took the usual oath of the Anglo-Saxon kings, with this addition, that he would govern as justly as the best of his predecessors, provided the natives were true to him.

What might have been the character of William's government, had all things proceeded amicably, it may be difficult at this distance of time to determine ; but certain it is, that at the commencement of his reign the king showed a laudable desire to gain the good will of his new subjects. He confirmed the leading nobility in the possession of their estates, and conferred many important offices on those whom the common dictates of prudence would have led him to distrust, had he contemplated any gross violations of the Saxon liberties. The ancient laws and the mode of administering justice were strictly preserved ; and it is even asserted by some historians, that William at this time endeavoured to acquire the English language, that he might the better understand the wishes of the nation. But the sense of conquest produced an indomitable resentment in the minds of the people, and they watched with jealousy the erection of castles in all the principal towns, as if to overawe the inhabitants. The Normans, haughty, tyrannical, and proud, were looked upon by the English as foreigners and usurpers, while the very first act of the government was highly unpopular. William confiscated the estates of those who had fallen at Hastings, affecting to treat them as traitors. This, which was no act of tyranny according to the Norman institutions, was looked upon by the Saxons in a far different light ; they regarded those brave men as the defenders of their country's cause, and could not but consider the partition of their estates amongst the Norman favourites, as an intolerable act of oppression. William's departure to the Continent gave these discontents time to ripen, and the cruel and arbitrary conduct of those whom he had placed at the head of affairs drove the people to exasperation by new impositions. The flames of rebellion spread, and the whole country rose in arms ; but the people wanted generals to lead them, and castles to sustain their revolt, while the energy and alacrity of their enemies disconcerted all their measures. The Normans that had ventured as far as Hereford, met with fearful retribution from the hand of Edric the Wild. Copsi, who had consented to rule the country north of the Tyne as the vassal of the Conqueror, was implored but in vain, to renounce the connection, and fell beneath the swords of his countrymen. William, hearing of the storm which was threatening, hastened from the Continent, and, by liberal promises and timely condescension detached the Londoners from the popular party ; he then invited the Saxon nobles to his court, and professed to repose in them the utmost confidence. But this disaffection had taught William to mistrust his English subjects, and he determined henceforth to treat them as a conquered nation. Having divided the energies of his enemies, he led his army, which was now partially composed of English, against the men of Devon and Cornwall, who had openly appeared in arms, and when Exeter was taken by assault, he divided the lands among the victors.

In the north a more formidable coalition had been formed by Edwin and Morcar, with Malcolm of Scotland, and the Welsh princes, who had promised their assistance to restore Edgar the Etheling to the throne ; and in the conquered provinces a secret plan is said to have been formed for the massacre of the Normans, similar to that of the Danes in the reign of Ethelred. Perceiving his danger, William immediately crossed the Thames, besieged and took Derby, Lincoln, and York, overran the whole of the north, and erected strong castles at York, Nottingham, Warwick, Lincoln, Huntingdon, and Cambridge. The cities opened their gates and submitted without a blow, but no sooner had he departed, than the whole population took to arms and wreaked their vengeance upon the Norman garrisons.

The slender ties which had previously preserved the rights and titles of the inhabitants were now dissolved, and acts of oppression and spoliation became of daily occurrence. " William," says Malmesbury, " bearing in mind the evil effects of the mild government of Canute, which had ended in the entire expulsion of the Danes, determined to secure his conquest by rivetting such fetters that the English would no longer have it in their power to resist ;" and, with this design, he determined to enforce the rigours of the feudal system. But the war of independence was not yet over. The inhabitants of the Danelagh still retained much of their ancient ferocity, and continued to solicit the aid of their Danish and Norwegian kinsmen. William on his part, sent rich presents to Sweyn, King of Denmark, to induce him to remain at peace ; but the entreaties of his subjects finally prevailed, and the king was compelled to equip a fleet of two hundred and forty sail, which anchored in the Humber, at the commencement of autumn. Experience had taught the people that the Norman was not to be compared to the Danish rule, and everywhere the English rose to join their standard. Edwin, Edgar, and Morcar hastened from Scotland, and the united forces advanced to the attack of the Norman castles, which were taken, and their garrisons sent prisoners to the Danish fleet. But William, taking advantage of the winter season, which prevented military operations, sent an embassy to the court of Denmark, and by large promises of money induced the King of Denmark to recall his forces at the end of winter. The English, now deserted by their allies, were unable to maintain the defensive against the disciplined forces of the Normans, and the whole country, from the Humber to the Tees, was reduced by the avenging conqueror, to one vast desert.

All England now submitted to the Normans, and William commenced that system of universal transfer of landed property, which, in a few years, entirely changed the aspect of the country. Feudal castles sprang up on every domain, and the whole surface of the island was divided into sixty thousand military fiefs, which were lavishly bestowed on his Norman followers. The few Saxons who still retained possession of their lands gladly sought shelter under the protection of the king or some powerful baron, and by the twentieth year of his reign the whole of the allodial lands were converted into feudal tenures. By this time, so universal had become the hatred of the native English to the military tyranny of William, that the whole of the higher classes had either perished in battle or fallen by the sentence of military tribunals; many had fled to Scotland, and many more to the east, where, under the command of Siward, the brave Earl of Gloucester, they entered the service of the Greek emperor, and for many years defended Constantinople against the power of the Turks; others took to the woods, or joined Hereward in the fens of Lincolnshire and Cambridgeshire, whence they issued and attacked the Normans on the highways, and plundered those who submitted to them; while the mass of the people bowed to the servitude they were unable to avoid. Failing in a generous resistance, the English now commenced a system of individual assassination; and whenever a Norman was overtaken unarmed, he was set upon and slain. As the people sympathised in the deed, there was no means of bringing the offender to punishment; and William was obliged to institute a special law for the protection of the Normans, called the "presentment of Englishry." By this law it was enacted that in every hundred where a murder was committed by an unknown hand, a jury should be empanelled, to determine whether the murdered man were of Norman or Saxon extraction; if of the former, the whole hundred was severely fined. And this stringent measure was finally successful; every one was interested in preventing that for which every one was responsible; but in the reign of Henry II. this court finally disappeared.

THE FEUDAL SYSTEM.—In accordance with his promise, before the battle of Hastings, William rewarded his followers with the lands of the vanquished, taking care, however, to attach to these grants those peculiar restrictions and burdens which are so well known as the characteristics of the feudal system; a system extending at that time throughout the greater part of Europe, and still forming the basis of many of our institutions. The principal feature of this remarkable system was, that the lands were always held, not as an ownership, but as an hereditary tenancy; but that this tenancy continued as an absolute right, as long as the conditions upon which it was granted were complied with. In those troubled times, military service was the usual and most honourable, but by no means the necessary condition.

In the composition of feudalism we notice two essential elements: the land, which was held thus conditionally, and what was called the fief or feud; and the vassal, or feudatory, who held the fief. Whether fiefs were at first given for a limited period or for life, and at what time they first became hereditary, cannot now be clearly ascertained. When the fief was large, the vassal often bestowed a part upon others, upon terms similar to those by which he himself possessed the whole, and he thus became a "mesne" or intermediate lord. In England, the distinction between real and personal vassals was continued throughout the Angle-Saxon period; and, as the law required every one, from the king to the ceorl, to place himself under a lawful superior, all became personal, though many were by no means real vassals.

Fiefs were created by investiture, which was of two kinds; the proper investiture, which was an actual delivery of the land by the lord to the vassal in presence of his convassalli, equals, or  pares ; and the improper investiture, or symbolical delivery of the land by a wand or turf. In the case of a proper investiture, the lord declared the services which his tenant had to perform, at the time of the investiture, in the presence of the convassalli; and it became usual for him to give to the tenant a writing, containing a statement of such services, witnessed by the convassalli, in order that they might not be forgotten; and this was called a breve testatum. In the case of an improper investiture, the lord delivered to the tenant such writing with directions to some person to give him actual possession. Besides the investiture, the grant of a fief was accompanied by two other ceremonies,—that of fealty, when, standing erect, the vassal swore fidelity to his lord; and that of homage, when, unarmed and bareheaded, on his knees, with his hands placed between those of his lord, he repeated these words—"Hear, my lord, I become your liege man of life and limb, and earthly worship, and faith and truth I will bear to you to live and die. So help me God." The ceremony was concluded with a kiss, and the vassal was thenceforth bound to respect and obey his lord; the lord to protect his vassal, and to warrant to him the possession of his fief.

After the lord had thus granted out lands as fiefs, the proprietas thereof remained in him, and he had also the seigniorship, or right to fealty, and the other services reserved in the grant. And as the lord and vassal were mutually bound to defend each other, the former could not alien the fief without the consent of the latter, who might originally have become his tenant from reliance on his power and courage, which qualities another lord might not happen to possess. And if the vassal were evicted of the fief, his lord was bound to recompense him by another fief of equal value, or to pay him for what he had lost. On the same principle, if the lord failed in his duty to his vassal, as in not protecting and defending him, he forfeited his seigniorship. As the lord had granted the fief on condition of some service rendered by his tenant, it followed that if such condition could no longer be performed, as where the vassal died without heirs, the feud returned to him again. If the heir of a fief was a minor, he became the ward of the lord; and when the fief descended to a daughter, the lord claimed the right to dispose of her in marriage, and also the homage and services of her husband.

Feudalism had attained its complete development about the time of the Conquest, and in that mature condition was transplanted into England. As nearly the whole of the landed proprietors had engaged in the struggle for independence, nearly all the lands of the kingdom had become forfeited to the crown. The few Saxons that retained their estates were harassed, and often dispossessed by the Normans. Redress was generally promised, but seldom obtained; and the old nobility rapidly shrunk into the middle and lower classes, happy if they could preserve but a fragment of their former possessions. Of the confiscated property William retained a considerable portion, besides the whole of the ancient royal domains; the remainder he parcelled out among his followers. He possessed no fewer than one thousand four hundred and thirty-two manors in different parts of the kingdom. The next to him was his brother Odo, distinguished by the title of the earl-bishop, who held almost two hundred manors in Kent, and two hundred and fifty in other counties. Another prelate, highly esteemed, and as liberally rewarded by the Conqueror, Geoffrey, Bishop of Coutances, left at his death two hundred and eighty manors to Roger Mowbray, his nephew. Robert, Count of Mortaigne, the brother of William and Odo, obtained for his share nine hundred and seventy-three manors; four hundred and forty-two fell to the portion of Alan Fergant, Earl of Bretagne; two hundred and ninety-eight to that of William Warrenne; and one hundred and seventy-one to Richard de Clare. Other estates, in greater or smaller proportions, were bestowed on the rest of the foreign chieftains, according to the caprice or the gratitude of the new sovereign.

This division of the land was the result of William's policy. He was well aware that on the continent the strength of a vassal was often equal to that of his lord; he knew that he himself, and many other French feudatories, had often defied with impunity all the power of their suzerain, the King of France. He knew, moreover, that the sub-vassals took the oath of fealty to the mesne lord only, and considered themselves bound, in consequence, to adhere to him in every quarrel, even against his suzerain or chief lord. Thus, every large fief became a separate kingdom, having no connection with the suzerain, except so far as the mesne lord thought proper. William resolved that none of these evils should exist in England; his grants, therefore, were comparatively small, and generally consisted of estates scattered over different parts of the kingdom. No single baron could be compared for a moment with the individual power of the king. To remedy the second evil, William compelled all the sub-vassals, all those that held of his own feudatories, to assemble on Salisbury plain, and swear allegiance, not only to their immediate superiors, but to himself; thus impressing strongly upon the minds of his people the supreme right and dominion of the crown. But this was not all; they no longer promised obedience to their lord alone, but swore to be true to him against all men, save the king and his heirs. William was not satisfied with these changes; but made another innovation, which was unknown even to feudalism, except in some parts of Germany, and which insured him no small control over the possessions of his vassals. He introduced the custom of "wardship," and "marriage," a custom that more or less, for six hundred years, excited the indignation of the nobles. By this custom the king took possession of the revenues of all his vassals that were under age. If he chose he could remove them from their friends, and bring them up in his own residence; but he was required to defray the expenses, and to put his ward when of age in possession of his land, without receiving the ordinary payment of the "relief." An heiress could not marry, even during the lifetime of her father, without the consent of her lord, or the payment of a heavy fine. On her father's death, she remained under the guardianship of her lord till the age of sixteen, and for so long a term beyond that age as she chose to remain single. The pretext for these harassing regulations was a necessary attention to the interests of the lord, whose fee might otherwise come into the possession of a man unable or unwilling to comply with the obligations; but avarice converted them into a constant source of emolument to the lord, by inducing him to sell the marriages of heiresses to the highest bidder.

Besides these unusual conditions, William introduced all the ordinary burdens of feudalism. First—His vassals held their lands by military service, and had to maintain in the field a determinate number of knights, for forty days every year. The force that could thus be raised amounted to 60,000 horse. Even the church lands were subjected to these conditions, unless it could be proved to the satisfaction of the Norman lawyers that they had been given in "franc-almoigue," or free alms. Second—To military service was always attached the obligation of suit or attendance at the court of the chief. The king's immediate vassals were expected to meet three times every year; they and the officers of his household formed his "great council," or, as it was called under Henry I., his parliament. On these occasions William entertained his nobles and the foreign ambassadors with unsparing magnificence. At Christmas, Gloucester was the usual scene of royal festivity, Winchester at Easter, and Westminster at Whitsuntide. Besides these fixed periods, the crown vassals were to assemble whenever summoned, unless they could show a reason for their absence. Although the object of the meeting was to consult for the safety of the nation, to furnish the king with aids, and to enact new, or to amend the ancient laws, yet, on the whole, it was rather a judicial than a legislative assembly; its chief business was to decide causes and receive appeals. At first all the tenants or barons of the king, including the bishops, were obliged to repair to the great council. Many whose fiefs were small regarded this rather as a burden than as a privilege; and when their lands became subdivided by marriage and descent, they gradually abandoned the meeting, till, in the reign of John, the distinction that was thus formed of greater and lesser barons became clearly defined. Both classes were still summoned on emergencies, but the latter gradually subsided into the mass of the commons. Third—Of the relief sufficient mention has already been made. It consisted at first of arms and weapons, but was afterwards paid in money. Primer seisin was the relief paid by a vassal who was of age before he came to the estate; it was larger than the common relief, as if it were to compensate for the loss of the emoluments of wardship. Aids, or escuages, were feudal payments that were levied from the vassals of the crown on three occasions: whenever the lord was taken prisoner, when his eldest daughter was married, and when his son was knighted. Sub-vassals had to pay a fourth escuage whenever their immediate lord had to pay his relief. The king's vassals claimed, and generally exercised, the right of fixing the amount of this escuage. Yet each vassal of the crown levied it from his own dependants at his pleasure; although it was usual for him, either to rate each of his knights' fees at a certain amount, or to exact a fixed proportion of the movables of each individual.

From the preceding notices, the reader will be able to form some notion of many of the sources from which the king's revenue was derived. From all these feudal services; from his numerous manors; from tolls in fairs and markets; from an occasional land-tax; from a tallage or capitation-tax, levied upon the Saxons; and from a hearth-tax of one shilling on every house, the Conqueror acquired a daily income of the enormous sum of £1,061, while the expenses of the government were comparatively light, and those of war fell, in great measure, upon the vassals.

The better to facilitate the entire feudalisation of the country, and to insure due payment of the taxes, William sent commissioners to take a survey of the kingdom. This survey, still extant in the Domesday Book, contains an account of the various estates throughout the country, with their nature, produce, cultivators, and proprietors. It was taken from the evidence of persons living on the spot, who described them on oath, as they were at the time of Edward the Confessor, at the time when given in fief by William, and at the actual time of the survey. There is no description of the four northern counties, but the West Riding of Yorkshire is made to comprehend that part of Lancashire which lies to the north of the Ribble, with some districts in Westmoreland and Cumberland, while the southern portion of Lancashire is included in Cheshire. Rutland is similarly divided between Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire. The northern counties were probably omitted in this survey, on the same grounds as Wales and Scotland, because they belonged to a prince who did the King of England homage, but was not required to admit the commissioners of a fiscal inquiry within his dominions.

Having thus provided for his own interest, William had the good policy to refrain from tampering with the remaining rights and institutions of the conquered. The laws and customs peculiar to the three great divisions of the kingdom were respected and enforced, and the ancient courts were suffered to remain. The greatest change was in the Witenagemote; and even this was in name more than reality. The King's Court and the Great Council, the two courts which supplanted the Witenas, are sometimes used synonymously; but, at other times, the Great Council implies a more full attendance of the royal vassals, than was necessary to constitute the court of a king. In both these courts the suitors were Normans, and the pleadings were, therefore, conducted in their native tongue. In the other courts Saxon was generally used. In the administration of justice, the system of penalties was retained; but, instead of being clearly defined, they were left to the mercy or caprice of the lord, and were therefore termed "amerciaments." Under the sway of the Saxon kings, a large proportion of the fines used to become the property of the ealdorman; this practice the Norman earls continued; of all the fines awarded to the crown, every third penny was theirs. The usual form of the ordeal was suffered to remain; but the judicial combat, or "wager of battle," was added, and could be demanded by either of the parties, provided he was a Norman. The spiritual and temporal courts were separated, and the old distinction of classes, viz: ealdormen, greater and lesser thanes, ceorls, and theows, became known as earls or counts, barons, knights, or esquires, free-tenants, villiens, and neifs.

When William had settled his new dominions, the outline of his policy was imitated by his barons. Each estate consisted of two portions: one, called the "demesne," contained the residence of the lord; the land cultivated and inhabited by his villiens; certain profits held by "soccage," that is, by rent, or other free and conventional services, including suit or attendance in the hall of the lord; and lastly, town lands, held by a tenure called "burgage," which often varied even in the same town. The second portion of the estate was divided into knights' fees, given on condition of military service on horseback, for the customary period. The number of these sub-infeudations depended upon the holder of the entire fee: if it were less than the number of knights required by his tenure, he was obliged to hire substitutes. By this means, the obligation of military service fell in reality upon the smaller portion of the estate. The quantity of land that constituted a knight's fee is not accurately known. It was sometimes, if not always, five hydes or caracutes. A fief escheated or reverted to the king by the failure of heirs in the line of the "tenant in capite," the person that held directly of the crown; also when by felony, treason, or omission of the military service, the actual tenant incurred the penalty of forfeiture. In the time of Henry II., the military service, or scutage, as it was often called, began to be compounded with for money, each scutage being rated at the value of about three pounds.

The most remarkable events subsequent to the Conquest are—the annexation of Ireland to England, in the reign of Henry II. (1172); the granting of MAGNA CHARTA by King John (1215); the successful invasions of France by Edward III. and Henry V.; the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, called the "Wars of the Roses," which distracted the kingdom in the fifteenth century; the introduction of the Reformation by Henry VIII.; the peaceful union of the crowns of England and Scotland under one sovereign, James I., by virtue of his descent from Henry VII., whose great-grandson he was (1603); the beheading of his son Charles I. (1649), and the establishment of the Commonwealth; the Restoration of monarchy under Charles II. (1660); the Revolution, in which James II. lost his crown, and was succeeded by his daughter Mary, with her husband, William, Prince of Orange; the accession of George I., Elector of Hanover, the first of the present reigning family, who came to the throne (1714) by virtue of his descent from James I., whose great-grandson he was; and the union between Great Britain and Ireland, in the year 1800, from which time Ireland has ceased to have a separate legislature, and the British Islands have been denominated the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or the British Empire.

CIVIL DIVISIONS OF ENGLAND, &c.

The Saxons in England formed successively, under kings, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, small states, which were gradually reduced by conquest to three (Wessex, Mercia, Northumbria), that remained to a certain extent distinct and important after they were finally incorporated in one. The large states must necessarily have been subdivided, for military as well as civil purposes, from the earliest periods. Ingulphus affirms that Alfred divided the kingdom into counties, hundreds, and tythings, when he had an inquisition taken, which served as the model of the Domesday survey, and was digested and registered in the roll of Winchester. No trace of the roll of Winchester, however, exists, nor is there among the public records any indication that such a survey was ever known.

SHIRES.—The division of England into counties, each having an ealdorman discharging civil and military functions under the king and his council, was evidently based upon the old divisions of the country. Two small kingdoms became the counties of Kent and Sussex; the kingdom of the East Saxons became Essex and Middlesex; of the East Angles, Norfolk and Suffolk. The lands of the Wilsætan, Dorsætan, Somersætan (from sætan, settlers), became Wilts, Dorset, Somerset,—to which shire was perhaps unnecessarily added. Damnonia and Cernaw, wrung successively from the Welsh, as they retreated first beyond the Exe and then over the Tamar, were named Devonshire and Cornwall. The district of Berkshire was, it is said, so named from the character of the country. Sutherland, Surrey (southern island), was named from the town on the Thames. Another class of counties was evidently constructed on different principles; thus, the county containing Winchester, the capital of Wessex, was called Hamtūnscir, from Hamtūn, now Southampton. All the counties into which Mercia was divided were named from their large central towns, which became the county towns; thus it was with Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, &c. Lincolnshire, Yorkshire, and Durham, are also named from the county towns; Rutland, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland are not named from towns, but, like the counties in the south, from the people and the locality,—after the analogy of England, Scotland, Ireland.

The shire is an important subdivision of the kingdom, and each shire has numerous officers: (1) a lord lieutenant, who is also (2) custos-rotulorum, or keeper of the archives, except in counties of cities ; (3) a sheriff, who appoints (4) an under-sheriff ; (5) justices of the peace, all appointed by the crown ; (6) a county treasurer, and (7) a clerk of the peace, generally an attorney, who is appointed by the custos-rotulorum ; (8) the county coroners are elected by the freeholders, as (9) the knights of the shires were formerly. The revenue of the shires is chiefly derived from rates, which are struck by the justices of the peace at quarter sessions. The rates, which were formerly collected by the high constables (or constables of hundreds), are directed, under 7 and 8 Vic. c. 93, to be collected by the Boards of Guardians, and to be paid by them to the county treasurer. The county expenditure is chiefly incurred in maintaining bridges, gaols, police, prisoners, lunatic asylums, and the various county officers ; some of whom are paid, although the majority of the offices are honorary, and are discharged gratuitously.

TRYTHING OR RIDING.—Next to the shire came the trything or riding, a term which implies a third part ; a mode of division in England now peculiar to Yorkshire, but common to Lincolnshire and some other counties in the Anglo-Saxon era. The chief magistrate was called the trything-man, or lathgrieve, and presided over three, four, or more hundreds, formed into what was called a trything, in some places a lathe, and in other places a rape. Hence we have the lathes of Kent, the rapes of Sussex, the parts of Lincoln, and the trythings or ridings of Yorkshire.

HUNDREDS.—Subdivisions of the shires have existed since the age of Alfred, and hundreds, tythings, and hides are named in the early Saxon laws, charters, and other records. The notices are, however, by no means precise, nor are they all consistent, either with themselves or with what is found to exist of the ancient divisions in later times. The simplest view may be thus stated: England was divided into hides, about 274,950 in number ; and a hide of land, containing 100 or 120 acres, supported a free family ; ten such free families constituted a tything ; ten or twelve tythings a hundred ; an indefinite number of hundreds a shire. The hundred is used in the Domesday return (1086) as a well-defined territorial division of the county. The hundred in East Anglia consisted of twelve leets (peoples) grouped by threes in four head-leets ; and the hypothesis, that the hundred generally should contain twelve tythings, each of which had a head-man, tything-man, and the twelve tything-men of the hundred a foreman or hundred-man at its head, meeting in court twelve times a year, represents the Teutonic and northern theory of this institution as accurately, perhaps, as any other that has been proposed. In this hypothesis, England should have been divided into 2,268 hundreds, and 27,156 tythings ; districts undoubtedly of a convenient size for many administrative purposes, and agreeing closely with the number of sub-districts (2,007) and enumeration districts (27,884) into which the country has been divided for the purpose of registration and of taking the census.

In naming the districts corresponding to hundreds in Yorkshire, Lincolnshire, and Nottinghamshire, the term "hundred" was abandoned, and "wapentake" was used ; and in the four northern counties of Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland, and Westmoreland, we find "ward" used for the same purpose. This naming is supposed to have arisen from the warding or guarding necessary in that part of the country against the frequent incursions of the Scots. There is another peculiarity in the northern counties ; the parishes, like those of Scotland, are seven or eight times as large as the parishes of the southern counties of England. The hundred-man above mentioned was the captain of his hundred in the time of war, as well as their civil magistrate in time of peace; and for the performance of his duties, he received one-third of all the fines imposed in his court. The court commonly met once every month, and all the members, in imitation of their German ancestors, came to it in arms; a custom from which it obtained the name of the wapentac or wapentake. At the beginning of each meeting, all the members touched with their spears that of the hundred-man, in token of their acknowledging his authority and being ready to fight under his command. In these courts the archdeacon, and sometimes the bishop, presided with the hundred-man, and both civil and ecclesiastical affairs were taken cognizance of in them. The hundred courts did not possess the power of inflicting capital punishments, and an appeal lay from them to the trything, the next superior court.

SESSIONAL DIVISIONS.—The divisions existing in all the counties of England and Wales, for the purposes of special and petty sessions, are in general based on the hundreds and other ancient county subdivisions. By the authority of various Acts of Parliament, the justices at quarter sessions may alter and re-arrange these sessional divisions, and they are empowered to adopt the same limits as those of poor law unions. In the exercise of these powers the justices have occasionally transferred parishes and places from one division to another, and for the convenience of the constables or of the public, annexed such parishes to others in a particular hundred of the division to which they have been assigned. By this transference, the parishes thus dealt with for a special purpose have come to be considered, for all purposes whatever, parts of the hundreds to which they have been added, and have thenceforward been deemed as much part of the hundred as any of the other parishes which may have been named as belonging to it in the Domesday survey. It seems clear, however, that while the justices have full power to divide the counties in any manner which they may think expedient for the convenience of holding sessions, they possess no authority to alter the ancient hundreds. That in practice a different view is taken in some counties is sufficiently obvious from the returns of the clerks of the peace. For the purposes of assize and gaol delivery, there are in England and Wales eight circuits of the judges, besides the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court at London. The circuits are known as the Home, Midland, Norfolk, Oxford, Northern, Western, North Wales, and South Wales circuits, and include the counties situated in the parts of the country implied by their names.

MUNICIPAL CITIES AND BOROUGHS.—On the invasion of England by the Anglo-Saxons, “the woods” were no longer “the towns” of the natives. The Britons had been collected in cities, polished but subjugated by the Roman legionaries, who lived in villas, on taxes which their publicans collected. As the Roman towns still existed, some of their forms and institutions may have remained, and have impressed on the populations of London, York, and other cities, some modification of the national institutions of the Anglo-Saxons and Scandinavians. Those modifications can, however, rarely be traced. The condition and circumstances were no longer the same in the fertile, cultivated soil of England as they had been on the western shores of the continent, and the new races adapted themselves to the change; but their relations to each other, to their families, and to their princes, required free institutions of a character very different from the provincial organisation of the declining Roman empire. The Saxon borough was a modification of the hundred; the burgesses were freemen bound to each other as neighbours, responsible for each other to surrounding communities, sharing common burdens, classified further in guilds of trades, or companies, which sprang up with the divisions of labour, and banded firmly-together for the defence of their walls and dwellings. "It must be clearly understood," observes one the ablest of our constitutional historians, "that a Saxon burgh was nothing more than a hundred, or an assemblage of hundreds, surrounded by a moat, a stockade, or a wall; and the name of the hundred was actually given to some of the most considerable cities, burghs, and towns of England. No right was conferred or destroyed by the feeble fortification which protected the burgesses; and the jurisdiction of the burgh-moote, or port-moote, differed from that possessed by the analogous districts in the open country, only in consequence of the police required by a more condensed population, and the institutions, perhaps of Roman origin, which incorporated the trading portions of the community; all of which were extraneous to the primitive territorial jurisdiction of the burgh, and in no respect affecting its constitutional existence or nature."

The eleven cities of London, Bristol, Canterbury, Chester, Exeter, Gloucester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, York, and the five towns of Kingston-upon-Hull, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham, Poole, Southampton, in England; and two, Caermarthen and Haverfordwest, in Wales—are "counties of themselves;" as was also the city of Coventry till lately. The cities on the old Roman sites maintained their independence of the country around them, as well as of the early Saxon kingdoms, to a larger extent than other towns, as is indicated by their independent county jurisdiction.

Some of the ancient boroughs fell into decay, new boroughs sprang up in other parts of the country, many towns were created boroughs for purposes not now very intelligible, and with the rapid increase of population which commenced after 1750, and has gone on for nearly a century—through three successive generations—the houses have spread beyond the limits of the old boroughs and cities. In 1835, a great change was made in their constitution, and the limits of many were enlarged by the adoption of the new boundaries, settled for the purposes of parliamentary elections, after an inquiry by commissioners into the circumstances of each place. The affairs of municipal boroughs are administered by councils, elected in the several wards—by a mayor and aldermen, elected out of the council—auditors and assessors, elected by the burgesses—a treasurer and a town-clerk, appointed by the council. Such functionaries exist in every reformed borough; others may be appointed. Justices of the peace may be appointed by the queen: so may salaried police magistrates, and a recorder, after petition by the council to the crown. There are coroners of the borough. The control of the police, the administration of justice, the lighting and paving of the streets, and other local functions, are in the hands of the corporations. The burgesses and householders, in many municipal boroughs, elect burgesses by majorities to serve in Parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY BOROUGHs.—There were, in March, 1851, 200 cities, boroughs, and districts of boroughs in England and Wales, sending members to Parliament, and 21 burghs, or districts of burghs, in Scotland. St. Albans, disfranchised since 1851, is included in the English boroughs.

MANORS AND THEIR DISTRIBUTION.—After his accession, in 1066, the Conqueror seized, besides the crown lands, the lands of the Anglo-Saxon, or Danish proprietors, who fell in the battle of Hastings, and, in the course of his reign, acquired the estates of many rebellious thanes. He distributed a large portion of these lands, as the pay of past and future services, among the chieftains in his army, who retained large domains for themselves, and distributed the rest, on similar terms, among the officers and men under their command. The estates of the church, and of the chief monasteries also, passed into the hands of the Norman clergy. The tenants who held immediately of the king, including ecclesiastical corporations, amounted to 1,400, the under tenants to 7,871, at the time of the great survey (A.D. 1086), which exhibits an apparently new division of the country into manors. In the Domesday record, the kingdom is divided into the lands (terras) of the king, bishops, and tenants in chief (tenentes terras), and these again into manors, under the respective hundreds, which generally included the whole or parts of several manors. Villa was another term for manor (manerium) or lordship; and in the Exeter Domesday, mansio is almost constantly used for manerium. The manor was what Bede had called the "place" (locus), in the midst of which the churches were built, or the old temples had stood; the village and surrounding neighbourhood, where the people lived for the sake of society and of defence, with their headman or thane, dwelling in his capacious hall, built of wood by the bondmen from his demesne, covered with reeds and straw, or a roof of wooden shingles, through which the smoke from the hearth ascended. This hall often became a stone mansion, and the home of the chief tenant a castle, in the period immediately following the Norman Conquest. The kingdom was held securely; there was a military chief and a strong post in every parish of the country, surrounded by 60,215 knights in the possession of as many fees or portions of territory.

ECCLESIASTICAL DIVISIONS.—The division of the country into Dioceses, Archdeaconries, Deaneries, and Parishes, took place in very early times. Most of the present bishoprics were founded in the Anglo-Saxon period: originally there were three archbishoprics—of Canterbury, York, and Caerleon, in Wales; these were subsequently reduced to the two former, the territory of the latter being annexed to the province of Canterbury. Most of the dioceses, on their first formation, had their limits co-extensive with the boundaries of the various Anglo-Saxon kingdoms; sub-divisions soon, however, were discovered to be requisite,—and the council of Hertford, convened by Archbishop Theodore, decreed that as the faithful grew to be more numerous, the number of the sees should also be increased. The first sub-division was made by this prelate in the diocese of York; and afterwards repeated alterations were made from time to time, until at length the whole arrangement settled into its existing shape, excepting the additions made by Henry VIII., and by the recent Acts of Parliament. Henry, with a portion of the proceeds of the confiscated monasteries, founded seven new bishoprics, viz:—Gloucester, Bristol, Peterborough, Oxford, Westminster, Chester, and Man. The bishopric of Westminster, however, only lasted until 1550, when it was again incorporated with the see of London; and the act of 6 and 7, William IV., cap. 77, united into one the sees of Gloucester and Bristol, and created two additional,—Manchester and Ripon. By this statute, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners were authorised to alter the limits of nearly all the rest, by effecting a transference of parishes from one to another, with a view to the more convenient distribution of territory and population.

ARCHDEACONRIES.—The archdeacons anciently were only members of chapters without territorial jurisdiction. The assignment of specific limits for archdeaconries took place soon after the Conquest. The act of 6 and 7 William IV., cap. 77, gives powers to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to re-arrange the boundaries of the ancient, and to form certain new, archdeaconries. The new ones formed in exercise of this authority, are Bristol, Maidstone, Monmouth, Westmoreland, Manchester, Lancaster, and Craven.

DEANERIES.—These were recognised ecclesiastical divisions of a diocese in Saxon times. They seem to have been designed to correspond with hundreds in the political division of the country, as archdeaconries were possibly intended to correspond with counties. The etymology of the word (Decanus) favours this idea, and it is not improbable that all such deaneries originally embraced districts with ten churches, and no more: their boundaries, once settled, have never been disturbed, though increase of population caused an increase in the number of religious edifices.

PARISHES.—The ancient primary division of the land, for spiritual purposes, was exclusively into Parishes; but, in the course of time, as population increased, certain portions of particular parishes came to be assigned by custom to the newly established places of worship; and these at length, under the name of Chapelries, acquired boundaries as definite and generally recognised as those of the parent parish. This is especially the case in the more northern counties, where the parishes being of very large extent, while the population has increased with great rapidity, the need for such a further sub-division soon became apparent. The number of such chapelries throughout England and Wales is not exactly ascertainable, but it must be very considerable. In more modern times many other districts have been originated by the force of similar circumstances, without, however, having obtained, by custom or otherwise, any legally recognised boundaries. These conventional districts are generally created, upon the erection of a new church in any populous parish, by private arrangement between the rector or vicar of the mother church, and the incumbent of the new benefice, and are formed solely for the purpose of securing a more effective spiritual oversight of the entire population.

EXTRA-PAROCHIAL PLACES—which ought no longer to exist as such—are places, as the term implies, included in no parish; and are usually found to have been the site of religious houses, or of ancient castles, the owners of which did not permit any interference with their authority within their own limits; and in early times the existence of such exemptions from the general government of the kingdom is not surprising. In the language of the ancient law of England they were not geldable, nor shire ground; and as the sheriff was then the receiver-general in his own county, extra-parochial places were not taxable, nor within the ordinary pale of civil jurisdiction; and the inhabitants are still virtually exempt from many civil duties and offices, served not without inconvenience by others, for the benefit of the community at large.

CHANGES IN THE ANCIENT SUB-DIVISIONS OF THE COUNTY.—The counties of England have undergone considerable changes. The observance in Wales of peculiar laws and customs, combined with the use of another language by the people, naturally tended to maintain, in a marked manner, the distinctions which still exist in a less degree, between the inhabitants of the Principality, and those of England. In the reign of Henry VIII., considerable changes were effected in the Welsh counties, as well as in those bordering upon Wales. Under the Reform Act, the number of knights of the shire has been increased; an additional member has been given to each seven counties; each of twenty-five other counties has been divided into two parts, each of which is entitled to return two members, instead of the two previously returned for the entire county. The following counties have been thus divided for the purpose of returning members to Parliament:—

Cheshire	Kent	Staffordshire
Cornwall	Lancashire	Suffolk
Cumberland	Leicestershire	Surrey
Derbyshire	Norfolk	Sussex
Devonshire	Northamptonshire	Warwickshire
Durham	Northumberland	Wiltshire
Essex	Nottinghamshire	Worcestershire
Gloucestershire	Shropshire
Hampshire	Somersetshire

Yorkshire and Lincolnshire also return additional members: the three ridings having been adopted as the sub-divisions of the former county, and the parts of Lindsey and those of Kesteven and Holland, for the latter. A bill was introduced into Parliament, and received the royal assent, 6th August, 1844, under which every detached part of a county in England and Wales has become, since the 20th October, 1844, for all purposes, part of the county in which it is situated. Under this act the county of Durham has lost 64,389 acres, and 19,035 persons in Bedlingtonshire, Norhamshire, and Islandshire, all of which have been gained by Northumberland, while it sustained the additional loss of Craike, with 2,799 acres, and 608 persons, now added to Yorkshire.

ORIGIN OF TITHES.—About the year 690, Ina, king of the West Saxons, made a code of laws, the fourth section of which is to the following purport:—“The first-fruits of seeds, or church dues, arising from the product of corn, &c., are to be paid at the feast of St. Martin, and let him that fails in the payment forfeit 40s.,” as Lambert reads it; or, according to Sir Henry Spelman, 60s.; and, besides, pay the dues twelve times over. In section 62nd, “Church dues are to be paid where the person owing them dwells in the midst of winter.” These laws appear to be the first on record respecting such maintenance for the church, and, on this account, are mentioned here. The gifts and oblations which the primitive Christians, in their devotedness and zeal for religion, made as acts of piety, were transformed by usage and custom, into a right, and are now advanced into the firmer title of ordinance. Hence modern lawyers say, that tithes are due of common right, as having existed since the first establishment of churches, and made regular from the division of parochial limits.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY; FIRST FRUITS AND TENTHS.—From a very early period, every bishop and clergyman has been required to pay the amount of his first year's incumbency into a fund, called from thence “First Fruits,” and every succeeding year as long as he is in possession of his living, he has been required to pay one-tenth part of his income into a fund, hence called “The Tenths.” In 1290, a valuation for this purpose was made of all the ecclesiastical livings in England, and the book containing that record is preserved in the Remembrancer's office, under the title of “Valor of Pope Nicholas IV.” At the time of the Reformation there was a law passed, that the first-fruits and tenths should be applied to the use of the state, and that any bishop or clergyman neglecting to pay these imposts into the public treasury, should be declared an intruder into his living, and should forfeit double the amount; and in order to ascertain the full amount, an accurate and full valuation was made of all the ecclesiastical livings in England and Wales. Except during a short period in the reign of Philip and Mary, the first-fruits and tenths continued to be paid into the public exchequer, till the reign of Queen Anne, who, deploring the wretched condition of many of the poor clergy, owing to the insufficiency of their livings, determined that the first-fruits and tenths of the livings of all the bishops and clergy should be paid into a fund called "Queen Anne's Bounty," and that the amount should be appropriated to the augmentation of the livings of the poor clergy. As there was no fresh valuation instituted in the time of Queen Anne, the first-fruits and tenths continued to be paid according to that made by Henry VIII., in 1535, and which was registered in what was called the King's Book, Liber Regis, to which we shall frequently have to refer in the accounts of church livings, at subsequent pages. That this payment might not operate oppressively, the first year's income was to be paid by four annual instalments, and all livings of small value were entirely exempt, and hence called discharged livings. The annual account, published early in 1855, shows that the receipts of the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty for the year 1853, amounted to £212,341, and the disbursements to £213,398. Of the receipts, £13,666 accrued from first-fruits and tenths, £20,986 from benefactions for the augmentation of livings, £74,232 from dividends from capital stock, £43,404 from instalments in part liquidation of advances on mortgages, £23,341 from endowment trust money, and £12,525 from sale of land. Of the disbursements £71,529 was paid to the clergy, £14,416 paid for purchase of houses and lands, £24,417 paid for the erection of residents' houses, £44,666 advanced in loans to build, &c., glebe houses, and £51,168 paid for the purchase of stock for general purposes. The valuation of all the benefices within the limits of this work, and in the Commissioners' Report of 1835, will be shown in the histories of the parishes and chapelries in the county.

POOR LAWS.—Judge Blackstone says, the poor laws are founded on the principles of civil society, and when the lands became property, they carried with them the charge of providing for the destitute. The proprietors of land, under the feudal system, provided for the poor; and when Christianity was introduced, each proprietor gave a tenth part of his produce to the church, one-fourth of which tithe was appropriated for the support of the indigent. This was the state of things when Henry VIII. suppressed the monasteries and confiscated their property, part of which, as has been seen, was the real bona fide property of the destitute. The poor, then, deprived of their ancient rights, were left in a state of the utmost destitution, which distressful circumstance obliged Queen Elizabeth to impose poor's rates on all occupiers of land, houses, and other property. The New Poor Law was passed in 1834; and the average annual amount paid for the three previous years was, £5,332,904. In the year 1841, the amount was £4,028,287; in 1842, £4,172,018; in 1843, £4,406,088. During the year 1851-52, the poor-rate was assessed in the following manner:—On land, including farm houses, £2,707,527; on houses, including warehouses and factories, £3,124,526; on tithes, £295,056; coal mines, £61,191; saleable underwoods, £28,524; canals, £28,471; railways, £204,871; other property, £102,032. The whole amount raised by local rates in England and Wales, during the same period, was as follows:—poor-rate, £6,552,298; highway rate, £1,662,575; county rate and county police rate, £820,134; borough rate, £509,028; land tax, £1,130,917; total, £10,674,962; to which must be added church-rates, an item which would probably not do much more than raise the amount to £11,000,000; but by some strange negligence, the return from which these figures are taken omits to include church-rates.

POPULATION AND OTHER STATISTICS FROM THE MOST AUTHENTIC SOURCES.—The area of England is 50,922 square miles; Scotland, 31,324; Ireland, 32,445; Wales, 7,398; the islands in the British seas, 394; making a total of 122,483 square miles. The following table shows the distribution of the soil of Great Britain in statute acres:—

	Arable and Gardens.	Meadows, Pastures, & Marshes.	Wastes capable of Improve- ment.	Incapable of Im- provement.	Total in Statute Acres.
England ...	10,252,800	15,379,200	3,454,000	3,256,400	32,342,400
Wales .....	890,570	2,226,430	530,000	1,105,000	4,752,000
Scotland ....	2,493,050	2,771,050	5,950,000	8,523,930	19,738,930
British Islands	109,630	274,060	106,000	569,460	1,110,150
Totals ....	13,746,950	20,650,740	10,500,000	13,454,790	57,952,480

The number of farms in England is 225,818; the average size is 111 acres; but there are 771 of above 1,000 acres. The large holdings abound in the north-eastern and eastern counties; the small farms in the north. There are 2,000 English farmers holding nearly 2,000,000 acres; and there are 97,000 English farmers not holding more. In 1692 the rental of land was estimated at 10 millions; in 1770 it was valued at 16 millions, and the land was found to be held by 280,000 persons. In 1815, the value of landed rental, found by assessment, exceeded 51 millions, and the holders were no more than 36,000. In 1842-3, an increase of 34½ millions had accrued to the landholders, and the value was stated at £94,816,269, including property in houses. A calculation has been made of the national losses by the device of the land-tax; it is founded on Sir Robert Peel's estimate of the rental at 72 millions. In the 78 years from 1692 to 1770, the average rental was 35 millions; but from 1770 to 1847, the average was 66 millions.

Parliamentary statistical reports for 1854 have been published, and it appears that the following numbers of acres under tillage for corn, in England and Wales (to say nothing of Ireland and Scotland), was, Wheat, 3,807,846 acres; Barley, 2,667,776; Oats, 1,302,782; Rye, 73,731, making a grand total of 7,852,135, say 8,000,000 acres, by including all kinds of seeds. It thus follows, that at this moderate computation, one peck per acre only, 2,000,000 bushels are actually destroyed by birds, &c., every year!

Tin .....	Tons	5,763	£690,000
Copper .....	"	14,102	1,330,872
Lead .....	"	64,006	1,472,115
Silver .....	Ozs.	700,000	192,500
Iron (pig) .....	Tons	3,069,888	9,500,000
Coal (at pits) ....	"	64,661,401	14,975,000
Zinc .....	—	—	16,500
Arsenic, sulphur ores, and sundry minerals .....	—	—	500,000
Total .....	—	—	£28,705,987

Making the total value of the mineral produce of England, Wales, Ireland, and Scotland, equal to £28,705,987 per annum.

The following table exhibits the population of Great Britain and of the Islands in the British Seas, including the army, navy, and merchant seamen, abroad as well as at home, at the six undermentioned periods :

Date of the Enumeration.	Great Britain and Islands in the British Seas.	England and Wales.	Scotland.	Islands in the British Seas.
March 10, 1801	10,917,493	9,156,171	1,678,452	82,810
May 27, 1811 ..	12,424,120	10,454,529	1,884,044	85,547
May 28, 1821 ..	14,402,643	12,172,664	2,137,325	92,654
May 29, 1831 ..	16,564,138	14,051,986	2,405,610	106,542
June 7, 1841 ..	18,813,786	16,035,198	2,652,330	126,249
March 31, 1851	21,121,067	18,054,170	2,022,362	145,435

In 1851, there were in Great Britain and the Islands in the British Seas 3,670,192 inhabited houses, 166,735 uninhabited, and 29,194 in process of erection, making a total of 3,866,121 houses. The number of the male population of Great Britain at the same period was 10,386,048 ; of the female population, 10,735,919 ; the females exceeded the males by 349,871, and the males at home were 10,223,558, consequently the females exceeded by 512,361 the males in Great Britain. To every 100,000 females the males were 96,741, including 1,538 males abroad, the exclusion of whom leaves 95,203 males at home. In 1851, there were to every 20 males at home 21 females. The estimated population of England and Wales, in 1854, was 18,617,800 ; the number of births, 684,506 ; of deaths, 498,239 ; and of marriages, 159,000.

The following table gives the number of inhabited houses and the number of families in Great Britain, at each census, from 1801 to 1851 inclusive ; also the number of persons to a house, and the number of persons to a family :

Years.	Inhabited Houses.	Families.	Persons to a House.	Persons to a Family.
1801 ....	1,870,476	2,200,802	5.614	4.615
1811 ....	2,101,597	2,544,216	5.696	4.705
1821 ....	2,429,630	2,941,983	5.800	4.791
1831 ....	2,850,937	3,414,175	5.704	4.763
1841 ....	3,446,797	(no returns)	5.877	(no returns.)
1851 ....	3,648,347	4,312,388	5.706	4.825

NOTE.—This table does not include the Islands in the British Seas.

It will be seen by the foregoing table that the number of inhabited houses in Great Britain has nearly doubled in the last half century, and that upwards of two millions of new families have been founded ; the number of persons to a house has increased from 5.6 to 5.7 ; consequently, the increase in the number of houses has not quite kept pace with the population. The increase in the number of persons to a family, in the same period, has been from 4·6 to 4·8.

TURNPIKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—During the Roman possession of Britain, the conquerors of the world constructed direct roads, with bold cuttings, and solid terraces, worked in cement and stone, founded on piles where the soil was marshy, raised upon piers where it was necessary to gain elevation; and over these for five centuries of Roman dominion, moved the legions of the mighty empire,

“In coat of mail, and military pride.”

Then succeeded the fierce strifes of the Heptarchy—the devastations of the Dane—the plunder of the Norman—the struggle between the crown and the barons—the wars of England and Scotland—the battles of the Roses;—during each of which epochs the country made slight advances, if any, in the real business of civilisation, as compared with the Roman period. With the Tudor dynasty came comparative quiet, and, with quiet, increased commercial intercourse. In the reign of Elizabeth we have the following roads, and it is remarkable how little appears to have been added to the means of internal communication since the days of the Roman roads. Indeed, with a few exceptions, the Roman roads appear to have determined the great highways of the sixteenth century. We will briefly describe them:—1. From the south-east coast there was the road from Dover to London. 2. From the south-west coast there was a road from the extreme point of Cornwall to Exeter, by Launceston and Okehampton, and thence to London by Shaftesbury and Salisbury. 3. There were two roads from Norfolk and Suffolk to London—one from Walsingham, by Newmarket, till it joined the north road near Royston; the other from Yarmouth to Ipswich, Colchester, and Chelmsford. 4. From South Wales to London; there was a road from St. Davids, by Caermarthen and Hay to Gloucester, and thence by Cirencester, Farringdon, Abingdon, Henley, and Maidenhead, where it united with, 5. The road from London to Bristol, by Reading, Marlborough, and Chippenham. The northern roads constituted the longest and most important lines. They were—6. The road from London to Cockermouth, by St. Albans, Dunstable, Daventry, Coventry, Lichfield, Stone, Warrington, Preston, Lancaster, Kendal, and Kewswick; 7. The road from London to Berwick, by Ware, Huntingdon, Stamford, Grantham, Newark, York, Darlington, Durham, Newcastle, Morpeth, Alnwick, and Belford; 8. The road from North Wales,—from Caernarvon to Conway and Chester, and thence to Newcastle-under-Lyne, where it joined the road from London to Cockermouth. There were, in addition to these eight great lines, the road from London to Oxford, by Uxbridge; and the road from London to Cambridge, by Saffron Walden.

The first law for making turnpike roads in England, was enacted in 1663 (15th Charles II.), and the first tollgate was erected in 1679, on the London and Harwich road. From the days of the first turnpike a whole century appears to have passed before any very great improvements were effected in the roads, or in the vehicles travelling upon them. Mr. McCulloch says “It was not till after the peace of Paris, in 1763, that turnpike roads began to be extended to all parts of the kingdom; and that the means of internal communication began, in consequence, to be signally improved.” Mr. Porter, in an article contributed to “The Companion to the Almanac,” 1837, speaks of the condition of a road only thirty-six miles from London, about the same

In 1839, the turnpike roads of England and Wales amounted to 21,962 miles, and in Scotland, to 3,666 miles; while in England and Wales, the other highways amounted to 104,772 miles. The turnpike roads were maintained at an expense of a million pounds a year; and the parish highways at a cost of about twelve hundred thousand pounds. There was at that time nearly eight thousand toll-gates in England and Wales. There had been two thousand miles of turnpike roads, and ten thousand miles of other highways added to the number existing in 1814. But great improvements had been effected in all our roads during that period. Science was brought to bear upon the turnpike lines, while common sense changed their form and reorganised the material of which they were composed. The most beautiful engineering was applied to raise valleys and lower hills. Mountains were crossed with ease; rivers were spanned over massive piers, or by bridges which hung in the air like "fairy platforms." But the great revolution of the age was at hand; and the "iron roads" of Britain started into existence. Enthusiasts have been amongst us, who held that the words of the prophet Ezekiel, "And I looked, and behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire," were meant to foreshadow railway locomotion. With this interpretation we have no intention to meddle; but one with no pretensions to prophecy gave us some poetical elements of the Railway long before such matters had any existence in this country. Southey, in his "Curse of Kehama," shadowed out a dark hint for the practical genius of Stephenson, when he described "The car of Miracle," which

"Their way was through the adamantine rock :
 Its massive walls arose, and overhead
 Arch'd the long passage."

Such visions were foreign to Southey's imagination; but he had somewhat of that universal sense called poetry, in this case adopted from the legends which have been current from the earliest times.

From a parliamentary return relative to the traffic on railways, just published, it appears that in the whole of the United Kingdom there were, on the 31st of December, 1854, 8,053 miles of railway open, against 7,641 on the 31st of December, 1853. The gross total number of passengers was 60,839,303 against 57,206,844 in 1853. The grand total receipts from all passengers, in the half-year ending December 31, 1854, was £5,082,284, against £4,821,685 in the corresponding half-year of 1853. The receipts from horses, carriages, luggage, and mails were £564,890, against £537,954 in 1853; and those from general goods, cattle, and minerals, £5,143,044, against £4,485,949 in 1853; making a grand total receipt for the half-year ended the 31st December, 1854, of £10,791,121, against £9,844,690 in the corresponding half-year of 1853. The aggregate number of miles travelled by all classes of passengers in England and Wales during the said half-year, was 778,794,849½, — viz. 144,880,306½ miles by first-class, and 254,638,201½ by second-class, 112,294,364 by third-class, and 266,972,977½ by parliamentary passengers. In Scotland the total mileage of all passengers was 85,954,509½. In Ireland the total mileage of all passengers was 53,040,168. In England and Wales, during the half-year ending on the 31st December, 1854, the total number of passengers conveyed on 6,112 miles of railroad then open for traffic amounted to 50,358,180, of whom 6,639,248 were first-class passengers; 17,772,791½ second-class; 9,049,706 third-class; 8,672 periodical ticket-holders; and 16,899,762½ parliamentary-train passengers. In Scotland, during the same half-year, the total number of passengers conveyed on 1,043 miles of railroad then open amounted to 6,603,150½, of whom 782,080 were first-class, 1,041,065 second-class, 839,461½ third-class, 2,199 season-ticket-holders, and 4,027,911 parliamentarians. In Ireland the total number of passengers that travelled on 897 miles of railway open on the 31st of December, 1854, during the half-year then ended, was 3,787,960½, of whom 485,676 were first-class, 1,536,107 second-class, 405,941 third-class, 2,407½ season-ticket-holders, and 1,357,895 parliamentarians. It further appears from an elaborate statement of the capital and revenue of railways in the United Kingdom for the second half-year of 1854, compiled from official documents by Mr. J. S. Yeats, that the total capital expended on railways in operation, on the 31st of December, 1854, was £279,315,846, and on the 30th of June, 1854, was £272,182,087, showing an increase of £7,133,759 in the six months. The interest and dividend charged against the revenue of railways in the United Kingdom for the year 1854 amounted to £10,622,483, being at the rate of £3 16s. 11½d. per cent. There were twenty-two railways, upon whose ordinary capital no dividend was paid.

EARLY MANUFACTURES.

The woollen manufacture was first introduced into Britain by the Romans, who, as Camden informs us, had their imperial weaving houses in the City of Worcester, where they made both woollen and linen cloth for the emperor and his army. The Flemings were the first to distinguish themselves in the art of weaving, and Flanders and the Netherlands began to obtain some degree of celebrity in the manufacture of woollen goods about the beginning of the tenth century, previous to which time there were scarcely any mercantile men in Europe, except a few in the wealthy republics of Italy, and these traded with the Indian caravans of the Levant. Baldwin III., Earl of Flanders, perceiving the great advantages likely to result to his subjects from this manufacture, encouraged it by establishing weekly markets and annual fairs. Lord Chief Justice Hale says, that the woollen manufacture flourished in England in the reigns of Henry II., and of Richard I., and that these monarchs enacted laws requiring woollen cloths to be made of uniform breadths. There was also a charter by Henry II. to the citizens of London, which required "that if any cloth were to be found made of Spanish wool, mixed with English wool, the mayor should see it burnt." Ancient guilds were erected in many of the principal cities and towns in England, and a tax of a mark was laid on every sack of wool exported; but notwithstanding these prohibitory measures, the greater portion of the wool purchased in England continued to be exported to the Netherlands, and was such a source of wealth, as to occasion the Duke of Burgundy to establish the Order of the Golden Fleece.

Edward III., with the view of encouraging the establishment in his kingdom of an extensive woollen manufacture, which, in consequence of the troublesome wars of the reigns of King John, Henry III., and the two first Edwards, had declined, raised the export duty to forty shillings per sack on wool, and forty shillings on every hundred wool fells. He next encouraged weavers, dyers, and cloth makers, from Flanders and the Netherlands, and from any foreign parts, to come over to England, and that fit places should be assigned to them, with divers privileges. Seventy families accepted the invitation in the year 1337, and numbers followed soon after. About 1352, an additional impulse was given to this manufacture by the arrival in England of numerous Flemish artisans, who, from the encouragement still held out to them from the politic Edward, accompanied Lord de la Warre on his return from the wars in Flanders. Fuller in his Church History of this period, says, that many of the manufacturers of the Netherlands, bemoaning their own slavish condition and their indifferent wages, determined to bring over the mystery to England. "At home their fare was coarse and their accommodation wretched, but here they expected to feed on fat beef and mutton, till nothing but their fullness should stint their stomachs,—that they should enjoy a proportionable share of profit to themselves, and that their beds should be good and their bed fellows better, seeing the richest yeoman in England would not disdain to marry their daughters to them." These glowing expectations were in a great measure realised, and under the fostering hand of Edward, the workers in woollen were encouraged and spread over the country. In the north of England, they choose the counties of York, Westmoreland, and Lancaster. Their fabrics were known by the names of "Halifax cloth," "Kendal cloth," and "Manchester cottons," but the cottons of this period were made from the fleece of the sheep, and three centuries had to elapse before the vegetable fibre, cotton, which has wrought such commercial revolutions, was used as the raw material for the draperies of Lancashire. The Kendal cloths are mentioned in 1390, as not being subject to the statute of assize of lengths and breadths. Kendal seems to have given name to the buckram or green druggets in which the poor of London were clothed in the days of Shakspeare, who makes the humorous Falstaff say, "But as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal green, came at my back and let drive at me," The celebrated de Watt, in his description of the state of England, prior to the reign of Edward III., says, "Before the tumults had removed the weaving trade to England, the Netherlands could deal well enough with that kingdom, the English being only shepherds and wool merchants, and their king received few other imposts but from wool exported." At the close of the sixteenth century, Wheeler says, "the Company of Merchant Adventurers in England annually exported 60,000 white cloths, besides coloured ones of all sorts, short and long kerseys, bays, cottons, northern dozens, and divers other kinds of course woollens, the white cloths alone being worth £60,000. Down to the middle of the last century woollens were considered the staple of British commerce; and we find the writers of that period adverting with much uneasiness to the encroachments which Spain, France, and even Portugal were making on the woollen manufacture, the sole stay of the nation as they seemed to consider it; and the manufacturers of Ireland were regarded as such dangerous rivals, that it was proposed to prohibit them from exporting their goods to foreign countries or to England. In 1699, an act was passed prohibiting the exportation of woollen manufactures from Ireland, except to a few parts of England and Wales, where the duties imposed amounted to a total prohibition; and several addresses were presented to the king and parliament, "beseeching his majesty to take effectual measures to prevent the growth of the woollen manufactures in Ireland."

ERA OF INVENTION.—THE COTTON EPOCH.—We come now to the period of the "cotton revolution," which, as Mr. Baines truly observes, "presents a spectacle unparalleled in the annals of industry, whether we regard the suddenness of its growth, the magnitude which it has attained, or the wonderful inventions to which its progress is to be ascribed. Within the memory of many now living, those machines have been brought into use, which have made as great a revolution as the art of printing effected in literature. Within the same period, the cotton manufacture of this country has obtained a greater extent than the manufactures of woollens and linen combined, though these have existed for centuries." From the commencement of the middle of the eighteenth century, an unprecedented activity in the domestic manufacture of both sheep and cotton wool presented itself. The age of mechanical improvement now dawned upon the country, and the spirit of invention was quickened by an intelligent perception of prospective advantages; but the great obstacle in the way of advancement was the want of a requisite supply of yarns to meet the increasing demand for manufactured goods. To overcome this difficulty many clever and ingenious men directed their attention to the construction of machinery, intended to increase manufactured productions by mechanical skill. Wyatt, of Birmingham, in 1730, was the inventor of the method of elongating cotton by rollers in the operation of spinning, but never had the means of bringing his invention into public notice and estimation. In 1738, John Kay, of Bury, gave to the weaver's shuttle a mechanical impulse, which superseded the necessity of throwing it by hand—and in 1760 his son, Robert Kay, invented the drop box, by means of which a weaver may use several coloured threads at one time in his shuttle. In 1767, Hargreaves completed a very important invention, which he called a Jenny, after the name of his daughter. This machine was admirably adapted to the spinning of worst yarn, requisite for the short warps spun by the water-frame, invented by Thomas Higs. Higs was deprived of the benefit of his invention by Richard, afterwards Sir Richard Arkwright, whose name will ever be associated with the annals of Lancashire, and who, from an humble barber, became the most distinguished of all the early manufacturers by the aid of machinery.

Arkwright was a resident of Bolton, where, profiting by the ingenuity of Highs and Hargreaves, he laid the foundation of his future celebrity and princely fortune. Having developed the principle of Wyatt's invention, he constructed a machine called the water-frame for spinning with rollers, and applied it most satisfactorily to the production of water twist, which was used for warps, instead of linen yarn. In 1769, Arkwright took out his first patent for spinning with rollers, and in the same year, Watt, the great improver of the steam-engine and the "master magician of the age,"—took out his patent, and "called forth in perfect control the giant force of steam, which, in defiant and unbounded strength, had baffled the skill of those who had hitherto endeavoured to subdue it without effect." Proceeding still in the career of invention and improvement, the talented and ingenious Crompton, of Bolton, produced, in 1787, the now well known spinning machine called the Mule, the distinguishing peculiarity of which is, that he united the rollers of the water-frame with the advancing and receding carriage of the Jenny, whereby he effected the attenuation and spinning of cotton to a degree of fineness that neither of the two machines could approach, and, by his invention and application, the production of fine cotton yarn, suitable for the manufacture of the finest muslin and lace, was secured. Mr. Crompton was rewarded for his invention by two private subscriptions to the amount of about £500; and afterwards, when the merits of his machine were fully established, by a grant of £5,000 from government. When the spinning mule was invented by Mr. Crompton, only 20 spindles were introduced into it, which required all the skill and talent of its inventor to manage; but, with the mechanical improvements and final perfection of it, the number of spindles appropriated to the care of one man, with a few children to assist him, extended to 200, and even to 2,000; and in some instances, when peculiar yarns are required, to nearly 4,000 spindles. The spirit of improvement was next directed to the weaving department, and did not rest till that operation, too, was performed by machinery. In 1785, a power-loom, which may be considered the parent of that now in use, was shadowed forth by Dr. Cartwright, of Doncaster, and others were subsequently invented; but that now in use, and which is constructed chiefly of iron, was invented by Mr. Horrocks, of Stockport, in 1833. It is a compact and simple machine, moving with great rapidity, and occupying so small a space that several hundreds may be worked in a single room of a large factory. These looms came so slowly into favour, that in 1813 there were no more than 2,400 of them in use; but, in 1820, their number had increased to 14,150, in 1830 to 60,000, in 1836 to about 100,000, and at present probably to more than double that number.

There probably never existed a period more fertile in useful inventions, than the latter half of the last century. It was "one of the most brilliant eras in the annals of British genius, when Black and Priestley were making their discoveries in science—when Hargreaves and Arkwright, Watt and Crompton, revolutionised the processes of manufacture—when Smeaton and Brindley executed prodigies of engineering art—when the senate was illumined by Burke and Fox, by Chatham and Mansfield—when Johnson and Goldsmith, Read and Beattie, Hume, Gibbon, and Adam Smith, adorned the walks of philosophy and letters,"—and when machinery for aiding the progress of industry were called into matured existence, with a rapidity and precision not less astonishing than beneficial. These splendid inventions, together with more recent discoveries in the chemical and mechanical sciences, have, during the last sixty or seventy years, astonishingly facilitated the growth of the cotton manufacture in all its varied arrangements, and opened a new field to enterprise and industry.

THE SILK TRADE.—The silk manufacture remained for a long time one of the most important branches of national industry, after its introduction into England in the fifteenth century. After the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, about 50,000 refugees fled to England, a large portion of whom settled in Spitalfields, and engaged in the silk manufactures; but it was not till the beginning of the eighteenth century that the manufacture of silk in its various beautiful textures, upon an extensive scale, was undertaken in this country. The art of throwing silk by means of machinery was previously possessed by the Italians, and the French excelled in the manufacture of piece goods. All attempts to rival these productions in this country were unavailing, until the year 1715, when John Lombe, an enterprising mechanic, proceeded to Italy, clandestinely investigated the whole process, and returned to England, in 1717, with plans and models, bringing with him two Italian workmen. Immediately after his arrival he went to Derby, where he built a silk mill, the first ever erected in this country. In the year 1718 he obtained a patent for fourteen years, but dying soon afterwards, his brother succeeded to the business, and subsequently transferred it to his cousin, Thomas Lombe, who continued it till the year 1792, when it is said that 900 persons were employed in the manufacture of silk fabrics. At the expiration of the patent, he made application for its renewal, but was knighted in lieu of it, and a sum of £14,000 was voted to him as a remuneration.

In plain silk weaving the process is much the same as in weaving linen or woollen, but the weaver is assisted by a machine for the even distribution of the warp, which frequently consists of eight thousand separate threads in a breadth of twenty inches. Satin derives its lustre from the greater proportion of the threads of the warp being left visible, and the piece being afterwards passed over heated cylinders. The Jacquard loom, the invention of a person of that name in Lyons, for figuring or working patterns upon various fabrics, is one of the most useful of modern inventions. When the news of Jacquard's invention was noised abroad, he was arrested and carried to Paris, with his machine, where Carnot, in the presence of Napoleon, roughly said to him, "Are you the man that pretends to do that impossibility—to tie a knot in a stretched string?" He showed that he could perform the seeming impossibility, and was rewarded by the emperor with a decoration and a pension of a thousand crowns. On his return to Lyons, far different was his destiny. The workmen broke out into open revolt; he was every where denounced as the enemy of the people, as the man who had been scheming the destruction of their trade, and the starvation of themselves and their families. Plots were made to assassinate him, and it was with great difficulty that he escaped with his life. So strong was the tide of popular opinion, that his machine was ordered to be destroyed by the public authorities, and yet the descendants of these men have since raised a statue to his memory, as one of the benefactors of the human race. Subsequently, thousands of machines, similar to that doomed to destruction, were introduced into France, and the production of silks, of the most exquisite beauty, at a low cost, was the dawn of unprecedented prosperity in that country. Such was the success of the Jacquard machine in France. Some years elapsed before it was introduced into this country, where it was first used in the manufactories of Spitalfields, then in the carpet manufactories of Scotland, and, lastly, in various manufactories of England. About the year 1685, foreign silks were freely admitted, and silks to the value of from £60,000 to £70,000 were annually imported. The present value of the silk manufacture in Great Britain is estimated at considerably more than £10,000,000 sterling.

We are far behind our continental neighbours in the art of design. The superiority of our texture is of little avail, when placed in juxtaposition with the figured productions of France, the superior beauty of which commands a decided preference. But while the British manufacturer acknowledges the superiority of the French in this particular; he contends for the possibility of bringing our manufactures to the same standard of elegance. The artists of France possess no natural advantages above our native artists—their advantages and the success derived from them, are owing, chiefly, to the pains their wise and fostering government has taken to encourage the fine arts and promote their study. Gratuitous schools of design are established at Paris, Lyons, and many of their principal towns. The town of Lyons contributes twenty thousand francs per annum to the government establishment of the School of Arts, which takes charge of every youth, who shows an aptitude for drawing or any kind of imitative design applicable to manufacture. All the eminent painters, sculptors, and even botanists and florists of Lyons, become eventually associated with the staple trade, and devote to it their happiest conceptions. In St. Peter's School, there are about one hundred and eighty students, all receiving from the town a gratuitous education in art for five years—the course of instruction embracing anatomy, botany, architecture, and loom pattern drawing. There is a botanical garden attached to the school. The government allows three thousand one hundred francs a year to this establishment, in which the students are supplied with every thing but the materials, and are allowed to receive the benefit of their works. There is one peculiar advantage in this school, worthy of special remark—in its collections of silk fabrics may be studied, extending over a period of a thousand years, with explanations of the modes in which every pattern was produced, from the rude silks of the Egyptian mummies to the last figured webs. Here are also weaving schools, containing sixty or eighty scholars. In these, a pattern being exhibited, they are required to exercise their invention immediately, as to the best means of producing the design on a piece of silk goods. Such difficulties as are occasionally encountered, being removed by the master, he leads them on to a successful accomplishment of the tasks. We may look in vain for establishments affording such advantages as these, throughout the length and breadth of the British empire. It is to be hoped our government will direct its attention to this branch of art, and apply a portion of the vast revenues of the empire, to an object so legitimate, and so intimately affecting its welfare.

The commercial greatness of Britain casts into the shade all that history has recorded of the most wealthy and enterprising nations, either of ancient or modern times. The inland traffic, of which it is difficult to estimate the value, is rich, extensive, and active; while the foreign trade extends to every accessible part of the globe. The merchant navy numbers 81,000 vessels, with a tonnage of nearly 4,000,000, and employing about 220,000 hands. Every article manufactured in the country, which will find purchasers in a foreign market, is exported, and the value is returned to the country either in goods or money.

BRITISH COLONIES AND FOREIGN POSSESSIONS.

The existing colonies and possessions of England have been settled or acquired chronologically, as follows:—Barbadoes, (our oldest colony) in 1605; Bermudas, 1609; Surat Factory, 1611; Nova Scotia, 1621; Newfoundland, 1623; Nevis, 1628; Bahamas, 1629; the Gambia and Gold Coast Forts, 1618 to 1631; Antigua, Montserrat, and St. Christopher's, 1632; Fort St. George, or Madras, 1634; St. Helena, 1654-5; Jamaica, 1655; Fort William, or Calcutta, 1656; Bombay Island, 1661; the Virgin Islands, 1666; Honduras, 1670; Hudson's Bay territories, 1670; Gibraltar, 1704; Canada, 1759; St. Vincent's, Grenada, Tobago, and Dominica, 1763; Bengal Provinces, 1768; Prince Edward Island, 1771; Benares Province, 1775; Guntoor and the Circars in Southern India, 1778; New Brunswick, 1784; Penang, 1786; Sierra Leone, 1787; New South Wales, Australia, 1787; Andaman Islands, 1793; Ceylon, 1795; Trinidad, 1797; the Provinces of Tanjore, Canara, Malabar, Wynnaad, and Coimbatore, in Southern, and of Allahabad, Moradabad, Bareilly, Rohilkund, and the Doab, in Northern India, 1799-1800; Malta and Gozo, 1800; Perim Island, 1800; Van Dieman's Island, 1803; British Guiana, 1803; St. Lucia, 1803; Delhi, Agra, Meerut, Hurriana, and Etawah, in Northern, and Cuttack, Balasore, and Juggernaut, in Southern India, and several Mahratta districts, in 1803-5; Cape of Good Hope, 1806; Mauritius and Seychelles, 1810; Ionian Islands, 1810-11; the Deccan and Merbudda Provinces, 1818-19; Singapore, 1819; Arracan and the Tenasserim Provinces, 1824; Malacca, 1826; Western Australia, 1829; Aden, 1838; South Australia, 1834-5; Port Philip, 1835; New Zealand, 1839; Falkland Islands, 1841; Hong Kong, 1842-43; Scinde Province, 1844; Natal, 1844; Labuan, 1847; Vancouver's Island, 1848; and the Punjaub Province, in 1849.

But a small portion of our possessions have been, in the strict sense of the word, colonised from England. Barbadoes, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Upper Canada, Bermudas, Antigua, Montserrat, Nevis, Virgin Islands, Australasia, and New Zealand, were planted by settlers from Great Britain—most of our other possessions have been acquired by conquest and cession. Ceylon, the Cape of Good Hope, and Demerara, were taken from the Dutch—Jamaica, Gibraltar, and Trinidad, from the Spaniards—Canada, St. Vincents, Grenada, Tobago, Dominica, St. Lucia, Mauritius, Malta, and the Ionian Islands, were captured from the French—Aden from the Arabs, Hong Kong from the Chinese, and the Punjaub from the Sikhs.

COUNTY PALATINE OF DURHAM.

PHYSICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

DURHAM is a maritime county palatine, extending from  $54^{\circ} 27'$  to  $55^{\circ}$  north latitude, and from  $1^{\circ} 10'$  east to  $2^{\circ} 20'$  west longitude. It is bounded on the north by the rivers Tyne and Derwent, which separate it from Northumberland; on the west by Cumberland and Westmorland; on the south by the river Tees, which separates it from Yorkshire; and on the east by the German Ocean. Its greatest length from east to west is 48 miles, its breadth from north to south 39, and it comprises an area of 973 square miles, or 622,476 statute acres. The population, in 1801, was 149,384; in 1811, 165,293; in 1821, 193,511; in 1831, 239,256; in 1841, 307,969; and in 1851, it had attained to 390,997 souls; showing an increase of 160 per cent. in the number of inhabitants during the last fifty years. Of this number 196,700 were males, and 194,777 females. There were also, at the time of the census, in 1851, 64,977 inhabited houses, 2,794 uninhabited, and 570 in process of erection. In this county there are 16 acres to every ten persons, and 96 acres to the same number of inhabited houses.

CONFIGURATION AND SURFACE.—The form of this county is very compact, and resembles a triangle, whose base is the German Ocean. The general aspect of the district is hilly and mountainous, except along the northern bank of the Tees, from which a considerable track of rather level country extends widening towards the sea. The eastern coast is bare and rocky, intersected by chains of limestone hills. In the central parts of the county we have beautiful and fertile valleys, pleasantly varied with hill and dale, alternately appropriated to the growth of corn and pasturage. The western portion is a bleak, rugged, and barren region, crossed by the Pennine chain of hills, from the eastern side of which issue the principal rivers of the county; and small ridges of hills, branching off from this district, spread in various directions. Teesdale, in the Pennine district, presents a long and winding strip of fertility, surrounded by some of the wildest country in the kingdom. This valley is upwards of thirty miles in extent, and contains the principal lead mines in the county. Weardale is also a romantic district; and Tynedale, on the northern border, may vie with either in natural beauty. The western portion of Durham contains several moors or heaths, which are chiefly occupied as pasturage for sheep and a few young cattle and horses. The only very prominent headland which occurs in this county is the bold and nearly insulated one on which the ancient but renovated town of Hartlepool is situated.

GEOLGY.—Durham exhibits three marked geological divisions; the eastern portion of the county being occupied by the upper palæozoic or permian system of rocks, the centre by the coal measures, and the western by the mountain limestone. The lower portions of this latter system consist of enormous beds of sandstone, alternating with beds of limestone, shale, and coal. The sandstone beds are generally thickest and most numerous in the lower portions of the series, while the limestones attain their greatest thickness in the central part. The upper portion is composed chiefly of shales and coarse sandstones. Mr. Winch estimates the total thickness of these beds at 2,700 feet; but, on account of the varying thickness of the strata, this can only be received as an approximation to the truth. The limestone beds are the most characteristic of this formation, and the most important to the miner. They are intersected by fissures running in different directions, by which their relative position has been considerably altered, and the same bed thus re-appears on the surface in various localities. These fissures or veins contain the great mineral wealth of the district. Of the fissures which contain the lead ore, such as range from north to south are termed cross veins or dikes; these are not very productive. The lodes or fissures which run from north-west to south-east are from three to six feet wide, and contain large quantities of ore, especially where they pass through the thickest beds of limestone. There are flat or dilated veins which lie between two layers of stone, and are frequently discovered by the miners whilst they are working downwards in the rake or perpendicular veins. Yellow copper ore also occurs in some of the veins, but not in sufficient quantities to pay for its extraction. Ores of zinc are plentiful in some mines. The lead mines are principally situated in the vales of the Derwent, Wear, and Tees; and are generally entered by passages from the sides of the hills. All the limestones of this formation appear to contain the encrinus, and most of them also bivalve shells; one of them, the cockle-shell limestone, contains oyster shells of four or five inches in diameter. Bellerophon and goniatites, cephalopoda peculiar to the older rocks, are abundant in some of the shales.

The district occupied by the millstone grit extends westward up the valley of the Tees to Eglestone, and is bounded by a line drawn from thence northward to Bolishope Beck, along that stream to the Wear above Wolsingham, and thence north-west to the Derwent at Blanchland. The beds of this formation may be estimated at 900 feet thick, and this is probably short of the truth. The prevailing rock of this series is shale, with which various beds of sandstone, differing in hardness and texture, and, according to these differences, distinguished as freestone, hazle, whetstone, grindstone, and millstone, occur. This is one of the uppermost strata on the Derwent, where it crops out, and does not occur farther west. Towards the lower part of this formation, two thin beds of limestone occur, alternating with some occasional seams of coal, which are distinguished by their thus alternating with limestone from those of the principal coal formation.

The central portion of the county is occupied by a portion of the most important coal-field in England, that of Northumberland and Durham, which is bounded on the north by the river Coquet, and extends nearly to the river Tees on the south. Thus, its extreme length is about forty-eight miles, and its extreme breadth about twenty-four miles; but its area cannot be less than eight hundred square miles. It is intersected by two navigable rivers, the Tyne and the Wear, on the former of which is the town of Newcastle, and on the latter the city of Durham. Throughout this district, the coal strata "dip," or descend, towards the east, and "crop out," or ascend, towards the west. At one point, a particular seam, called the High Main, lies at a depth of nearly a thousand feet, while at other spots, the same seam rises nearly to the surface. Throughout the greater part of this coal-field, the various beds, or strata, of the coal measures, amount to upwards of eighty, consisting of alternating beds of coal, sandstone, and slate-clay, the aggregate thickness of the whole being about sixteen hundred feet. This coal-field possesses as many as forty distinct beds of coal, but only eighteen of them are of sufficient importance to be considered workable and remunerative. The most valuable bed, or seam, is called the High Main, and is about two yards thick. The next in value is the Bensham seam, which is remarkable for its excellent quality as a domestic coal, and for the enormous quantity of gas evolved from it in the mine. The Hutton seam is of very good quality, and is extensively worked, while the other seams are also very valuable. Collieries are, therefore, established chiefly with reference to one or more of these three seams.

The number of dykes or faults which traverse this field is very considerable, and they appear to run in all directions. The most remarkable, called the Great or Ninety Fathom Dyke, has received the latter name because the beds on its northern side have been thrown down ninety fathoms. Its direction is N.N.E. and S.S.W. It enters the sea a little to the south of Hartley, or about three miles north of Shields, and, running westwards, crosses the Tyne at Lemington, about four miles west of Newcastle. In some places it is only a few inches wide, while in others it is twenty-two yards wide, and is filled with hard and soft sandstone. This dyke intersects the upper or Beaumont seam of coal, but does not alter the level on either side. The thickness of the seam, however, decreases, beginning at the distance of from fifteen to sixteen yards from the dyke; and the coal first becomes sooty, and at length assumes a coke-like appearance. The south-eastern branch is only twenty yards in breadth. Another dyke which passes through Coaley Hill, about four miles west of Newcastle, is about twenty-four feet wide, and is filled with basalt in detached masses, which are coated with yellow ochre; a thin layer of indurated clay is interposed between the sides of the fissure and the basalt. The upper seam of coal is here about thirty-five feet from the surface, and where it is in contact with the dyke is completely charred. Another dyke which crosses the Tyne at Walker, and traverses the Walker Colliery, does not alter the level of the strata, but on each side of it the coal is converted into coke, which on one side, in some places, was found to be eighteen feet thick, and on the opposite side only about nine feet. At Walbottle Dean, five and a half miles west of Newcastle, a double vein of basalt crosses the ravine in a diagonal direction, passing nearly due east and west; it underlies at an angle of  $78^{\circ}$ , and cuts the coal strata without altering the dip, but the seam of coal is charred. A dyke, called the Cockfield Dyke, seventeen feet wide, throws up the coal measures on the south eighteen feet. The Low Main coal contiguous to the basalt is only nine inches thick, but enlarges to six feet at the distance of 150 feet from it; the coal contiguous to the dyke is reduced to a cinder. The dykes, when not large, are locally called troubles, slips, or hitches. These minor faults are numerous and extensive, and are a constant source of difficulty and expense to the coal-owner, by disturbing the level of the strata and by the disengagement of carburetted hydrogen gas. They are not, however, without their use, being often filled with a tenacious waterproof clay, by which numerous springs are dammed up and brought to the surface. The faults which depress the strata have kept valuable seams within the basin, which would otherwise have cropped out and been lost. This coal-field yields an enormous quantity of coal. Besides being consumed in the district, London depends nearly altogether on it, as well as all the southern counties, with the exception of Cornwall. It is consumed along the eastern coast, including all the eastern counties as far west as Hull, Boston, Peterborough, Bedford, and Windsor. Shields, Stockton, Seaham, and Sunderland are the ports from which the coal is shipped; the Tyne vessels being the larger, are laden for the London markets; those of the Wear, which are smaller, sail to the small rivers and harbours along the coast, and carry coal as far west as Plymouth.

Origin of Coal.—It is now generally admitted that coal is the product of decomposed vegetable matter, analagous in its origin to modern peat, and each bed was most probably formed on an extended surface of marshy land, covered with a rank and luxurious vegetation. Some geologists consider the finest caking coal to be a crystalline compound, whose constituents had been in a state of solution; but slate coal and cannel coal often bear distinct impressions of plants. When coal is cut into thin slices, and examined under the microscope, its vegetable structure has been detected where no external trace of it was visible. In cannel coal, such as is found at Wigan in Lancashire, the vegetable structure exists throughout the whole mass, while the fine coal retains it only in small patches, which appear, as it were, mechanically entangled. From these and other indications of ligneous origin—(such as minute tubes filled with a yellowish resinous matter, which is the most volatile part of the coal, being that which is first driven off by heat),—it is considered that all coal has originally existed in the state of plants or trees. The fossils which have been found in the coal strata, especially in the northern district, are very strong evidences of this fact. About three hundred species have been found in the sandstone and shale of the coal measures, and the greater part of these probably exist in the coal itself; although the tenderness and opaqueness of the mineral render it difficult to detect them by examination. The three hundred species are all extinct. About two-thirds of them are ferns. The others consist of large conifera (allied to the pine), of gigantic lycopodiaceae, of species analagous to the cactae and euphorbiaceae, and of palms. The coal plants indicate a moist climate, as hot as that of the tropics; and this holds true of the coal plants not only in English pits, but also at Melville Island, within the polar circle. Dr. Hutton considered that the carbonisation of the vegetable matter had been effected by heat; but others contend on good ground, that the change has been effected solely by water and pressure, and that by these agents peat is capable of conversion into coal. Under similar circumstances of moisture and pressure at present, vegetable matter is known to ferment, to produce spontaneous combustion, and to be consumed. If, for example, hay be stacked in a moist condition, or too closely packed, fermentation and ignition are produced, and the mass is consumed. If the process be interrupted, the hay is found to have acquired a dark brown colour, a glazed or oily surface, and a bituminous odour. The same phenomena are observed in the case of flax, and indeed most vegetable substances. Various experiments have been made, from which we learn, that if vegetable matter in a moistened condition be subjected to powerful pressure, so as to prevent its gaseous principles from escaping, bitumen, lignite, or coal, would be produced in the different stages of the process. Indeed, vegetable matter has been traced through every grade of the saccharine, vinous, acetous, and bituminous fermentation; and alcohol, ether, naphtha, petroleum, bitumen, lignite, jet, coal, amber, and even the diamond, have been referred to a vegetable origin.

Returning to our subject we find that the red marl, or new red sandstone, occupies the lower parts of the valley of the Tees, from the junction of the Skerne, and the coast from the mouth of the Tees to Hartlepool. Among the strata of this formation a fine grained sandstone of a brick-red colour predominates. Several unsuccessful attempts have been made to find coal by boring through the red marl, in which pits were sunk to the depth of more than 700 feet. At Dinsdale, near Croft Bridge, where one of these attempts was made, the strata were found to be numerous, and to consist of a white grey, or red sandstone, with occasional partings of a more compact nature, red or blue shale, coaly matter in thin layers, and gypsum in nodules or beds, which in one instance were three feet thick. The lowest bed in the two deepest workings, was found to be a strong white rock of a calcareous nature. Sulphuretted springs are found in this strata. On the north-west limit of the marl, the newer magnesian, or conglomerate limestone crops out; it extends along the coast to the mouth of the Tyne, gradually diverging from the coast line, and passes through the following places, which are either situated on or near its escarpment, viz:—Westoe, Cleadon, West Boldon, Hilton Castle, Southwick, Offerton, Painshaw Hill, Newbottle, Houghton-le-Spring, Moorsley, Pitlington, Sherburn Hill, Quarrington Hill, Garmondsway, Thrislington Gap, Merrington, Westerton, Coundon Grange, Howlish Hall, Eldon, East Thicklely, Midridge Grange, West Thicklely, Newbiggin, Shackleton Hill, Houghton-le Side, Morton-Tinmouth, Langton, Headlaw, and Piercebridge, when it crosses the Tees and quits the county. This limestone forms a range of round-topped hills along the coast, of small elevation, the highest, Painshaw, near the Wear, being estimated at only four hundred feet. Extensive downs of considerable depth and beauty cut through it, deepening as they approach the coast. The upper stratum of the limestone here, is a species of breccia, with which wide chasms in the cliffs are filled; the next strata are thin and slaty, of a white colour inclining to buff; but lower down the stratification becomes indistinct, the rock is of a crystalline or cellular texture, and light brown colour. A globular variety is found near Ryker, and a similar kind of rock prevails in the quarries at Fulwell, at Building Hill, near Sunderland, and on the coast a little to the north of Ryhope. Large quantities of building stone for the Sunderland Docks have been obtained from the latter place. The limestone formation varies in thickness. At Pallin, near Sunderland, where it was once extensively worked, it is only about seventy feet thick; but this is near the north-western boundary: near Hartlepool it has been bored to the depth of more than three hundred feet without penetrating through it. Coal is worked nearly under all parts of the limestone, as far south as Ferryhill. Galena is the only ore that has been discovered in the limestone, and few organic remains have been found in it. There are caverns and perforated rocks in this formation, along the coast, which appear to have been formed by tidal action. The magnesian limestone is covered, in the south-east, by beds of reddish sandstone, sections of which may be seen on the coast a little south of Hartlepool, and on the banks of the Tees, above Stockton. Basaltic rocks occur in the western district in large masses; and large blocks of mountain limestone, with the angles worn off, and the surface polished and deeply grooved, are found in the superficial deposits of alluvial matter which covers most of the rocks in the eastern part of the county; and along with these are masses of close fine grained sandstone and whinstone, which have been drifted down from the western districts.

HILLS.—The principal elevations in the county are Kilhope Law (2,196 feet above the level of the sea), Cross Ridge, Bolt's Law, Baron Hope, Collier Law (1,678), and Featherley Fell, in Weardale; Pike Law, West Pike, Manner Gill Fells, and Eccleston Bank, in Teesdale; Pontop Pike, on Lanchester Common; Down Hill, Lizard, Fulwell Hill, and Boldon Hill, near the sea, between the Tyne and the Wear; Maiden's Paps, Warden Law, Low Hills, Hare Hill, and Hartmoor, near the sea, between the Wear and Hartlepool; Wheatley Hill, north-east of the city of Durham; Mount Brandon, south-west of the city of Durham.

RIVERS.—The principal rivers of Durham are the Tyne, the Tees, the Wear, and the Derwent, in addition to which there are several minor streams which water and drain the country. The Tyne rather bounds, than belongs to this county, yet as it is the outlet for the greater part of the coal produced in the northern part of Durham, we would scarcely be justified in omitting to describe it. This noble river is formed by the united streams of the North and South Tyne, the former of which, rising in the border territories of Scotland, passes the town of Bellingham, and a little to the north of Hexham is joined by the South Tyne, which, rising in Knaresdale, in the county of Cumberland, flows past the town of Haltwhistle, and joins the North Tyne at the place just mentioned. Before it reaches Newcastle it passes through a wild and somewhat picturesque country, between high and pleasant banks, and amidst localities marked by historic events of the highest interest. On the bold heights which overlook it, stand the dismantled and shattered castles of the once mighty Baliols, the Umfravilles, the Herons, the Riddells, the Blenkinsopps, the Blacketts, the unfortunate Derwentwater, and other warrior races, whose descendants are now in comparative obscurity. In its neighbourhood Romans, Britons, and Scots, have left their memories, and traces of their abodes and battles, may still be observed, while Corbridge, and Hexham, and Stella Haugh, are names not to be forgotten on its banks. This is enough for war, doubtless its waters were often stained with blood—now, however, they are more innocently, and with far greater profit, dyed with coal. With this river we may also associate the name of the great teacher of religion, literature, and science, the truly Venerable Bede. But religious contemplation and feudal grandeur, as well as war, having given way to coal, and in connection with the prosperity which the vast development of coally wealth has occasioned all along its banks, downward from Newcastle, all kinds of manufactories may be observed located upon it, or in its immediate neighbourhood. Sailing or steaming down the Tyne to Shields, we see bottle houses, flint-glass works, crown-glass houses, plate-glass works, lead works, iron works, steam-engine manufactories, chemical works, and all that can reflect, cleanse, or convey, and perhaps cure, the body of man, as well as very much that will interest his mind. The coal, however, is its principal burden, and along its banks more of coal than of nature is observable. The staiths and their vast extent of woodwork, of which we shall speak more minutely hereafter, are observable, and close to those staiths are innumerable vessels and boats, loading or laden with coals.

On the Tyne, the coals used to be carried from the staiths to the ships almost entirely in a kind of oval vessels called keels, of which considerable numbers are still employed in bringing down the produce of the collieries, situated above Newcastle bridge, to the ships lying about Shields, and which do not load at any of the staiths between those places. A keel is considered to contain, by admeasurement, eight Newcastle chaldrons. The coals, when large, are generally piled in the vessel according to convenience, and then small, deep side-boards are added, within which the coal is heaped up, but in some cases, where the coal is tender, tubs are employed. Eight of these tubs being placed in a keel, go to the vessel, into which the tub is lifted by means of a crane, and when immediately over the hatchway, the trap-door is loosened, and the contents let down into the ship without injury. The keels themselves are built after an ancient model, and in connection with the men who man them, and their arrangements, present striking features in the navigation of the river. They are steered by a large kind of oar at the stern, called a swape, while a kind of pole, called a puy, is employed to push them on in shallow water. The captain of the keel is called the skipper, and his cabin is the huddock. When the water is so shallow as to render the use of sails or oars inconvenient, the keels are propelled in the following manner:—One man on each side of the vessel going towards the prow thrusts his pole or puy in the muddy bed of the river, rests the upper end against his shoulder, and walks along the vessel from stem to stern—thus making the puy serve as a lever to propel the boat. When the wind is favourable, the keel is navigated with a square sail, but more usually there are employed two long oars, one worked at the side in the usual way, by two or three men, and the other, the swape, at the stern. The wives and daughters of the keelmen have the office of sweeping the keels, from which they derive the title of keeldeesters, and receive the sweepings for their pains. The fund which the keelmen have established for mutual relief during sickness and old age, and also for the relief of their widows and children, is highly honourable to them.

They live about Sandgate and Quay-side, and many of them reside at Dunston, two or three miles from Newcastle. In their blue jackets, flannel breeches, and blue stockings, they form an unmistakeable body, and, like the pitmen, they have their songs, their odd stories, and their oddities of many other kinds. In the following song the allusion to Sandgate fixes the locality to Newcastle:—

“As I went up Sandgate, up Sandgate, up Sandgate,
As I went up Sandgate, I heard a lassie sing:
Weel may the keel row, the keel row, the keel row, Weel may the keel row, that my laddie's in.

“He wears a blue bonnet, blue bonnet, blue bonnet,
He wears a blue bonnet, a dimple in his chin;
And weel may the keel row, the keel row, the keel row,
And weel may the keel row that my laddie's in.”

And here is another, in which the lady celebrates her lover's blackness in a way that speaks very much of coals:—

“My bonnie keel-laddie, my cannie keel-laddie,
My bonnie keel-laddie, for me, oh!
He sits in his keel, as black as the de'il,
And he brings the white money to me, oh!”

Some other keelmen's songs that we have heard are neither poetical nor polite, but we may add another stanza of another edition of the “keel-row:”

“He's na mair of learning
Than tells his weekly earning,
Yet reet from wrang discerning,
Tho' brave, no bruiser he.
Tho' he not worth a plack is,
His own coat on his back is,
And none can say that black is
The white o' Johnny's ee!”

The custom was, a few years ago, for the keelmen to meet annually, to celebrate the establishment of their hospital, perambulating the town with bands of music, playing "Weel may the keel row."

There has always been an intimate connection on the Tyne between the keelmen and the hostmen. This latter body was established in the reign of Henry IV., and afterwards incorporated by Queen Elizabeth, who, having tried in vain to get her due of two shillings per chaldron for all coals shipped in the Tyne, gave the hostmen a charter, on condition that they would ensure to the crown one shilling for every chaldron so shipped. The hostmen were a kind of coal-brokers, midway between buyers and sellers, and the brokerage appears to have included the whole responsibility of shipping the coal purchased, so that the keelmen were the servants of the hostmen. Down to the commencement of the seventeenth century, if not later, the coals were brought from the pit's mouth to the staith in waggons along the common roads, but this method of conveyance was much improved by the laying down of tramroads, or railways, along which the coals are now brought to the Tyne. At the ends of these railways, and overhanging the river, a large platform of wood is erected, which is called a staith. Upon this the waggons laden with coal are brought to a stand, previous to the discharge of their contents into the hold of the ships which lie at anchor underneath. Each waggon contains about two and a half tons of coals, and when the number of waggons has been entered by a clerk appointed for that purpose, they are placed, one at a time, on a square open frame, which, on the withdrawal of a bolt, is immediately removed from the staith by machinery, until it is suspended over the main-hatchway of the vessel. A man also descends with it, then unfastens a latch at the bottom of the waggon, which, being made to turn on hinges like a door, immediately opens, and the whole of the coal in the waggon is cleanly poured into the hold. To facilitate this operation, the sides of the waggon converge towards the bottom, and are lined with smooth iron plates. Attached to the suspending machinery are two counterpoising weights, which being less heavy than the waggon laden with coal, do not impede, but add steadiness to its descent; and the moment the coal is discharged, their gravity draws up the waggon to the staith again. This mode of loading the vessel is both complete and ingenious.

The Tees rises in the mountains of Cumberland, and for the first few miles of its course, forms the boundary between Cumberland and Westmorland. It is afterwards joined by the Trout and Crook Becks, and upon its junction with the latter forms the boundary of the county of Durham, separating it for a few miles from Westmorland, and throughout the remainder of its course from Yorkshire. After emerging from Milburn Forest, this fine river flows through the romantic vale of Teesdale, where it receives several tributary streams, and after passing Barnard Castle, Sockburn, and Yarm, falls into the German Ocean near Stockton. Its entire length is upwards of eighty miles. It is tidal to Yarm, and navigable for vessels of sixty tons burden up to Stockton. In its approach to the ocean from Portrack, the river expands into a large bay, about three miles across, which is slightly contracted at its mouth by a tongue of land called Seaton Snook, from which a bar of sand stretches across the estuary to the Cleveland coast. The depth of water on the bar at spring tides is about ten or twelve feet at low water, and from twenty-six to twenty-eight feet at high water. The estuary of the Tees is a place of great safety to vessels in stormy weather.

The Wear rises at the extreme western point of the county, near Kilhope

Law, and divides it longitudinally, but with a very sinuous course, the upper part of which is through the wild and romantic district of Weardale, bounded on each side by lofty hills. In its course it receives many tributaries, and passes Wolsingham, Bishop Auckland, Durham, which it almost encircles, and Chester-le-street, falling into the German Ocean at Sunderland, where it is crossed by the celebrated iron bridge, beneath whose vast arch vessels of large burden sail by merely lowering their top-gallants. The whole course of the Wear may be estimated at about sixty-five miles, and it is navigable for small craft for eight miles above Sunderland.

The Derwent rises north of the source of the Wear, and flowing easterly, reaches, about three miles from its source, the border of Durham, along which it flows, first east and then north-east, then south-east, and then north-east again for between sixteen and seventeen miles, during which its waters are augmented by the streams of several burns or rivulets which flow into it. At the junction of the Milk-on-milch Burn it leaves the border, and crosses an angle south of the Tyne, into which it falls about three miles above Newcastle.

The Skerne rises south of Durham, and flowing past Darlington, falls into the Tees. The Team rises on the north side of Pontop Pike, and, after a course of about thirteen miles, falls into the Tyne above Newcastle. Besides these there are a number of minor streams, but they possess no commercial importance; and the internal navigation of the county is confined to the lower waters of the Wear, and of the boundary rivers Tyne and Tees. The navigation of this latter river has been shortened by a cut, whereby a considerable bend in its winding course has been avoided; but, besides this, there are no canals, or artificial cuts for hydrographic communication, within this county. Salmon, trout, and a variety of other fish, are very abundant in the rivers. There are mineral and medicinal springs in various parts of the county, each of which will be found fully noticed in the descriptions of the various localities in which they are situated.

CLIMATE AND SOIL.—The climate of this county, considering its northern situation, is mild and healthy; and although the air is sharp in the western parts, it is mild and pleasant towards the sea-coast. Anterior to the present century, a great portion of the county lay in open commons; but these have been enclosed in pursuance of Acts of Parliament, obtained at various times, and the lands have been divided and allotted to the adjoining proprietors. Near the river Tees, and in some spots bordering on the other rivers and brooks, the soil is a deep strong loam, or rich clay; at a further distance from these it is of a poorer nature, commonly termed water-shaken, with here and there spots of gravel interspersed; but these are of limited extent, the middle of none of them being half a mile from clay. The hills between the sea and an imaginary line drawn from Barnard Castle on the Tees to Clansford on the Derwent, are, for the most part, covered with a dry friable loam, whose fertility varies in proportion to its depth. From this line west, the summits as well as the sides of the hills are moorish wastes. In a country possessing such a variety of soil, the produce is of course proportionably various; the principal crops are wheat, barley, oats, peas, and beans.

ANIMALS.—The existing quadrupeds in a wild state include, as might be expected, only a few species. Among the rapacious species we find the fox, the badger, the founmart, the stoat, the weazel, and more rarely the common and pine marten. Moles are found in large numbers; and there are also shrew mice, the long-eared and common bat, and hedgehogs, besides the usual minor animals. The fallow and red deer live in a protected or half wild condition, and are preserved in some of the parks of the nobility and gentry of the county. Of birds we have the common kestrel, the merlin, the moor buzzard, the hen harrier, the common sparrowhawk, the common buzzard, various kinds of owls, the swift, the swallow, the house and sand martin, the goat-sucker, the kingfisher, the lesser shrike, the green woodpecker, the wry-neck, the common quail, the raven, different sorts of crows, and the various species of song birds, with the exception of the nightingale, the Dartford warbler, and the reed wren. The heron and common sandpiper are also found, and there are a limited number of sea-birds. Of the English reptiles, we have the common lizard, the adder or viper, the blindworm, and several others.

There is an ample supply of all the usual kinds of fish, and other edible marine animals. The following also abound on the coast, viz.: the common mackarel, the cod, the ling, the haddock, the whiting, the sole, the holibut, the flounder, the plaice, the dab, the turbot, the herring, the pilchard, the skate, and the dog-fish. Among the fresh-water fish in the county, we have the salmon, the salmon trout, the burn trout, the dace, &c.

Insects are very numerous,—no less than eleven hundred species of the order coleoptera, or beetles, being found in this and the adjoining county of Northumberland. Of the mollusca we have the following species in this county or its coasts, viz.: cuttle fishes, 4; nudibranchs, 16; sea shells, 150; land shells, 55; fresh water shells, 40; slugs, 7; total, 272 species. Among the crustaceans we find the common crab, the common shrimp, and a few others; in all about a dozen species. Of the corallines and other zoophytes, none appear peculiar to the coast of Durham.

Of the domesticated animals, this county possesses some approved varieties. The rich upland meadow and pasture land afford great advantages for the rearing of live stock, and accordingly this county has long been famous for its excellent and improved breed of cattle, sheep, and horses. The short-horned cattle are the most prevalent, and often attain an enormous size.* Besides the shortness of horn, this breed differs from others in being wider and thicker in form, in affording the greatest quantity of tallow, and in having very thin hides with very short hair. This breed is well known, and extensively used for dairy and other purposes throughout the country. Small West Highland cattle are grazed in considerable numbers in the county. There was once a very large breed of sheep in the south-eastern part of the county, which bore heavy fleeces, and when killed often weighed from fifty to sixty pounds the quarter. But the improved Leicester breed has nearly superseded them, as being more profitable and fattening at an earlier age. There is a small and hardy species of sheep on the heaths and moors, which is similar to those found in other counties on the same description of land. Horses of great strength and size are bred here and in the adjoining counties; amongst them is an excellent breed of hunters, generally of a bay colour, very active, strong, and hardy. The coach and saddle horses are in great request for the southern parts of England, and the draught horse is generally of a superior description. At the Durham, Darlington, and other annual fairs, the superior lots of cattle exhibited meet with a ready sale at remunerative prices.

* THE DURHAM OX.—The famous Durham Ox, at ten years old, weighed 34 cwt. He was slaughtered in his eleventh year, in consequence of an accident by which his hip-joint had been dislocated; and, although wasted by being eight weeks in great pain, his carcase produced 165 stones 12 lbs. net meat, and above 21 stones of hide and tallow.

HISTORICAL.

When the Romans invaded this country, they found that the main portion of the county of Durham was included in the territory of the Brigantes, the most powerful of the British tribes, who occupied, as has been described at page 18, the most northern part of the island from the Mersey to the Tyne. The greater portion of this country remained in the possession of the Romans until their final withdrawal from the island, being defended from the northern barbarians by the wall of Hadrian or Severus, which extended from sea to sea across Northumberland and Cumberland. The information regarding this district furnished by the ancient writers is extremely scanty ; but we gather from the Itinerary of Richard of Cirencester, that the Tees was known to the Romans as the Tisa, the Tyne as the Tina, and the Wear as the Vedra. There were several Roman stations within the county. Vindomara and Vinovium, mentioned in the first Iter of Antoninus, are fixed by antiquarians at Ebchester, on the Derwent, and Binchester, near Bishop Auckland. Some writers place the Epiacum of Richard, which is usually fixed at Lanchester, at Ebchester, with which both the name and the distance from Vinovium in Richard's Itinerary seem best to agree. Lanchester is, according to some, the Longovicum of the Notitia, while Horsley says it occupies the site of the ancient Glanoventa. Ad Tisam, mentioned by Richard, is placed at Pierce Bridge, on the Tees ; and Gateshead was considered by Camden to be the Gabrosentum of the Notitia, which others place at Drumburgh, near Carlisle. The same uncertainty is experienced with regard to the situation of Brememum, which some authorities place at Monk Wearmouth ; but this position is not to be reconciled with Ptolemy's mention of it. In no part of the island is the Roman topography more obscure or unsatisfactory.

On the subjugation of the Britons by the Saxons, and the establishment of the Heptarchy, Durham was probably included in the kingdom of Deira, the southernmost of the two which are frequently comprehended under the general name of Northumbria. When Oswald, who united the two kingdoms under one sceptre, wished to revive Christianity, Aidan, a monk of Iona, who had come as a missionary (A.D. 634), fixed his residence at Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, and established a monastery and bishopric there. This see was afterwards (A.D. 664) removed to York ; but when, in 678, Northumbria was divided into two dioceses, Lindisfarne recovered its episcopal rank, and its diocese was permanently severed from that of York. Shortly after this the bishopric of Hexham was created, the see being severed from that of Lindisfarne. As the ravages of the Danes, towards the close of the ninth century, rendered Lindisfarne an insecure abode, the bishops and clergy forsook it (about A.D. 875), and, after they had wandered about for seven years, the seat of the bishopric was fixed at Chester-le-Street, where the foundations of a cathedral were laid. In 995, a new invasion of the Danes compelled the bishop and clergy to leave Chester-le-Street, and seek an asylum at Ripon, in Yorkshire, whence they afterwards removed to Dunblm, now Durham, where the see has been fixed ever since.

Upon the invasion of England by the Conqueror, Egelwin, Bishop of Durham, took the oath of allegiance at York to William, who had advanced into the north to crush the threatened resistance of Edwin and Morcar. Robert Comyn, a Norman nobleman, to whom William had committed the charge of the entire subjugation of the north, having entered the city of Durham with 700 men, was overpowered by the population of the surrounding country, and put to death with all his men; the cathedral narrowly escaped destruction in the tumult. William, enraged at this disaster, immediately sallied forth, devastated the whole country, and devoted its inhabitants to military execution. See page 52. Scarcely were the troops of the Conqueror withdrawn, when Malcolm of Scotland burst through Cumberland with fire and sword, and entering this county, laid waste Teesdale and burned the towns of Wearmouth and Hartlepool.

Under the Norman dynasty, the bishopric, as this county was commonly called, was compelled to provide, from the patrimony of the church and the possessions of the laity, both soldiers and other military aid. In the article of military power the bishop had his barons, who held of him by knight's service, as the rest of the people held of them by inferior tenures. On alarms, he convened them as a parliament, for them to assist him with their persons, dependants, and money, for the public service at home and abroad; and all levies of men and money were made by the bishop's commission, or by writs in his name out of the chancery at Durham; for he had power in the bishopric both to coin money and levy taxes, and raise and arm soldiers from sixteen to sixty years old.

After the battle of Bannockburn, the Scots again invaded this county, and for a third and fourth time in 1316 and 1317. Famine and pestilence followed the ravages of war, and the country became more desolate than at any time since the great Norman devastation. Marauders infested the country; and Louis Beaumont, bishop elect (A.D. 1317 or 1318), was carried off by a party as he was proceeding to Durham to be installed. In the beginning of the reign of Edward III., there was another invasion of the Scots, who took possession of the mountainous tract of Weardale; but the approach of the English monarch and his army prevented them from penetrating into the more level districts of the eastern coast. We find them here again in 1342, under the command of their king David, who, crossing the Tyne and the Derwent, encamped about three miles from the city of Durham. Edward was in France; but the bishops and nobles of the north collected a powerful army, and the battle of Neville's Cross terminated in the defeat of the Scots and the capture of their king.

From this period we hear little more of the county till the time of the Reformation, when the see of Durham was filled by Cuthbert Tunstall, who was imprisoned and deprived of his bishopric under Edward VI., restored under Mary, but finally deprived after the accession of Elizabeth. The inhabitants of the northern counties were much attached to their ancient faith, and "during the struggling birth of the Reformation, deprived of their old pastors and neglected by their new ones, were left in a state of almost utter darkness. Many of the remote parishes and chapelries were probably entirely destitute of ministers or left to the wandering priests of the old church, who, deprived of a seat of rest, roved through the country, carrying along with them their tattered missals and sacrificial vases, and administered in private the consolations of religion."

In the rebellion of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, in support of the Catholic faith, they found little difficulty in raising a large force, with which they entered Durham, and restored the old form of worship; and while a detachment occupied Hartlepool, the main body marched southwards into Yorkshire. On the advance of the royal army under the Earl of Sussex, the insurgents retreated towards Raby, and after losing some time in besieging Barnard Castle, which they starved into a surrender, they were obliged to disperse, the two earls escaping into Scotland. Northumberland was afterwards given up to the English and beheaded; Westmoreland escaped beyond sea, and entered into the Spanish service. In the latter portion of Elizabeth's reign the northern counties were visited by a dreadful pestilence, which broke out every year in some part or other.

In 1603, Charles I. visited the county, and was entertained by the bishop at his castle in Durham. We find him here again in 1639, on occasion of his progress northward to oppose the Scots, when he received similar hospitality. When the Scots invaded England, in 1640, they crossed the Tyne into this county; Lord Conway, who commanded the king's troops, retreating first to Durham, and afterwards to Northallerton, in Yorkshire. By a convention which followed, the county was for some time heavily taxed for the payment of the Scottish army. At the commencement of the civil war in 1642, the Earl of Newcastle formed the four northern counties into an association for the king's service. This county was not the scene of any remarkable incident in that war. The Scottish army entered England in 1644, in order to support the Parliamentarians. They were opposed by the Royalists; but, though several skirmishes occurred in the county, no serious encounter took place, and their commander being obliged to march into Yorkshire to sustain the royal cause there, Durham came into the hands of the Parliamentarians. During the Commonwealth the see was dissolved; but at the period of the Restoration it was re-established, and from that period the history of the county is not marked by any interesting features.

ANTIQUITIES.—Roman coins have been found at Chester-le-Street, from whence Roman roads may be traced, leading northward toward Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and southward to Binchester, near Auckland; at Coniscliffe or Conscliffe, near Pierce Bridge, an altar; at Old Durham, near Durham City, coins; at Lanchester, inscriptions, coins, and other antiquities; at Pierce Bridge, coins, the traces of an aqueduct, foundations of houses, and other marks of a station; at South Shields, an inscription indicating that a Roman town or station was fixed there in the time of Marcus Aurelius; at Stanhope, an altar; at Thornton, near Darlington, an urn with coins chiefly of Constantine and his sons; at Monk Wearmouth, coins; and at Whilborn Lizard, coins. See also the histories, &c., of the various parishes.

SOCIAL AND POLITICAL.

CIVIL DIVISIONS.—Durham was formerly divided into four wards, viz.: Chester, Darlington, Easington, and Stockton; but under the provisions of an act of parliament passed in 1829, a new ward, that of Durham, was formed, which occupies the centre of the county. In the Boundary Act, however, 2 & 3 William IV. c. 64, which fixes the division of the county for the election of members of parliament, the old arrangement is still followed; Chester and Easington wards forming the northern, and Darlington and Stockton the southern division. In the census returns for 1851, the ancient divisions of the county are still maintained, Durham ward not being recognised. This county contains, besides the city of Durham, seven ancient boroughs by charter or prescription, viz.: Auckland, Barnard Castle, Darlington, Gateshead, Hartlepool, Stockton, and Sunderland. The present parliamentary boroughs are the city of Durham, Gateshead, South Shields, and Sunderland. The principal market towns are Durham, Sedgefield, Staindrop, Stanhope, Stockton, and Wolsingham.

INTERNAL COMMUNICATION.—Besides the various rivers of the county, which are fully described at page 82, Durham possesses several excellent roads fully adapted for the purposes of communication. The Great North Road, from London to Edinburgh and the north of Scotland, enters the county over the Tees at Croft Bridge, and runs through Darlington, Durham, and Chester-le-Street to Gateshead, where it crosses the Tyne and passes into Northumberland. About four miles south of Durham on this road, another branches off towards Bishop Auckland, near to which it divides; one branch proceeding by Bishop Auckland, and the other by Eldon and Heighington, to Pierce Bridge over the Tees, where they again unite and quit the county, afterwards joining the Carlisle and Glasgow road, at Scotch Corner, in Yorkshire. A branch to Sunderland from the North Road enters the southern part of the county at Yarm by crossing the Tees. It passes through Stockton-upon-Tees, Norton, Dalton-le-Dale, and Ryhope, to Bishop Wearmouth, Sunderland, and Monkwearmouth, whence it is continued to South Shields, a separate branch proceeding from it to Gateshead and Newcastle. Other roads radiate from Durham, to Sunderland by Houghton-le-Spring, to Cumberland by Willington, Walsingham, Gateshead, &c.; to Norton by Sedgefield, &c.; numerous other roads proceed from town to town, and are intersected by cross roads in every direction. There are also nineteen turnpike trusts in the county, whose total income amounts to upwards of £22,000. These are the principal highways of Durham; but they are now to a great extent superseded by a system of railways, which already spread like a net-work over the greater part of the county. The railways in the county of Durham at present existing as independent undertakings are—first, a great portion of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick, which traverses the county from south to north, from Darlington to Gateshead; its subsidiary lines are, the Great North of England Clarence and Hartlepool Junction, Hartlepool Dock and Railway, and West Durham, which are leased or controlled by the York, Newcastle, and Berwick. The Stockton and Darlington line is next in importance. It intersects the county from west to east, from Crook to Stockton, subsidiary to which are the leased lines, the Wear Valley, Middlesborough, and Redcar Company; it proposes to lease the Middlesborough, and Gisborough; and, under the influence and support of the Darlington proprietary, application was made to parliament in the session of 1853 for a new line, called the Darlington and Barnard Castle. The third body is the Stockton and Hartlepool Company, who have leased the Clarence line. The Leeds Northern passes partially through the county, entering at Yarm and proceeding thence to Stockton, uniting the Stockton and Hartlepool and Stockton and Darlington lines with the great north of England portion of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick, in the neighbourhood of Thirsk; this company proposes to join the York and North Midland, and to take the name of the North-Eastern Company. The fourth body is the Newcastle and Carlisle Company, who have become the purchasers of the late Blaydon, Gateshead, and Hebburn line; its influence, however, in the county is very small. There is also the Durham and Auckland Branch Railway, commenced in August 1853.

INDUSTRY.—This county occupies a very high position in commerce, trade, and manufactures; and may be considered to present an epitome of the enterprise, science, skill, and industry of the nation. No doubt it is indebted to its natural productions for much of its celebrity, yet we must principally attribute the proud station which it now occupies as a seat of commerce and manufactures, to the energetic exertions and enterprising spirit of its population. The state of agriculture in this county, is, on the whole, above the average in advancement. "Of the usual rotation of crops," says a recent writer, "the 'four course system' of husbandry is generally followed on the friable soils on the northern side of Teesdale, though on many farms of this description a large proportion of the green crop division is managed with bare fallow. The stiff and undrained lands are managed on the 'two crop and fallow system,' which is of two kinds, either simply (1) fallow, (2) wheat, (3) oats, or of that and the following combined; (1) fallow, (2) wheat, (3) clover. These combined give (1) fallow, (2) wheat, (3) oats, (4) fallow, (5) wheat, (6) clover. The land intended for fallow is seldom ploughed before February; and after receiving the usual repeated ploughings and harrowing during summer, is commonly limed, and then ridged up in ten feet mounds, well gathered and rounded to carry off the water. On this the wheat is sown broadcast in autumn, and receives no further attention till harvest. During next autumn and winter the manure from the farm yard is spread over it and ploughed in. In spring the land so prepared is sown with oats. The oat stubble lies till February, when it is ploughed, and the same routine of bare fallowing is pursued during the summer. The wheat crop this time receives no manure, and in spring clover seeds are sown with it, which next year are mown for hay. The clover root is broken up in February, again to undergo a bare fallow. No roots are cultivated, and no purchased manure or food made use of. The farms are small in extent, the farmers hard working and industrious. The yield of their wheat crop may be from twelve to twenty bushels an acre—fifteen being an average for the undrained lands; and their oats from twenty to thirty bushels. The 'three course system' is the one usually practised by the clayland farmers of the county, viz:—(1) fallow, (2) wheat, (3) one half oats and one half clover. Nearly the whole of the fallow is managed as a bare fallow, there being very little green crop cultivated. Occasionally this rotation is prolonged by pasturing the clover a second year. Three cows and six young cattle to 100 acres may be about an average stock for the clay farms. To meet rent and the expenses of cultivation, the farmer's sole dependance is on his wheat crop, a little also being received from that portion of the hay-crop which he sells off the farm. As a general rule, no manure, except lime, is purchased; which is laid upon the bare fallow in preparation for wheat. The system is very exhausting; a bare fallow, stimulated by lime, is sown with wheat, which is followed by oats or hay. Each return of this rotation further reduces the soluble properties of the soil, as these are not restored by the small quantity of inferior manure applied in nearly the same proportion in which they are abstracted. The same farm, which thirty years ago averaged from twenty to twenty-four bushels of wheat, and thirty to thirty-six bushels of oats per acre, is now, under this process, reduced to fourteen bushels of wheat and eighteen to twenty bushels of oats. The 'four course system' is the ordinary system on Lord Ravensworth's estate, which extends some miles westward from Newcastle, on the south bank of the Tyne. The land is generally of a superior quality; and is drained by the landlord at a charge of five per cent to his tenants. The farms vary in extent from 50 to 200 acres; they are held from year to year, but the same families have held their farms for generations. The demand for milk in this neighbourhood is considerable; and the other articles of farm produce, such as potatoes, &c., are equally in demand, and at remunerative prices. On Lord Durham's estates attempts have been made to introduce the Northumberland, or 'five course system,' but without any great success. The farms average 200 acres in extent. During the last ten years, upwards of £14,000 have been expended in drainage by the landlord, the tenants being charged five per cent on the outlay."

To its mining industry Durham is chiefly indebted for the high rank which it holds amongst the English counties, the benefit derived being estimated, not according to the direct marketable value of the minerals, but by their influence in developing the manufacturing power of the country. With regard to the coal trade, it can scarcely be necessary for us to point out to the reader its vast importance. Deprive us of our coal and where would be our manufactures? No longer should we, by our commerce, convey the conjoined benefits of knowledge and civilisation to the remote regions of the earth. No longer should we triumph over time and space, no longer traverse the land with a rapidity which has exceeded all anticipation, nor the ocean with a swiftness and certainty which brings the far east within the voyage of a few days. The period at which coal was first wrought in the north is not known with any degree of certainty, but we find it first noticed in record by the charter of Henry III., in 1213, which granted permission to mine it. It seems to have been known in the fourteenth century, not only in London, but also in France, though it did not become an article of commerce till the latter part of the sixteenth century. About the commencement of the following century, the French are represented as trading to the northern counties of England for coal, in fleets of fifty sail at a time, serving the ports of Picardy, Normandy, Bretagne, &c., even so far south as Rochelle and Bordeaux; while other fleets sailing to the ports of Bremen, Holland, and Zealand, supplied the inhabitants of the Low Countries. In the reign of Charles I., there was a great demand for coal for the metropolis, and we find from the report of the Trinity House, Newcastle, that the Tyne exports for 1703 amounted to 48,000 Newcastle chaldrons. At the commencement of the eighteenth century the principal seats of the Durham coal trade were the mines of Pontop, Marley Hill, Fairfield Moor, Garesfield, Gibside, Axwell, Blaydon Main, and Stella Grand Lease, all of which shipped their produce above Newcastle bridge. The collieries which shipped below the bridge were those of Heworth, Gateshead, Felling, and Tyne Main. The river Wear was principally supplied from the collieries of Lambton and Tempest estates. From this period the scene of mining operations has considerably changed; and by the discovery of coal beneath the magnesian limestone, the distant collieries of the Wear, &c. have been superseded by those nearer the place of shipment.

From the year 1771, up to 1845, a regulation existed, with some partial interruptions, called the "limitation of the vends." This was a powerful combination of the whole of the principal coal proprietors, for the purpose of limiting the coal worked and sold by each concern respectively at their collieries, according to a basis fixed by a "committee of the coal trade." The result was to keep up a higher price for coals in the London market than could have been maintained if each colliery produced and sold as much as possible. The fixing of this scale or basis of the whole "Vend" was a point of the greatest delicacy, and the arbitrator was most jealously watched by his confederates, each being anxious to secure for his own concern as large a vend as possible. The proportion between the Tyne and the Wear used to be three-fifths for the former and two-fifths for the latter river; but the opening out of new coal districts on the Wear and Tees, at first weakened, and at length destroyed, this regulation. The number of collieries actually at work in the county of Durham, and shipping their coals on the Tyne, the Wear, at Seaham, at Hartlepool, and on the Tees, frequently varies, but may be stated at the present time at upwards of one hundred.

THE COLLIERIES.—We purpose in this section to give a brief description of the collieries in the neighbourhood of the Tyne, which will serve, to a certain extent, for all the collieries of the north. What is meant by the "Tyne Collieries" is the whole group of collieries, whether lying north or south of the Tyne, which ship their coals in that river. There are about thirty of these collieries in Northumberland, on the northern side of the river—those in South Durham belong to the Wear or the Tees systems. It is curious to look at a map on which these collieries are laid down. The pits are dotted here and there on both sides of the river, being more and more thickly congregated as they approach nearer to its banks. These pits are about a hundred in number, two or more in some cases belonging to the same colliery. Not less curious is it to trace the lines which mark the "ways," one of the most characteristic features in the coal districts. As the river Tyne is the great outlet for nearly all the coal derived from the Tyne collieries, notwithstanding the spread of the railway system, some means must be adopted for reaching the river; but how is this to be effected? The colliery may be six or eight miles distant, and the surface ground may belong to other parties. Long before passenger railways was heard of, railways, or tramways, were laid down to facilitate the carriage of coals in trucks from the pits to the river, and we find these tramways following the best route which lies open to them. Now, it is obvious that some arrangement must be made with the landed proprietors in these matters, and, in truth, these arrangements are often a grave question to the coal owners. Although the expense of the mining operations is so great—although the establishment of a first-rate colliery, with its machinery, horses, waggons, &c. amounts to a sum varying from £40,000 to £150,000—although the capital employed by the Tyne coal owners is so large, yet the "way leaves," or "way rents," are an additional feature beyond all these, without which not a ton of coal can be brought to market. The character of the pitmen, the nature of their labour, the relations between them and their employers—all are dependent, more or less, on the mode in which the coal is distributed under the surface of the ground. To these deep-lying coals, therefore, we must ask the reader to pay an imaginary visit.

First, then, how to descend. We see a verticle hole, or pit, pitchy dark, and surmounted by wheels to facilitate the raising of coal from the bottom of the shaft. Into one of the "tubs," or "buckets," used for this purpose, we must now contrive to get, a matter which requires no small amount of nerve to effect. If the bottom of the bucket should give way, or the rope break, or—but it is fearful to speculate on such ifs, when you are swinging over a depth of several hundred feet. Now we are descending. It is said by those who ascend in balloons, that no feeling of motion is perceptible, but that the earth seems to be flying away from them, while they are perfectly still and motionless. Much the same idea may be said, in reverse, in descending a coal shaft. You have no idea of the descent, but the little round hole of light seems to be flying faster and faster over your head upwards, as if it were going to the skies, and at length, in a couple of minutes, perhaps—the orifice of the shaft has apparently turned itself into a day-star, which shines far, far above you in the firmament.

Arrived at the bottom of the pit, what do we see? Nothing, or nothing but "darkness made visible." Every vestige of daylight is effectually shut out, and it requires some time to accustom one's eyes to the light of the candles, which appear as mere sparks or points of light in the midst of intense darkness. By degrees, however, our eyes become accustomed to the strange scene, and men are discerned moving about in galleries, or long passages, working in positions which would break the back of any ordinary workman, while boys and horses are seen to be engaged in bringing the coal to the mouth of the pit. Some of these horses go through the whole of their career without seeing the light of day — they are born in the pit, reared in the pit, and die in the pit.

A coal mine, as we perceive, is not simply a pit with coals at the bottom of it. The shaft is merely an entrance, from the bottom of which passages radiate to a great distance. These passages are cut in the coal "seam," and are a natural result of the manner in which the coal is worked. If the whole of a coal seam were to be excavated at once, the cavity left would be so large that the earthen roof would fall for want of support, hence it is requisite to leave portions called "pillars," to support the superincumbent weight; and the self-interest of the coal owner leads him to limit the size of these pillars as much as is consistent with safety. Passages lead between and around these pillars, and iron tramways are laid along the passages, to facilitate the removal of the buckets of coal from the workings to the upright shaft.

The Working and Management, Discipline and Duties, of a Coal Mine.—The persons engaged in a colliery are sub-divided into a greater number of classes than might, perhaps, be supposed, and, generally speaking, the technical designations of these classes are more significant than is usually observable in other industrial occupations, but some of these sound strangely enough to the ears of the uninitiated. They are distinguished into the two groups of "under-ground," and "upper-ground" establishments, the former engaged in the pit, and the latter in conducting the open air arrangements. The chief of them are occupied in a way which may be illustrated in the following connected view.

The actual coal digger is called the hewer. Whether the seam be so narrow that he can hardly creep into it on his hands and knees, or whether it be lofty enough for him to stand upright in, he is the responsible workman who loosens the coal from its bed; all the arrangements below ground are made to suit him; he is indeed the key of the pit, the centre of the mining system. The hewers are like the cabinet council of the country, governing and directing and working for the whole pit population besides. Next to them come the putters, who are divided into trams, headsmen, foals, and half-marrows. These are all youths or children, and their employment consists in dragging or pushing the coals from the workings to the passages where horses are capable of being employed in the work. The distance that a corve, or basket of coal, is dragged in this manner, averages about a hundred and fifty yards. When a boy "puts" or drags a load by himself he is designated a tram, when two boys of unequal age and strength assist each other, the elder is called a headman and the younger a foal, and when two boys of equal age and strength help each other, both are styled half-marrows. When the corves are "put" to a particular place, where a crane is fixed, the crane-man manages the crane by which the corves are transferred from the tramway to the rolleys, and keeps an account of the number so transferred. The corf is a wicker work basket, containing from four to seven hundred weights, the rolley is a waggon for transporting the corves from the crane to the shaft, and the rolleyway is a road, or path, sufficiently high for a horse to walk along it with the rolley, and is kept in repair by the rolleyway-men. The driver takes charge of the horse, which draws the rolley, and the on-setter is stationed at the bottom of the shaft, to hook and unhook the corves and tubs which have descended or are about to ascend the shaft.

Without troubling the reader with any extended or scientific details, the following observations will give him some notions of ventilating and lighting a coal-mine. The seams of coal, and the apertures where such seams have been, often give out carburetted hydrogen and other gases, which, when mixed with common air, become very explosive. Hence it is important to drive these gases out of the mine as quickly as possible, and this can only be effected by causing a current of air to pass constantly through the workings. A complete system, as now adopted at the best collieries, comprises the downcast-shaft for the descent of fresh air, the upcast-shaft for the ascent of the vitiated air, well-planned galleries, doors, and valves, throughout the whole of the mine, and a furnace at the bottom of the upcast-shaft to heat the air, and cause it to ascend more rapidly. In some collieries the air is made to traverse an extent of thirty miles of galleries and passages. In former times the dangerous contaminated passages were lighted only by sparks struck from a small instrument called a "steel-mill," but the beautiful safety lamp, or "Davy," as the miners familiarly call it, has superseded this. In this lamp the flame is surrounded by a wire gauze, having very fine meshes, through which the air must pass to feed it, and, if the air be inflammable, the flame is confined within the gauze envelope, for the iron wire cools the gas too much to permit the flame to exist on the outside of the gauze. If the lamp be properly tended, it is one of the most precious boons that science ever gave to industry; if it be neglected, as it often is by the miners, those explosions take place which so frequently give rise to such fearful results.

A good plan of the works, with adequate ventilating power, will not ensure safety in a colliery, unless there be a vigilant administration of all the mining affairs, united with due subordination, constant inspection, and effective discipline. It is not too much to say, that the daily work of a colliery should be conducted on the supposition that danger is always to be looked for, and always to be provided against. The great mines in the north may be said to be established upon a system of effective and excellent discipline, which has been arrived at by degrees, and has been much improved within a comparatively recent period. Few collieries are now found without regular maps, which are on a large scale, and show the extent as well as the progress of the workings, the courses of the air, and the lines of dislocation in the strata, sections of which are generally formed, and sometimes adorn the office walls, while large drawings of furnaces, shafts, engineering arrangements, &c. are now frequently under keeping of the managers of the collieries.

The actual condition of the mine may at any minute be known to the resident viewer or the consulting viewer—the former of whom is supposed to be, and very generally is personally acquainted with all the workmen. A practice is now becoming general of making the most eminent viewers in the district consulting viewers, and, therefore, the highest authority of two or three principal or lesser mines, which they visit periodically. The general charge of the mining operations is delegated to the under viewer, who is expected to examine the mine daily, and in addition to his own personal inspection of the workings—the waste, the state of the air courses, and the quantity of air passing in the different currents, the ventilation, and the state of the mine generally,—he is to receive a daily report from the overmen and master wastemen on the workings and operations under their charge. As the result of his own observations, and of the reports made to him, he is to take measures for correcting irregularities and for obviating all discoverable sources of danger. The viewer is his superior officer, to whom he must, from time to time, and instantly, in all cases of emergency, make reports. The overmen have the charge of the working of the pit, and more especially of the safety of the men, whence their name. Their duty is to attend to the lighting of the pit, inspect the lamps, direct whatever candles or lamps shall be used in exploring drifts or while working, and see that lamps are always used in pillar working. They are assisted by deputies, whose duty it is to go into the pit every morning, one hour before the hewers, to examine every working place in the pit, and especially to ascertain that it is in a safe working condition. They also examine all safety lamps, and lock them so that the men cannot tamper with them. No hewer is allowed to enter his working place until he has been examined by the deputy of his district. To the deputies also belong the laying of the tramways, the securing of the workings by timber, &c. Besides these officers, there are the master wasteman and his assistants, who travel daily in the waste, or old workings of the pit, see that the air courses everywhere are in good order, remedy faults of the roof, build or prop up where requisite, remove impediments to the movements of the air, and generally attend to the precautions of good ventilation. Two wastemen, travelling together, go over the whole of the waste at least once a week. At the close of each day's labour, the deputies see all the men and boys out of their respective working-places, and examine that no lights are left in the pit, that the doors are closed, and that the ventilation is in good order. In addition to the varieties of pitmen which we have mentioned, there are numerous others, such as furnacemen, horse-keepers, lamp-keepers, shifters, switch-keepers, trappers, way-cleaners, and wood and water leaders.

Many of these strange designations find a place in the popular songs and stories of the colliery district—songs and stories which are like an unknown tongue to the stranger, until he acquires a knowledge of the vocabulary in which they are composed. We subjoin a specimen of a pitman's song:—

“As me and my marrow was ganging to wark,
 We met with the de'il it was in the dark;
 I up with my pick, it being in the neit,
 I knocked off his horns, likewise his club foot!
 Follow the horses, Johnny my lad oh!
 Follow them through, my canny lad oh!
 Follow the horses, Johnny my lad oh!
 Oh laddy away, canny lad oh!

As me and my marrow was putting the tram,
 The low it went out, and my marrow went wrang;
 You would have laugh'd had you seen the gam,—
 The de'il gat my marrow, but I gat the tram.
 Follow the horses,” &c.

From the enumeration of the officers and men given above, the reader will plainly perceive, that colliers are not merely black-faced diggers and shovellers, who attack the coal wherever they meet with it, and roam about in a dark pit, to seek their coaly fortunes. All is pre-arranged and systematic; every one knows exactly whither he is to go, and what he has to do. But the preceding list, formidable as it appears, does by no means include all those engaged at a colliery—they are nearly all of them the “underground” hands, who could not transmit the coal to the market without the aid of the “upperground” establishment, which comprises bunksmen, brakesmen, waiters, trimmers, staitmen, screen-trappers, and many others.

Hard as a pitman's life seems to be, yet it is agreed by those who knew the northern collieries half a century ago, that it was then much more laborious. The following is a description given of it by a Newcastle merchant, who had himself experienced the severity of boyish labour some forty or fifty years since. His description of that period was sad indeed, and it was very detailed. Then, according to his account, the boy would go into the pit to work at two o'clock on the Monday morning, and arrive at his home between eight and ten at night, entirely exhausted. He would again repair to work the next morning at the same hour, half asleep, and sometimes half naked. This continued through the week, and he would not see much daylight from Sunday till the next Saturday afternoon. Although this state of things might not be permanent as regarded the long hours, yet the labour was always extreme, and two boys were often bound to “put” together, without the adequate strength; this led to quarrels between unequally matched boys, and though these were often brothers, fights and foul language was frequent among them. One great cause of improvement was the employment of metal or iron plates for the trains to run upon, and another was the blasting of coal with powder. Before this, the boys had often to drag their coal over a fir plank, or even the bare floor, but now the whole way is laid with metal plates, even up to the face of the workings, and by this improvement one boy can perform the previous work of two.

The lessees of coal, as well as the proprietors who work their own royalties, are very wealthy. The capital employed in winning and working the three largest coal concerns is not less than £500,000 each. These establishments may each comprise from six to twelve separate mines, and all the respective engines, waggons, horses, &c. The winning of a single colliery, all things included, will cost from £50,000 to £80,000, and even as high as £200,000 in extreme cases. These observations apply chiefly to the great partnerships and to the grandees of the trade, such as Lord Londonderry's trustees, the Countess of Durham's executors, the Great Hetton Coal Company, Lord Ravensworth and partners, in all of which there can be little doubt that the capital sunk, with machinery and plant, must approach to £500,000 each. The second rank collieries may perhaps equal £200,000. The third-class concerns may be reckoned as single pits, with capitals of from £40,000 to £60,000 each, while the fourth and most numerous class of collieries may require from £8,000 to £25,000 each. These are generally engaged in the coasting trade, and for the supply of steam-coal to London, and local manufactories of various kinds. There are still smaller collieries, but they are chiefly for land sale, and do not supply the general markets.

The Pitmen—their Dwellings, Habits, and Peculiarities.—The pitmen are in every sense a peculiar race, and strange indeed is their manner of life, passed, as it is, in the bowels of the earth, shut out from the light of day. From early boyhood to old age their thoughts and occupations are with coal,—consequently, their knowledge of the world beyond the colliery district, is very limited, and an occasional visit to any place beyond Newcastle is quite an event in their monotonous lives.—The working classes, in many parts of England, possess houses better than their furniture, but among the pitmen of the north the case is reversed, the furniture is generally better than the dwellings. A colliery village usually consists of houses built in pairs, which are placed in rows. The space between the fronts of the houses, forming the street, is unpaved and undrained, but that between the backs of the houses not unfrequently exhibits a joint-stock dust-heap and dung-hill running along the avenue, flanked here and there by pig-sties and heaps of coal. The pitmen's houses are erected either by the coal-owners, or by certain petty companies, who speculate in the building and letting of them to the proprietors of the colliery, at rates varying from three to four pounds per annum. As these houses are erected for the convenience of the men employed in the pits, in the neighbourhood of which they are situated, it follows as a necessary consequence, that when the pits are abandoned, the villages are abandoned also, and in such cases they present a most desolate appearance. The houses may be divided into three classes; the first, or best class, possesses only two rooms on the ground-floor, with a kind of loft above; the next class have only one room on the ground-floor, with a loft above; while the third possesses only a single room. Some of the villages are of a superior character, but the average seem to be about on a level with those here described. Yet these dwellings contain, for the most part, better furniture than is to be found in similar houses elsewhere. Eight-day clocks, mahogany chests of drawers, and four-post bedsteads, are said to have become quite a common object of ambition among the pitmen, and as forming items for consideration at the time of marrying.

It might naturally be expected that the very unnatural position in which the children employed in the pits are placed, and their exclusion from daylight and the open air, would materially influence their physical health, not only at the time, but would so affect their constitutions as to render them liable to particular forms of disease in after life. Nevertheless, experience will not warrant the inference that any very pernicious effects result from the circumstances, in such numerous instances as to justify anything like a general conclusion. Consumption is rare amongst pitmen; scrofula certainly not more frequent than amongst other classes of workmen, though doubtless cases of this kind sometimes occur, and the great joints are occasionally affected. That the health of the boys is for the most part good, their favourable recovery from severe wounds and other accidents sufficiently proves, and though their persons are thin and their complexions pale, their general appearance is muscular and athletic.

The "outward man" distinguishes the pitman from every other operative. His stature is diminutive, his figure disproportionate and misshapen; his legs being much bowed, and his chest protruding, while his arms are long, and oddly suspended. His countenance is not less striking than his figure, his cheeks being generally hollow, his brow overhanging, his cheek-bones high, and his forehead low and retreating. "I have seen," says Mr. Morrison, "agricultural labourers, blacksmiths, carpenters, and even those among the wan and distressed stocking-weavers of Nottinghamshire, to whom the term 'jolly' might not be inaptly applied, but I never saw a jolly-looking pitman." The same gentleman partly traces this to the fact, that the whole of the pitmen have been pit-boys at an early age, during which the form is injured by the cramped positions occupied by the boys in the mine, but he also adduces other reasons:—"Pitmen have always lived in communities, they have associated only among themselves, even their amusements are hereditary and peculiar. They almost invariably intermarry, and it is not uncommon, in their marriages, to commingle the blood of the same family. They have thus transmitted natural and accidental defects through a long series of generations, and may now be regarded in the light of a distinct race of beings."

Everybody seems to award credit to the wives of the pitmen as being indefatigable in their exertions to keep everything right and tidy at home, so far as the arrangements of the houses and the employment of the people will permit. The household duties of a pitman's wife are very numerous. The male portion of her family may be divided into "putters," and "hewers," the former going to the mines when the latter leaves, and the hours of labour and rest are consequently not the same, thus there is entailed the necessity of preparing numerous meals, and at irregular and various hours of the day. Every man and boy, immediately on coming from his work, changes his dress or goes to bed, after taking a meal and washing himself from head to foot. The flannel dress, too, in which the pit work is done, has to be subjected pretty frequently to the action of soap and water. Mr. Morrison, the gentleman above quoted, gives the following picture of the manner of living among the pitmen:—"The children of colliers are comfortably and decently clothed. Cleanliness, both in their persons and houses is a predominant feature in the domestic economy of the better females of this community. The children, although necessarily left much to themselves, and playing much in the dirt, are never sent to bed without ample ablution. Pitmen, of all the labouring classes I am acquainted with, enjoy most the pleasure of good living. Their larders abound in potatoes, bacon, fresh meat, sugar, tea, and coffee, of which good things the children partake as abundantly as the parents—even the sucking infant, to its prejudice, is loaded with as much of the greasy and well-seasoned viands of the table as it will swallow. In this respect the women are foolishly indulgent, and I know of no class of persons among whom infantile diseases so much prevail. Durham and Northumberland are not dairy counties, consequently the large population, excepting the hinds in the northern part of Northumberland, are very inadequately supplied with milk. Did this wholesome and nutritious beverage more abound, probably the infant population would be more judiciously fed."

If we follow the pitmen to Newcastle, their great metropolis, we find them still a characteristic race. Their velvetreen dresses, with large and shining metal buttons, distinguish them from the rest of the population. Mr. Holland states that the pitmen used formerly, perhaps more so than at present, to delight in gaudy colours. Their holiday waistcoats, called by them posey jackets, were frequently of very curious patterns, displaying flowers of various hues, and their stockings were blue, purple, or even pink, or mixed colours. Many of them used to have their hair very long, which, on week-days, was either tied in a queue, or rolled up in curls, but when dressed in their best attire, it was commonly spread over their shoulders. Some of them wore two or three narrow ribbons round their hats, placed at equal distances, in which it was customary to insert one or more bunches of primroses or other flowers. Such were the pitmen of past days, and many of their holiday peculiarities still remain.

The principal portion of the lead mining districts in this part of the kingdom," says Mr. Sopwith, "may be considered as extending about twenty miles from north to south, and the same distance from east to west. The square of 400 miles thus formed, and lying equally about the junction of the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Durham, and Yorkshire, comprises the manor of Alston Moor, the mountain ridge of Cross-fell, and the dales of the Tees, Wear, East and West Allen, and the Derwent." The Weardale mines have been extensively worked for a long series of years by the ancestors of the present proprietor, W. B. Beaumont, Esq. M.P., and those in Teesdale are chiefly occupied under the Duke of Cleveland, M. Hutchinson, Esq., and others by the London Lead Company. The quantity of lead obtained in the counties of Durham and Northumberland, during the year 1850, amounted to 21,010 tons. Most of the ores of lead contain a small proportion of silver; if the proportion be even so small as five ounces of silver to a ton of lead, it will repay the process of refining; and this refining is a delicate and beautiful process, in which the silver by its different mechanical and chemical properties, is separated little by little from the lead.

The Manufactures of this county are various and valuable; and foremost amongst them stands the Iron Trade, which now employs no fewer than 5,000 persons in its various departments. This branch of industry is of comparatively modern origin in this district, having become of importance only within the last fourteen years; but, from the rapidity of its increase, it bids fair to become of great consequence. The number of furnaces erected and in operation at the present time amounts to forty-five, and are distributed amongst the following establishments, viz.:—The Consett Iron Works, belonging to the Derwent Iron Company, twenty-six furnaces; the Birtley Iron Company, five furnaces; the Weardale Iron Company, at Tow Law, near Wolsingham, six furnaces; and the Witton Iron Works, belonging to Bolckow and Vaughan, eight furnaces. In addition to these, are the works of Messrs. Hawks, Crawshaw, and Sons, who have extensive rolling mills and forges, but purchase the pigs they use from other parties. But a very few years ago the consumers of both pig and malleable iron were obliged to obtain their supplies from Scotland, Staffordshire, or Wales; whereas now they can command every article they require in their own immediate neighbourhood. In addition to this, an extensive export trade is carried on with America and the continent of Europe, in rails, bars, forgings, and castings; and of late years, a large and rapidly increasing business has been carried on in plates and other iron adapted to shipbuilding and the construction of tubular and other bridges. The production of pig iron in this county averages upwards of 135,000 tons per annum; of this quantity about 100,000 tons are converted into malleable iron in the shape of bars, rails, plates, &c.

The manufacture of Glass is extensively carried on in this county,—not merely in one of its forms, but in every variety of plate-glass, sheet-glass, window-glass, flint-glass, and bottle-glass. We must look for the settlement of this important branch of trade in this district to the cheapness and abundance of coal, alkali, and sand, and to the fact of the vicinity of shipping ready to carry the manufactured produce to every part of the globe. Previous to the repeal of the glass duty in 1845, 14 companies were engaged in this branch of industry; during the years 1846 and 1847 the number of companies was increased to 21; at present there are only 10. During the last year of the duty (1844), the 14 companies then in existence made 670 tons of crown and sheet glass, for which they paid £500,000 duty. The 10 companies now working produce 33,500,000 feet annually, equal to 15,000 tons, value £225,000,—being an increase of considerably more than cent per cent, and at a charge to the public of less than one-half the former duty. In polished plate there are six companies, being the same as existed in 1837; their number has remained stationary, but their production is estimated to have doubled. They now make 3,000,000 feet of polished plate glass annually, equal to 5,500 tons, valued at £450,000. The produce of the little kingdom of Belgium, the greatest glass producing country in the world, is 50,000,000 feet of sheet glass annually, equal to 22,300 tons, or 25 per cent more than is made in England, of both crown and sheet glass. They export of this quantity 85 per cent, of which 6 per cent comes to England, and they retain 15 per cent for home consumption. England retains 85 per cent of its produce for home consumption, and exports 15 per cent, being about double what she imports.

The Chemical works of the county, though of comparatively modern introduction, hold a distinguished position among the manufactories of the north; and we may form some notion of the extent and variety of the marvellous transmutations which are taking place within them, from the number of lofty chimneys whose summits are observable in every direction. These establishments produce soda, potash, sulphuric, muriatic, and nitric acids; chlorine, chloride of lime, alum, red lead, &c., in great quantities. Some of these establishments are beautiful examples of scientific system, and present many striking features.

To enter into a description of all the branches of industry pursued in this county would indeed be a Herculean task. We will only add, that, besides the manufactories just mentioned, there are oil mills, where oil is obtained, by pressure, from linseed, hempseed, and rapeseed,—turpentine works, where the rough substances, black and yellow resin, and the transparent oil of turpentine, are obtained by the distillation of the viscid turpentine which exudes from fir trees,—starch works, where starch is obtained from flour; also soap works, sail-cloth factories, linen-yarn factories, and paper mills. All require furnaces for carrying on operations, and the abundant supply of coal in this district furnishes, as we have before remarked, a strong inducement to this localisation. Shipping and shipbuilding are carried on extensively, and will be found fully noticed in the accounts of Sunderland, Shields, Stockton, and Hartlepool.

GOVERNMENT, &c.—Durham has usually been called “the bishopric,” on account of the great powers formerly possessed by the bishop of the diocese, who is said to have exercised all the authority in this county that the king exercised elsewhere. The rise and progress of the palatine power have been described in the detail of historical events. Several of the English monarchs aimed at its diminution; but the most decisive blow at its integrity was struck by Henry VIII., by whom the regal powers of the bishops were materially diminished. Still the remaining privileges of the palatinate were very considerable. The bishop, as count palatine, acted as lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county, and had the appointment of the high sheriff and all the magistrates and officers of justice. His sheriff was not obliged, like other sheriffs, to account to the exchequer, but made up his audit to him alone. He was also perpetual chancellor and justice of the peace in his own territories; all dues, amercements, and forfeited recognisances, as well as deodands, belonged to him. All tenures of land originated from him, as lord paramount in chief; all enclosed wastes, to which no title could be made, escheated to him; and the admiralty jurisdiction of the county, and the conservancy of all the waters within the same, were also vested in him. Even when judgment of blood was given, he might sit, attired in his purple robes, though the ecclesiastical canons forbid any clergyman to be present on such an occasion. He was also a temporal prince, being Earl of Sadberge, which he held by barony. Little variation occurred in the exercise of the privileges just described, except during the period of the Commonwealth, until the year 1836, when, by the Act 6 and 7 William IV. c. 19, the regal powers vested in the Bishop of Durham were transferred to the sovereign, "as a franchise and royalty separate from the crown;" and hence her Majesty the Queen is now Countess Palatine of Durham. The office of lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum are at present held under the crown by the Right Hon. the Earl of Durham. The high sheriff of the county is now nominated annually by the sovereign, in the same manner as those of other counties. The jurisdiction of the bishop is therefore purely ecclesiastical; though the manorial rights attached to the demesnes of the see are still considerable.

Previous to the Reform Act, Durham sent to Parliament two members for the county, and two for the city; but now it sends four for the county (two for each division), two for the city, two for Sunderland, and one each for Gateshead and South Shields. The place of election for the northern division, which includes the old wards of Chester and Easington, is the city of Durham; and the polling places are Durham, Sunderland, Lanchester, Whickham, Chester-le-Street, and South Shields. The place of election for the southern division, which includes the old wards of Darlington and Stockton, is Darlington; at which, and at Stockton, Sedgefield, Bishop Auckland, Stanhope, Barnard Castle, and Middleton in Teesdale, are polling places. The county is in the northern circuit, and has at Durham its assizes and quarter sessions, its county gaol, and house of correction. For an account of the various courts of the county, see the city of Durham, where they will be found fully described.

COUNTY INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—In 1854, the receipts, including a balance of £1,406 4s. 9d. from the previous year, amounted to £16,828 3s. 5d. From four successive rates amounting to 2d. in the pound, £9,565 17s. 7d. was raised. £3,754 10s. 11d. was received from the lords of the treasury for conveying convicts, and the cost of criminal prosecutions at the sessions and assizes; and £1,018 3s. 6d. for the maintenance, &c., of prisoners. Fines produced £582 9s. 10½d.; and £28 9s. 6d. was received from the inspectors of weights and measures. £364 15s. 1d. was received from the governor of the gaol for carpets, &c.; and the residue of the county income was derived from various rents, and from incidental sources. The expenditure of the same year was £16,296 14s. 1d., of which the following are the principal items: For repairs of bridges, £280 11s. 9d.; for bridges per contract, £849 16s.; for prosecutions, £4,130 18s. 8d.; for apprehensions, £559 9s. 4d.; for conveying convicts, £57 1s. 7d.; for maintenance, £2,338 1s. 4d.; for materials for gaol, £610 2s. 6d.; for salaries, £1,969 11s. 9d.; for police expenses, £311 17s. 8d.; for weights and measures, £56 2s. 11d.; for advertising, £234 5s. 4d.; for law officers, £778 16s. 6d.; for clothing, £394 15s. 2d.; for new work at gaol, £144 0s. 7d.; for new county rate, £50 10s 6d.; for courts, £55 5s. 2d.; for lunatic asylums, £723 3s. 6d.; for coroners, £1,852 19s. 6d.; and for miscellaneous charges, £894 18s. 4d.

COUNTY CONSTABULARY, &c.—For police purposes the county has been divided into seven divisions, each under a superintendent; and these divisions have been still further subdivided into sections, for better supervision and organisation. The divisions are Bishop Auckland, Chester-le-Street, Darlington, Easington, Lanchester, Barnard Castle, and Durham; the chief constable and the head officers being at the latter place. Police stations have been provided, or are in course of erection, at Bishop Auckland, Gateshead, Houghton-le-Spring, and other principal places, for holding petty sessions throughout the county; also lock-up cells, with accommodations for resident constables attached, at various other detached stations where most required. Petty sessions are held as follows at the following places: Durham, Darlington, Gateshead, South Shields, and Sunderland, weekly; Bishop Auckland, Houghton-le-Spring, Hartlepool, Lanchester, Shotley Bridge, Stockton, and Staindrop, fortnightly; Barnard Castle, Chester-le-Street, Castle Eden, Stanhope, and Wolsingham, monthly; Hetton-le-Hole and Seaham Harbour, irregularly. The total expenditure for the constabulary force of the county, for the year 1854, was £8,920 5s. 8d., from which we must deduct the sum of £1,586 18s. 5½d., received on their account for various services, leaving the net cost of the force for the year at £7,333 7s. 2½d.

ECCLESIASTICAL POLITY.—For ecclesiastical purposes this county forms part of the diocese of Durham, which comprises the whole of the counties of Durham and Northumberland, and, until lately, the parish of Alston in Cumberland, and the peculiars of Allertonshire and Howdenshire, in Yorkshire. It forms one archdeaconry, that of Durham, which is divided into the deaneries of Chester, Darlington, Easington, and Stockton, and contains 128 benefices. At the period of the census, in 1851, this county contained 621 places of worship, of which 169 belonged to the Established Church, 20 to the Roman Catholics, 14 to the Scottish Presbyterians, 25 to the Independents, 21 to the Baptists, 351 to the Wesleyan Methodists, and 21 to other denominations. Of the 181,832 sittings furnished by the various religious bodies, the Church of England supplied 68,958, the Roman Catholics 4,816, the Scottish Presbyterians 6,550, the Independents 9,397, the Baptists 5,797, the Wesleyan Methodists 81,501, and the other denominations 4,818.

CHARITIES.—Charitable institutions and bequests are as numerous in this county as in any part of the kingdom, both for the relief and education of the poor. They are in almost every town and parish of the county, as will be seen in the histories of the towns and parishes, where we have given brief but explicit accounts and descriptions of the Public Institutions, Alma-houses, and Benefactions of each place; in which task we have availed ourselves of the Reports of the Commissioners deputed by Parliament to Inquire into the State and Appropriation of Public Charities in England. This commission owed its existence to that indefatigable lawyer and senator, Henry Brougham, now Lord Brougham and Vaux, who doubtless intended it to have been conducted in a more effective and less expensive manner, similar to those which had been instituted for the same purpose in several previous reigns. It commenced operations in 1817, and did not finish till 1835. The reports comprise thirty-six large folio volumes, published for the use of Parliament and the public libraries. The spirit of all that relates to this county has been transferred to this work, together with the substance of the last year's reports, published by the trustees and managers of the other institutions and charities which afford such publicity of their receipts and expenditure. There are, however, some which, from their general character, require to be separately noticed, and of which we subjoin Mr. Fordyce's able summary:—

and Shotley, together with all his manors, advowsons, buildings, mills, mines, quarries, lands, fisheries, tithes, &c., &c., within the parishes or territories of Bambrough, Blanchland, Thornton, North Sunderland, Shorestone, Heatham, Bradnell, Berwick, Burton, Newham, Bradford, Fryars-Lucker, Warrenford, Mousen, Warrenton, Tuggle, Budle, Shildon, Haddery-burn, Shotley, West-haugh-head, Easthaugh-head, Easthaugh-foot, Edmond-hill, Hunstanworth, Holy Island, and Norham, which he had lately purchased, in the counties of Northumberland and Durham, and were of the yearly value of £1,312 13s., upon such trust as he should thereafter direct. He also ordained that the residue of the rents of the before-mentioned lands should be for ever applied and disposed by his said trustees to such charitable uses as they should appoint, but not to be appropriated for the augmentation of any of the gifts, charities, or benefactions given by him to the University of Oxford, Lincoln College, or the city of Durham. That the aforesaid manors, &c., might be for ever conveyed and assured for the uses and under the trust as appointed by his will, he directed, that when one or two of the trustees should die, then the survivors should, within three months, elect one or more clergymen to be trustee or trustees, so as never to exceed five in number; the Rector of Lincoln College for ever to be one. Under these regulations successive trustees have been appointed, and conveyances effected; the present trustees being the Ven. Charles Thorpe, Archdeacon of Durham; the Rev. J. Thompson, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford; the Rev. W. N. Darnell, Rector of Stanhope; the Rev. H. G. Liddell, Rector of Easington; and the Rev. J. D. Clark, Belford.

"The following are the annual payments specifically provided for by Lord Crewe's will, and paid up at the date of the Charity Commissioners' Report, viz. :—

"The will further informs us that the Lady Stawell had a rent-charge of £350 per annum arising out of the bishop's manors and lands, and directs that, after her decease, £200 yearly should be paid to the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the University of Oxford, for such purposes as they should appoint; £100 yearly to the mayor and aldermen of the city of Durham, to be applied by them in placing out as apprentices such poor children of that city as they shall direct; £20 yearly to a schoolmaster at Bishop Auckland (now paid to the master of the Barrington School), for teaching 30 poor boys of that town gratis; and £30 yearly (now doubled) for clothing such 30 poor boys, and who have hence been designated 'blue coat boys.'

"Dr. Sharp's Gift.—The Rev. John Sharp, D.D., Perpetual Curate of Bambrough, and appointed a trustee of Lord Crewe's charities in 1758, by a deed of bargain and sale (enrolled in the Court of Chancery), bearing date Nov. 18, 1788, gave certain messuages and lands in Bambrough to the trustees, for the support and reparation of the great tower of Bambrough Castle. By will, dated April 17, 1792, the same gentleman bequeathed £1,261 6s. 9½d. for the purchase of land or stock for the perpetual repairs of the said tower. The testator, in his lifetime, having applied £365 15s., part of this sum, in the purchase of land, the remaining £895 11s. 9½d. was, on March 23, 1797, applied in the purchase of £1,750 1s. 2d. three-per-cent consols, which was assigned to the trustees of the charity. The total income applicable to the purposes declared in the will of Lord Crewe was, according to the Charity Commissioners' Report,—

Rental of the estates in Bambrough and Norham.. . . .	£5,495	17	5
Do. do. Blanchland, Shotley, &c. . . . .	2,003	13	6
Paid by tenants at Bambrough, in lieu of services they are bound to perform in cases of shipwreck, such services not having been required or performed . . . . .	83	0	0
Dividends on stock . . . . .	253	9	4
	£8,126	8	8

"The property derived from Dr. Sharp produced £40 17s. in rents, and £69 from stock in the three-per-cent consols. After the payment of the various items specified in Lord Crewe's will, and other necessary outgoings, the residue of the income is applied for such charitable purposes as the trustees for the time being think most beneficial, but more particularly for such as occur within the diocese of Durham. To carry out those objects, it was found necessary that one or more of the trustees should reside at Bambrough Castle; and in January, 1794, a resolution was passed, ordering that every trustee should be allowed £4 4s. for every journey between Bambrough and Durham, and so in proportion for any greater or less distance, on the business of the trust; and that when any trustee should keep house at the castle, he should be allowed 10s. per day (the same sum only to be allowed when there should be two or more trustees,) towards such contingent expenses of hospitality as should arise. The cost of housekeeping at the castle is defrayed by each trustee, except so far as he may be supplied with milk from the farm, rabbits from the sandhills, fruit and vegetables from the garden, and coals from the charity-estate.

"One of the purposes to which the charity has been directed by the trustees is the augmentation of small livings. The annual payment under this head, according to the Commissioners' report, was £293 6s. 8d. In contributions towards building and enlarging churches, &c., the average was £395. The annual payments made to different schools, in addition to those directed by the donor, and those established at Bambrough and Blanchland, were £263 6s. In Bambrough Castle two rooms are appropriated, the one for a boys' school, and the other for a school for girls. The master and mistress have both apartments in the castle,—the former receiving a salary of £75, and the latter £30 per annum. To these schools all the children of poor persons in the parish of Bambrough are admitted, and taught on the national system without any charge, and are supplied with books and stationery.

"In July, 1797, a resolution was passed to take twelve poor girls as boarders into the castle. This number is now increased to thirty, who are elected by the trustees, provided with board, lodging, and washing, and completely clothed. They are taken between the ages of seven and nine, and allowed to remain till they are sixteen, or fit to go out to service. They are taught reading, writing, accounts, needlework, and spinning in the school, with the other girls; and out of school they are under the superintendence of a matron, who instructs them in washing and other household duties; and when any of the trustees are resident at the castle, two of the boarders are taken in rotation into the house to assist, and learn the nature of domestic service. When they are of a proper age, they are generally placed out in service, and the trustees use their endeavours to obtain good situations for them. On going out, they are supplied with clothes, and each of them receives the sum of £2 12s.; and if, at the end of the year, they are found to have continued in service, and to have borne a good character, they receive £1 1s. each, and a present of books. The average annual expenses of the establishment are stated at £285 8s., which, after deducting £27 19s. 9d. received for work done, leaves a net cost of £257 8s. 3d.

"Two schools are likewise supported in Blanchland: a boys' school, kept by a master, who receives a salary of £50 per annum, and has the use of a house and garden belonging to the charity-estate, rent free; and a school for girls, the mistress of which receives a salary of £20, and has the use of a house and garden. In these schools all the poor children of Blanchland are admitted, and instructed without any charge. The scholars are also supplied with books and stationery, and coals are provided for the master and mistress. The annual expenses of these schools are stated at about £95 or £100.

"The donations towards the building and endowment of schools, and houses for schoolmasters, are estimated at £116 per annum. The exhibitions for students at the universities were stated in the commissioners' report at £60 per annum. Since that time, five, of £20 each, have been appropriated at Durham University. In placing out apprentices from the schools of Newcastle, Gateshead, Sunderland, Bishop Wearmouth, and South Shields, and in allowances to the sons and daughters of clergymen of the diocese of Durham, £75 per annum was stated as the average. The average annual expenditure under the head of annuities and casual donations was £517 14s. 8d.; and the subscriptions and donations to charitable institutions averaged £450 18s.

"The trustees have adopted the following modes of affording relief to the poor of Bambrough, &c. In 1797, a shop was established for the sale of meal and flour, for which purpose a quantity of barley, oats, and peas are purchased of the tenants of the charity-estates at the market price, each tenant being obliged to furnish a proportionable quantity. The grain is ground at a windmill, erected close to the castle walls; and the meal is sold to such of the poor as are recommended by any respectable neighbour, at little more than the prime cost of the grain before it was ground. Proper regulations are made for preventing persons purchasing for sale, by limiting them to the quantities required for their respective families. The quantity sold amounts to about £900 per annum, and the annual cost to the charity is stated at about £85. The trustees have also established a shop for cheese, grocery, and articles of that nature, from which the poor are supplied in the same manner as at the meal-shop, and subject to the like regulations. The value of the goods sold is about £800 a year, and the produce is generally sufficient to cover the expenditure.

"There are also a dispensary and surgery in the castle; and a salary of £85 10s. per annum is paid to a surgeon for attending twice a week, giving advice and surgical assistance, and dispensing medicine to such poor persons as apply under a recommendation from any respectable inhabitant of the neighbourhood. The annual expense of drugs and medicine, and of an attendant in the surgery, is about £60. A midwife is engaged to attend poor lying-in women in the neighbourhood; and there is a supply of childbed linen in the castle, which is lent out to such persons as are considered fit objects of the charity, each of whom receives, at the same time, the sum of 2s. 6d. These expenses, including a salary of £20 to the midwife, are between £80 and £40 per annum. Milk from the trustees' farm is distributed to the poor of Bambrough nearly throughout the year, at an expense of from £10 to £15; and beef is given at Christmas to the amount of about £20. Coal is delivered annually at Bambrough, North Sunderland, and Blanchland, to seventeen poor families in each place. At Blanchland, meat to the amount of £10 is distributed yearly at Christmas; and there is also a supply of childbed linen kept. About £160 per annum is bestowed, in stated payments, on the poor of these townships.

"Assistance in Cases of Wreck.—The manor of Bambrough, and a considerable part of the trust-estate, the commissioners say in their report, 'is situated on the coast of a bay formed by Holy Island and North Sunderland Point, which are distant from each other about eight miles. This bay is fully exposed to the north-east wind, which is frequently very tempestuous; and the danger to the navigation is much increased by the numerous islands, which extend several miles, the nearest being about two miles from the shore. The accidents which often occurred on this inclement coast attracted the attention of the trustees, and principally induced them to make Bambrough Castle a place of occasional residence. They have ready in the castle such implements as are required to give assistance to stranded vessels, rooms to receive any property which may be saved, and clothing for the shipwrecked sailors, who are also supplied with the means of returning to their homes. They have also procured a life-boat for the fishermen of Holy Island, and give them rewards for the use of it in cases of distress. During the continuance of fogs, which are frequent and sudden, a gun is fired at short intervals; and a patrol is stationed on the shore in tempestuous nights, to give alarm in case of ships requiring assistance, and to act as a guide to any persons cast on shore. The trustees covenant also with the tenants of the estate, that they shall furnish carts, horses, and men, in proportion to their respective farms, to protect and bring away whatever can be saved from the wrecks.' The harbour at North Sunderland has been improved by lengthening the pier, and building a breakwater, as a shelter from the south-east, at a cost of about £5,000. The annual expenditure attending it is stated at about £65.

about £570 ; and the incidental expenses connected with the management of the charity, amounts to nearly an equal sum. The entire outlay appears, from the above detail, to be between £5,000 and £6,000. The trustees meet at least four times a year, for the purpose of transacting such business as may be required, and they examine and audit the accounts half-yearly in January and July, copies thereof having been previously sent to each of them. They present to the livings of Bambrough, Blanchland, and Shotley, as they become vacant. It may be remarked that the arrangements, as above given from the commissioners' report, are subject to such modifications as the trustees may from time to time think proper.

" Bishop Barrington's Charities—Charities for Schools in the County of Durham.—By an act of parliament, 41 Geo. III., for inclosing certain moors in the townships of Franwellgate and Witton Gilbert, and in the manors of Chester and Lancaster, one forty-eighth part of the lands, and one twenty-fourth part of their value, were allotted to the Hon. and Right Rev. Shute, Lord Bishop of Durham, and his successors, as lords of the said manors ; and by another act of the same session, the said twenty-fourth was vested in the bishop as trustee for the establishment and maintenance of schools for the religious and virtuous education of poor children of the county of Durham ; the government of such schools to be vested in the bishop as president, the lord lieutenant of the county, two knights of the shire for the time being, and such other persons as should, within six months after the passing of the act, become subscribers. The income arising from this property having been found insufficient for the establishment of schools, an act of parliament, 3 Geo. IV., was passed, enabling the bishop to apply the funds of the charity to the assistance of such schools as were then or might afterwards be established. At the time of the commissioners' inquiry, the annual income was £83 6s. 8d. ; and sums varying from £5 to £100 have been applied in building, enlarging, and repairing schools and school-houses in different parts of the diocese, under the direction of the bishop for the time being, according to recommendations received from a committee for the encouragement of parochial schools.

" Charity for Schools on the Madras System in the Diocese of Durham.—By his will, dated December 10th, 1825, Bishop Barrington bequeathed £3,000 to be applied by his executors, George Viscount Barrington, William Keppel Barrington, and Augustus Barrington, as they should think most advisable, ' for the purpose of erecting a school or schools for the instruction of poor children of the diocese of Durham, according to the Madras System, or for otherwise promoting that benevolent purpose in any manner they should deem most proper, and most likely to effect its salutary object, and to aid and assist any institutions in the said diocese for that object.' Of this sum, £300 was paid for legacy duty ; and sums generally varying from £50 to £100 have been paid from time to time for the purposes mentioned in the will.

" Society for Promoting Religious Education, &c., in the Diocese of Durham.—By a codicil of the same date to the will, the bishop bequeathed £40,000 three-per-cent consols to his executors, upon trust, from the dividends of which an annuity of £1,000 was to be paid to Ann Elizabeth Colberg, £100 to Ann Raucott, and a like sum to Ann Franklin. After their decease, one moiety of the dividends was directed to be applied to the formation of a society, called 'The Barrington Society for Promoting Religious Education and Christian Piety in the diocese of Durham,' of which the Bishop of Durham and the archdeacons of Durham and Northumberland for the time being were to be official governors. All donors of fifty guineas, or who, as executors or administrators of any deceased persons, should have paid to the treasurer any legacy of 100 guineas, were to be life governors, and all annual subscribers of £5 5s. or upwards were, during the current year, to be annual governors; the bishop being president. The governors were directed to meet on the first Wednesday in September in every year, for the appointment of a committee and other officers. One moiety of the income of the society was ordered to be applied in or towards the religious education of not less than five of the sons of clergymen of the Church of England, resident in the diocese of Durham, and not having the means of giving such sons a useful and proper education. No boy was to be eligible below the age of fourteen, nor who had not been completely instructed in the rudiments of the Greek and Latin languages. The contribution was to be by annual allowances, or by defraying all or any part of the expenses of their education, or by any other mode deemed expedient. No boy was to be entitled to the provision for more than three years, unless intended for holy orders, and of a character and disposition fitted for that function, in which case an annual exhibition might be allowed to him for four years longer, provided he were a resident member of Oxford or Cambridge University. The other half of the society's income was directed to be applied in promoting and encouraging the erection, enlarging, or fitting up of churches and chapels in the diocese, in such manner as should best tend to the interest of pure religion and of the Established Church; and in case there should not be, in any year or years, in the opinion of the governors, proper objects for this application, the unappropriated surplus was to go in aid of the first mentioned moiety.

"On the deaths of the annuitants, the governors held their first meeting on the 4th January, 1834, when six scholarships of £40 each were established in the University of Durham, and £100 each was voted to four projected new churches at North Shields, South Shields, Darlington, and Stockton, and £70 to one at Seaham. A similar disposal of the funds has from time to time been carried out. Of the other moiety arising from the three-per-cent consols, the bishop's will directed that two-thirds of the dividends should be paid to the perpetual curate for the time being of Bishop Auckland or Auckland St. Andrew, and the remaining third to the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy.

"Pigg's Charity.—John Pigg, town's surveyor for Newcastle, by will dated October 27th, 1688, devised to Robert Bewicke, William Hutchinson, Phineas Allen, Matthias Partis, Lancelot Cramlington, John Rouchester, and Matthew Ladler, and their heirs, as trustees, three messuages, burgages, tenements, or dwelling houses, with their appurtenances, in Pilgrim-street, Newcastle; two third-parts of two copyhold tenements or farmholds, with the appurtenances, in Earsdon, Northumberland; a moiety of another copyhold tenement or farmhold in Earsdon aforesaid; and all his other property in Newcastle, Durham, and Northumberland, to pay, in the first place, all his debts and the funeral expenses; and afterwards to pay his niece, Ann Rea, for her great care and kindness to him, such sums of money as they should think fit and convenient for her. From the residue of the rents and profits, he directed that £5 per annum should be paid to the minister of Earsdon for the time being, 'if he should be an able, preaching, and godly minister,' or to such other minister as they should think deserving, for preaching at least five sermons every year in the church; or, otherwise, that sum was to be paid to the churchwardens, to be distributed to the poor of the parish. A further yearly sum of £5 was to be paid to the overseers of the highways in Northumberland, for amending such highways as the trustees should think proper; and all the remaining income was ordered to be given to such poor people within the counties of Northumberland, Durham, and Newcastle, and in such proportions, as the trustees should think fit, so as the said poor people should be of the Protestant religion, and had not cast themselves into poverty by their idleness or prodigality.' On the death of two of the trustees, the remaining five were to elect successors.

"In obedience to a decree of chancery, the two third-parts of the property in Earsdon were surrendered by the trustees, on the 8rd July, 1696, to John Simpson and Ann his wife, formerly Ann Leay, in satisfaction of the portion to which she was entitled under the will. Successive trustees not having been appointed, the last survivor, Lancelot Cramlington, devised the trust property to his nephew, in whose family it descended to Henry Cramlington, Esq., of Newcastle, who held it at the time of the commissioners' visit. The clear yearly rents of the premises in that town were then about £100, and the proceeds from the estate at Earsdon were stated at a similar sum; but no payment had ever been made for any charitable purpose, except £5 annually to the minister at Earsdon, which had been regularly paid. At present, however, the property in Pilgrim-street, Newcastle, consisting of three houses, one a public house, known by the name of the 'White House,' and the two adjoining, is let on lease to A. G. Grey, Esq., at an annual rent of £140, which sum is paid to the Newcastle Infirmary by the present trustees of the property."

POOR LAW UNIONS — Durham contains fourteen Poor Law Unions, viz.— Bishop Auckland, Chester-le-Street, Darlington, Durham, Easington, Gateshead, Houghton-le-Spring, Lanchester, Sedgefield, South Shields, Stockton, Sunderland, Teesdale, and Weardale, which will be found fully described in the histories of the towns or parishes in which the workhouses are situated.

DURHAM WARD.

THIS Ward is situated in the southern half of the great coal field which extends from the Coquet to the Tees, and is bounded by the wards of Stockton, Darlington, Chester, and Easington, among the three latter of which it was formerly divided; but in pursuance of an act of parliament which came into operation on the 13th July, 1829, the city of Durham and surrounding districts were formed into a new ward, bearing the above designation. This ward is intersected by the rivers Wear and its tributaries, whose banks are clothed with the richest verdure. The district is highly fertile, and its coal mines are numerous and productive. The parishes, &c., belonging to Durham Ward are St. Mary-le-Bow parish, or North Bailey; St. Mary-le-Less parish, or South Bailey; College and Episcopal Palace, extra parochial; St. Nicholas' parish, formerly in the northern division of Easington Ward; St. Giles' parish, formerly in the southern division of Easington Ward; St. Oswald's parish, with Elvet borough and barony, and its dependant townships, formerly in the middle division of Chester Ward, and Chapelry of St. Margaret; these parishes and chapelry belong to the city and its dependencies, which, with the following, constitute the whole of Durham Ward. Bishop Middleham parish, formerly in the north-eastern division of Stockton Ward; Brancepeth parish, formerly in the north-western division of Darlington Ward; Esh chapelry, and Wilton Gilbert parish, inclusive of Kibblesworth, formerly in the west division of Chester Ward; Pitlington parish; Sherburn Hospital, extra-parochial, and Whitwell House, extra-parochial, formerly in the southern division of Easington Ward. The following townships also belong to this ward, viz.:—Plasworth, in Chester-le-Street parish; Moorsley and Moorhouse, in Houghton-le-Spring parish; Cassop, Coxhoe, and Quarrington, in Kelloe parish; and Ferryhill and Hett, in Merrington parish. These townships will be found fully described under the heads of their respective parishes.

HISTORY OF THE CITY OF DURHAM.

This ancient and beautiful city, the capital of the county palatine, see of a bishop, and the seat of a university, is situated nearly in the centre of the county, 256 miles N.N.W. of London, 132 miles S.S.E. of Edinburgh, 67 miles N.N.W. of York, 15 miles south of Newcastle, 48 miles south of Alnwick, and 67 E.S.E. of Carlisle. It contains five parishes, two extra-parochial places, one township, one parochial chapelry, and a barony and a borough. The population in 1851 was 14,188 souls, of which 6,385 were males, and 6,803 females. There were at the same time 1,768 inhabited houses, 55 uninhabited, and 5 in process of erection.

From all the neighbouring points of view, the appearance of this interesting city is striking and unique, and the grandeur of its public buildings cannot fail to elicit the admiration of the visitor. The older portion of the city occupies a high rocky peninsula, formed by the river Wear; and its situation and figure is so peculiar—in connection also with its historical associations—as to have occasioned its being emphatically called the “English Zion.”*

The present aspect of the city is thus described by a recent writer. “The promontory or peninsula on which the ancient portion of the city stands, is about 800 yards long, and measuring from a sort of isthmus 250 yards from bank to bank. Across this isthmus are thrown the lofty keep and wall of the castle and palace of the bishops, now converted to the uses of the University of Durham. At each end of this line of defence, the central ridge sinks towards the river, and the two ancient bridges of Elvet and Framwellgate lead eastwards and westwards to the suburbs bearing those names. The Town Hall, Market Place, and the central portions of the city, are divided from the suburbs by the river, and are placed north of and beneath the castle and palace. South of these structures, and therefore within the peninsula, stand the cathedral, the college, two parish churches, and a street, called the Bailey, in the name and position of which are preserved the line of the ancient wall and outer court of the episcopal quarter. Near the two bridges, the city and suburbs descend to the water side. The river banks, both on and opposite to the peninsula, except near the bridges, are free from buildings; and though high and abrupt, are planted with large trees, and laid out in gardens, greensward, and public walks, which are maintained and laid open by the dean and chapter; and a park, without any expense to the public, is thus provided for the health and recreation of the inhabitants. The Wear is crossed by a third or Prebend’s Bridge, which springs from the south-western corner of the peninsula, and thus leads direct from the cathedral precincts to Elvet banks and the open country. There are three mill-dams upon the river in or near the city: one in the neighbourhood of the cathedral, 400 yards above Framwellgate Bridge; a second, 100 yards below that bridge; and a third 1,500 yards lower down, at Kepier Hospital. The height of these dams is four, five, and seven feet respectively. Adopting this description, the city will then be composed of three great divisions. Of these, the central is built upon the high ridge extending northwards from the Market Place, and is known as Claypath, formerly called Clayport, and St. Giles's Gate, or Gilly Gate, a street 1,500 yards in length, falling each way towards the upper and lower Wear, and distant from that river from 100 to 300 yards. The railway station lies in this quarter, and east of it is the modern colliery village of New Durham. The eastern division of the city is in the suburb of Elvet, on the left bank of the Wear. It is composed of New and Old Elvet, two main streets that converge upon the bridge, which springs from their junction in the middle of a sharp bend in the river. New Elvet turns south from the end of the bridge, and ascends rather steeply till it divides into Church-street, leading to the great south turnpike road; and Hallgarth-street, turning to the south-east, and joining the Stockton Road; at the end of this street is a lofty conical eminence called Mountjoy. Old Elvet proceeds direct from the bridge eastwards, leading to the gaol and county courts, and to the convenient portion of ground upon which Durham races annually take place. The western division is the suburb usually called the borough of Framwellgate. Its main streets radiate from its bridge: South-street running southwards along the west bank of the river, and terminating by the Grove, the seat of the late Stephen George Kemble, Esq.; Milburngate and Framwellgate running northwards, at some little distance from the river, and Crossgate, Alergate, and the New North Road lying between them. Two small brooks, St. Margaret's Beck and the Clock-mill Beck, descend on each side of Crossgate, and reach the river above and below the bridge. The municipal area of the city of Durham contains 1,260 acres; and under the recent control of the commissioners of the city, there were between five and six miles of public way. A small portion of the carriage ways are Macadamised, another portion paved with Aberdeen granite, and the footpaths are either laid with freestone or Caithness flags. It is lighted with gas, and the water supplied by a public company. The city consists of three manors, viz., the Bishop's Manor, comprehending the city liberties and the Bailey, which are held by the bishop by the service of castle guard; the manor held by the dean and chapter, comprising the barony and borough of Elvet, Crossgate, and South-street; and the manor of Gilligate, formerly belonging to Kieper Hospital. The borough of Framwellgate is also incorporated with the city."

ANNALS.—It does not appear in the writings of any of our ancient historians, that there was a town, where Durham now stands, before the monks rested there with the remains of St. Cuthbert, when driven from their peaceful cloister by the Danish invaders, in the year 995; and the tradition which records the circumstances connected with these events are thus detailed by the old chroniclers:—On the return of the monks from Ripon, the procession halted at Wredelaw, generally supposed to be the lofty eminence of Wardonlaw, five miles distant from the eastern coast, and commanding a full prospect of the fertile vale of the Wear. At this spot the ark which contained the body of St. Cuthbert became suddenly immovable, and it was only on the third day, after a solemn fast and supplication, that the saint communicated his pleasure in a vision to a monk named Eadmer, commanding that their course should be directed towards Dunholme, where his church was in future to find a secure establishment.

When the monks rested on the summit of the hill at Durham, there were a few cottages on its sides occupied by labourers employed in reducing its romantic slopes to a state of cultivation. The trees on the summit of the hill had already been felled, and corn was growing on the ground, but the river banks were still fringed with thick wood, which the axe of the settler had not yet assailed. The first care of the bishop and clergy was to provide a temporary resting place for the remains of St. Cuthbert; and Simeon of Durham informs us that a small church made of branches of trees, was the first to receive the treasure. The relics were subsequently removed to a stone edifice, called the White Church, where they rested during the three years in which Bishop Aldune was erecting the cathedral. Much labour was expended on this structure, and all the inhabitants between the rivers Coquet and Tees were, at the command of the Earl of Northumberland, employed in the work, many of whom, no doubt, after the termination of their labours, were induced to settle around it, and building themselves habitations in the beginning of the 11th century, gave rise to the Saxon city of Dunholme, which afterwards received from the Normans the name of Duresme, of which its present appellation is evidently a corruption. Bishop Aldune did not live to see his design completed, but left the western part of the edifice, after eighteen years of pious labour, to be finished by his successors.

Here, enjoying all the privileges which a monastic life affords, the career of the monks passed in undisturbed tranquillity for nearly fifty years. In 1040, the city was attacked by the Scots under Duncan, but without success; for, according to Simeon, the enemy was repulsed by the citizens with great loss; and he adds, that the heads of several of their leaders were exposed on poles in the Market Place. The same historian also informs us, that at this period Ælfred, a monk of the convent, travelled into Northumberland and collected from various churches and monasteries the most valuable relics of the saints and confessors of the northern church, in order to their translation to Durham. He also removed the remains of the Venerable Bede from Jarrow, and deposited it within the shrine of St. Cuthbert.

When William the Norman ascended the English throne, a powerful confederacy was formed at Durham to resist his authority. Fortifications for defending the city were erected, and frequent sallies were made against the invaders; but being disappointed by the non-arrival of Sweyn, the Danish king, from whom they expected assistance, the confederates were obliged to disband, and William with his army entered the city. He shortly afterwards granted many privileges to the inhabitants. Notwithstanding these favours, the inhabitants regarded the Normans with secret dislike, and took advantage of every opportunity to resist their authority.

The king, in order to reduce the people of the north to obedience, sent, in 1069, Robert Comyn, a Norman noble, with 700 veteran troops, to enforce his authority. On the confines of the bishopric he was met by Bishop Egilwin, who is said to have warned him of the turbulent state of the people, and of the danger of irritating them by further acts of severity. The Norman listened to the admonition with contempt, and, punishing with death several of the peasantry who had insulted or interrupted his march, entered the city of Durham, where the usual cruelties and excesses were committed, the inhabitants being plundered of their goods and treated with the greatest insolence by the soldiery. During the night the English assembled in great force, and about the dawn of day burst into the city. The Normans, exhausted by the fatigue of their march, and the debauch of the last evening, fell for the most part unresisting victims to the fury of their enemies; the others fled to their leader at the palace of the bishop. For awhile they kept their pursuers at bay from the doors and windows; but, in a short, time the building was in flames, and Comyn with his associates perished in the conflagration. Of the whole number, two only escaped from the massacre.

The outrage that had been perpetrated was not suffered to pass with impunity. William, at the head of his troops, advanced in person to chastise the rebels, and from York to Durham, the march of the Normans was traced in characters of blood. The inhabitants were devoted to indiscriminate slaughter, and even the convents and monasteries, the homes of piety and learning, were involved in the common destruction. The fields in culture were burned, and the cattle and the corn in barns carried off by the conquerors. The clergy and monks of Durham escaped the storm by flight; and, directing their course northwards, they halted successively at Jarrow, Bedlington, and Tughall, and on the fourth evening reached in safety the Isle of Lindisfarne. On the retreat of the Normans, glutted with spoil and vengeance, the monks returned to Durham, and found that the treasures of the church, which in their flight they had left behind, had been plundered; and the massy crucifix given by Earl Tostig was thrown from the high altar, broken, and despoiled of its gold and jewels.

William, on his return from an expedition against Malcolm of Scotland, in the year 1072, appointed Walcher to the bishopric, and ordered a castle or fortress to be built at Durham, for the purpose of keeping the inhabitants in awe, and as a defence against their northern enemies. The duration of his stay is not specified; but, during its continuance, he made diligent inquiry with reference to the body of St. Cuthbert, whether it really rested at Durham or not. His question was answered in the affirmative, by all the members of the monastic body; yet he was slow to believe, and having bishops and abbots to obey his orders, he determined to be satisfied of the truth or falsehood of the assertion; and more than this he openly avowed his intention of putting to the sword the dignitaries of the church if the body should not be found. Fear fell upon all the members of the community, and in their distress they prayed God, through the intercession of St. Cuthbert, to show them his mercy. The festival of All Saints, the day appointed for the inspection, had arrived, and the bishop had commenced the celebration of mass, when the king was seized with a violent fever, of so withering a nature, that he hastily rushed out of the church without having effected his purpose, mounted his horse, and never once drew his bridle until he had crossed the Tees, and had left behind him the territory of the saint.

Much discontent prevailed during the administration of Bishop Walcher, who was slain in a revolt at Gateshead. Shortly after his murder, an attempt was made by the people to surprise the castle, and though they were masters of the city for four days, they were at last obliged to disperse, and avoid by flight the impending storm of vengeance. The death of Walcher awakened again the jealousy of William, who entrusted to one bishop the task of avenging another. His half-brother Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, marched to Durham with a numerous army, and meeting no opposition, ravaged the surrounding country.

Rufus had scarcely mounted the throne when Durham once more became the scene of insurrectionary movements. William de Carleph, who was bishop at the time, refused to acknowledge the authority of the king, preferring the claim of Robert, the Conqueror's eldest son. A royal army was accordingly despatched to the north, which laid siege to Durham, and surrounded the place. On the suppression of the insurrection the bishop fled to Normandy, the temporalities of the see were seized by the crown, and John de Tailbois and Ernesius de Burone were made governors of the castle and palatinate. The bishop was not restored to his see till 1091, shortly after which he granted to the convent the manor of Elvet, in the order of a borough, "where the monks should have forty merchants' houses or tradesmen's shops, distinct and separate from the bishop's borough of Durham, that they might trade there freed from duties payable to the bishop and his successors."

In 1093 or 1094, Bishop Carileph laid the foundation stone of the present cathedral of Durham; and a few years afterwards the city suffered considerably from fire. Bishop Flambard, who was consecrated in 1099, improved the fortifications of the city, by extending the walls between the church and the castle; he removed all the houses on the area between these two edifices, and levelled the ground; he also fortified the castle with a moat, strengthened the banks of the river, and built the bridge at Framwellgate. In April, 1139, a treaty of peace, between the kings of England and Scotland, was confirmed at Durham, by Prince Henry and the barons depending on his father and himself, in the presence of the Empress Maud, and several attendant barons of the southern counties. The conditions of the peace were, that King Stephen should yield to Henry the earldom of Northumberland, with the exception of the two towns of Newcastle and Bambrough; the lands of St. Cuthbert, and those of St. Andrew in Hexhamshire. The King of Scotland and his son engaging during their lives to keep peace with Stephen, and to be faithful to him.

During the reign of Richard I., the borough of Elvet was restored by Bishop Pudsey, who also built Elvet Bridge, and completed the city wall along the banks of the river. This bishop, having incurred the displeasure of the monarch, Henry II., was several times deprived of the custody of the place, and on the death of Pudsey, the castle was taken possession of for the crown.

King John visited Durham in 1213, where he resided for several days, and we find him here again in 1217. The city was also visited by Henry III., during the episcopacy of Bishop Farnham. Edward I. after the victory of Falkirk, halted at Durham, where he held a council of the nobility and gave away the estates of several of the Scottish lords who had opposed him. During the sitting of the council intelligence having arrived that the Scots were again in arms, the king immediately marched back his troops to give them battle, and on his return kept his Christmas at Tynemouth. In 1300 the king was again at Durham, when we find him acting as mediator between the bishop and the monks of the convent.

In 1312, Robert Bruce, King of Scotland, at the head of a powerful army, entered Northumberland, and, after burning Hexham and Corbridge, marched across the palatinate with such rapidity, that he arrived at Durham, and laid the suburbs in ashes before the inhabitants of the city were aware of his approach. Three years afterwards the Scots again invaded England, when they wasted the country, and destroyed the seat of the Prior of Durham, at Beaufrepaire. The walls of the city of Durham having been neglected, and becoming ruinous, were restored, and put into a state of defence by Bishop Beaumont, who, in 1323, received a severe censure from Edward II., for his negligence in matters so important. Durham was shortly afterwards again the scene of a royal visit, Edward III. resting there with his army previous to and after his campaign in Stanhope Forest. During his stay at Durham, the king, accompanied by his nobles, visited the cathedral; and, after allowing the soldiers two days rest in the city and its environs, he marched to York, where the troops were disbanded. A circumstance honourable to the inhabitants of Durham must not be omitted; when the army moved forward in pursuit of the Scots, the baggage and waggons were left in a wood, where they were discovered by the people of Durham, who removed them at their own cost, and placed them in their empty barns for security.

On April 1st, 1393, Edward III. arrived again at Durham, on his march northwards, and during his stay in the city, lodged in the priory. A few days after, Queen Philippa came from Knaresborough to meet him, and, being unacquainted with the peculiar customs of the church of Durham, went through the abbey gates to the priory, and, after supping with the king, retired to rest. This alarmed the monks, one of whom went to the king, and told him, that St. Cuthbert could not bear the presence of a woman. Unwilling to give any offence to the church, Edward immediately ordered the queen to rise, who, in her under garments only, returned by the gate through which she had entered, and went to the castle, where she passed the night. We find Edward again here at the installation of the learned and excellent Bishop Bury, on which occasion a splendid feast was given to the royal and noble persons who attended the ceremony. The King and Queen of England, Baliol, King of Scotland, two archbishops, seven bishops, five earls, and all the nobility of the north were entertained with magnificent hospitality. Edward re-visited the city in 1356, and collected troops in the neighbourhood to reinforce his army, previous to his expedition into Scotland. In 1404, Lord Hastings and Lord Falconbridge, with two knights, were executed at Durham, for being concerned in a conspiracy against Henry IV.

In 1416, the city suffered much from a visitation of the plague, which continued to rage at intervals for five years, during which period several thousands of the inhabitants of Durham and its vicinity were carried away by its ravages; the assizes were adjourned, and public assemblies suspended, until the destructive malady had subsided.

James, King of Scotland, who had long been a prisoner in England, obtained his liberty in 1424, and married Jane Beaufort, of the royal blood of Lancaster. The city of Durham was the place appointed for the exchange of hostages, and the meeting of the English and Scotch commissioners. Cardinal Langley, Bishop of Durham, the Bishop of London, the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, Lords Dacre and Greystock, Richard Neville, warden of the west marshes, and Sir Robert Umfraville, appeared on the part of England; a truce was concluded for seven years, and James and his queen, after experiencing for a month the hospitality of the cardinal, were honourably escorted by the nobility and gentry of Northumberland and Durham, to the Abbey of Melrose.

The delegates of England and Scotland met several times at Durham, during the episcopacy of Bishop Neville, for the purpose of adjusting the affairs of the two kingdoms. In 1448, Henry VI. visited the shrine of St. Cuthbert, and was entertained for several days by Bishop Neville in the castle of Durham. In letters, still extant, the pious and humble sovereign expressed himself highly gratified by his honourable reception, and by having witnessed the devout and magnificent service of the northern cathedrals.

Among the great days of this ancient city, were those on which, in 1503, the Princess Margaret, daughter of Henry VII., was entertained in Durham, on her way to Scotland, where she was to become the bride of James IV.

Leland, who gives a detailed description of her journey, tells us, that Margaret and her splendid retinue were met about a mile from Durham by "Syr Richard Stanley and my lady his wyffe, accompanyd of gentylmen and gentylwomen varey well apoynted, hys folks arayd in his liveray, to the number of L horsys well mounted. Then the qwene prepared hyrselfe to enter into the said towne, and every ychon in lik wys, in fayr aray, and rychely, after the manere acostomed. In specyall th' erle of Northumberlande ware on a goodly gowne of tynsill fourred with hermynes. He was mounted upon a fayr courser, hys harnays of goldsmith warke, and through the same was sawen small bells that maid a melodyous noyse, without sparing gambads. Hys gentylmen of honor and hys company wer well apoynted. At the intrying of the said towne, and within, in the streyts and in the wyndows was so innumerable people that it was a fayr thing for to see. And in fayr ordre sche was conveyd to the church, the officers of armes, sergeants of armes, trompetts, and mynstrells, going before hyr. At the gatt of the church was my lord the byschop of the said place, and my lord the prior revested in pontificalls, with the convent all revested of ryches copps, in processyon, with the crossys. And ther was apoynted a place for to kiss them. Then the said processyon departed in order, and all the noblesse in lyk wys, to the church, in which ny to the fount was a rich awter, adorned of ryches jewells and precyowes relikes, the which the said byschop delivered to the said qwene to kisse. The xxiiijth day of the said monneth the qwene departed from Durham, accompanyd of hyr noble company as sche had been in the dayes past, in fayr mannere and good ordre, for to come to the towne of Newe Castell."

On the 9th of September, 1518, the Earl of Surrey visited Durham, on his route to meet the Scottish army, which had invaded England under the command of James IV. He assisted at mass in the cathedral, and borrowed St. Cuthbert's banner from the prior to carry with him to the field of battle. A large troop was raised in the palatinate, commanded by Sir William Bulmer; and on the return of the English army from the victorious field of Flodden, many of the Scottish standards were deposited at St. Cuthbert's shrine. No event of importance is recorded as occurring in the city from this period until the dissolution of the religious houses by Henry VIII., when the prior, Hugh Whitehead, surrendered the ecclesiastical establishment of Durham to the monarch.

In May, 1541, Henry VIII. granted his charter of foundation to the new Cathedral of Durham, to which he restored nearly all the ancient possessions of the convent, and appointed James Pilkington the first Protestant bishop. This prelate, in 1545, granted a charter of incorporation to the inhabitants of Durham and Framwellgate, appointing Christopher Severties the first alderman, and William Watson, William Wright, and others, the first assistant burgesses.

In the year 1569, the Rebellion of the North, having for its objects the liberation of Mary, Queen of Scots, and the restoration of the Catholic religion, broke out. The rebels, under the command of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, entered Durham at the head of an armed force from Brancepeth, on the 14th November, and celebrated mass in the cathedral. After the suppression of this outbreak, forty-four persons who had taken part in the revolt, were executed in the market-place at Durham. A few years afterwards, the plague, which raged in the northern counties with great violence, broke out in Durham, and continued at intervals for a period of eight years. During its continuance, the poor people removed into huts and sheds on the commons in the neighbourhood of the city, particularly Elvet Moor, where traces of the arrangements of these miserable abodes were distinctly to be observed before the enclosures, on the south side of the hill, below the wood.

Edmund Duke, Richard Holyday, John Hogge, and Richard Hill, seminary priests, were executed near Durham, in 1591. A singular circumstance took place at this execution. Mr. Robert Maire, of Hardwick, and his young bride were present, and their minds were so impressed by the courage and constancy of the sufferers, that they became Catholics, and their family have since remained faithful to the old religion. Henry Smith, Esq., the father of Mrs. Maire, and a zealous Protestant, was so much hurt at the conversion of his daughter (whom in his will he designates "his Graceless Grace"), that he left a large portion of his property to the public charities of the city of Durham.—In February, 1594, John Speed, a layman, was executed at Durham, for aiding and assisting Roman Catholic priests. On July 24th, of the same year, John Boast, a native of Penrith, was executed at the same place, and on the following day, John Ingram, a native of Warwickshire, suffered death at Gateshead. These were both Catholic priests. We find similar executions in Durham during the year 1600, when Thomas Palliser, a seminary priest; John Norton, of Skirmingham, gentleman; and John Talbot, a Yorkshire gentleman, accused of harbouring Palliser, were put to death with all the revolting details customary in cases of high treason.

Toby Matthews, Bishop of Durham, granted a charter of incorporation to the burgesses and inhabitants of Durham and Framwellgate, on the 21st September, 1602. The city had previously obtained a charter from the crown, which the bishop opposed, as an infringement of his franchise; and, after a long and expensive suit in the exchequer, he succeeded in quashing, and then granted one himself, placing the city, which had hitherto been governed by a bailiff, under a mayor and aldermen.

King James I. visited Durham on various occasions; and on April 13th, 1603, his majesty rested there on his progress to take possession of his English crown. He was received by the magistrates, and afterwards entertained in the castle by the bishop, who attended him with a hundred gentlemen in tawny livery coats. His majesty was pleased to signalise his visit by the liberation of all the prisoners, "except for treason, murder, and papistrie." Many of the gentry of the palatinate assembled at the quarter sessions of the county, held at Durham, in January, 1615, to consult on obtaining knights and burgesses to sit in parliament, for the county and city. During the same year, there was a general muster of all the men fit to bear arms within the bishopric, between the ages of sixteen and sixty, upon Spenny Moor, near Whitworth. The whole number of men who appeared at this array was 8,320, of which number the city of Durham and suburbs furnished 560.

Durham was again visited by James I. in April 1617, on his way to Scotland. The royal cortege entered the city in state, on Easter-eve, when it was met by the civic authorities at Elvet Bridge, and a loyal speech was delivered, after which the staff and mace, with a silver gilt bowl, were presented to his majesty by the mayor. The procession then entered the city, and proceeded to the cathedral. On Easter-Monday the king went to the horse races on Woodham Moor, and the next day resumed his progress northwards. This year Shincliffe Bridge was nearly rebuilt, the middle arch was finished on July 1st, 1617, and the entire structure was completed before the end of the summer.

Charles I. on his progress into Scotland, in 1633, visited Durham, where he was received by Sir William Belasyse, high-sheriff, and the gentlemen of the county. The king visited the cathedral, before he went to the castle, a canopy of state being borne over him by eight prebendaries. After service his majesty proceeded to the castle; and, on the following Sunday morning, heard a sermon from the bishop at the cathedral, where none were admitted but his nobles, the clergy, and choir. After service he dined at the Deanery at the bishop's charge, and a very valuable cope belonging to the church was presented to the king. Then he attended evening prayer, and afterwards went to the castle, where he kept his court during his stay at Durham. The nobles attending the king were the Duke of Lennox; the Earls of Newcastle, Suffolk, Cumberland, Pembroke, and Northumberland; Lord Treasurer Weston, Lord Wharton, Lord Grey, of Chillingham; the Earls of Salisbury, Cleveland, Southampton, Northampton, and Holland; Dr. Laud, Bishop of London; Dr. White, Bishop of Ely; the Marquis of Hamilton, and Lord Bothwell. Whilst the king and his retinue were at Durham, they were entertained by the bishop at an expense of £1,500 per diem. *

At the assizes held before Judge Berkeley, at Durham, on August 6th, 1638, the singular spectacle presented of trial by wager of battle being offered and accepted for deciding the right to certain lands at Thickey, between Ralph Claxton, demandant, and Richard Lilburn, tenant. The defendant appeared at ten o'clock in the forenoon by his attorney, and brought in his champion, George Cheney, in full array, with his stave and sand-bag, who threw down his gauntlet on the floor of the court, with five small pieces of coin in it. The tenant then introduced his champion, William Peverell, armed in a similar manner, who also threw down his gage. The judge, after examining the champions, ordered them into custody of the two bailiffs of the court, till eight o'clock next morning, when they were ordered to put in pledges to appear at the court of the pleas, on the 15th September following. The case was then deferred to December 22nd, and the king desired the judges of the northern circuit to confer together and consider how the cause might be tried some other way. The result of this conference was, that the judges decided by a large majority that Lilburn was entitled to his trial by battle if he persisted. Means were found, however, to defer the trial from year to year, by finding some error in the record, till at length it was ordered that a bill should be brought in to abolish this mode of decision.

Durham was revisited by Charles I. in April, 1639, and during his stay was the guest of Bishop Morton, who received his majesty with great expressions of joy and welcome. After the defeat of the royal army at Stella Haugh, in

* It was during the stay of King Charles at the Castle of Durham, that Dicky Pearson, the bishop's fool, and the last individual, it is supposed, who filled that office, seeing the Earl of Pembroke richly and fantastically dressed, accosted him very fraternally, "I am the Bishop of Durham's fool, whose fool are you?"

August 1640, the Scots entered Durham, which, according to Rushworth, "became a most depopulated place; not one shop for four days after the fight open; not one house in ten that had either man, woman, or child, in it; not one bit of bread to be got for money, for the king's army had eat and drank all in their march into Yorkshire; the country people durst not come to market, which made that city in a sad condition for want of food." In August 1642, Sir Robert Heath, Knt. held the last assize at Durham under the royal commission; after that, all legal process within the county was discontinued, and no sheriff was appointed till 1646. The first gaol delivery after this interval was before Mark Shaftoe, Esq., April 12th, 1647, when six criminals were executed.

A great sickness began in Durham, in November, 1644, and raged nearly the whole year, carrying off great numbers of the inhabitants. On February 3rd, 1646, Charles I. came to Durham, attended by the Scottish commissioners. It seems there was some fear of a rescue, for the Scots wrote to the Earl of Manchester, "The king came this day from Newcastle to Durham, where he arrived about two o'clock in the afternoon, and the reason we take no long journies is to avoid such inconveniences as might possibly befall us in travelling late in the evening." Durham Castle was sold by the parliament, in May 1649, to Thomas Andrews, lord mayor of London, for £1,267 0s. 10d., who so miserably defaced a great part of it, that it was some time before it could be rendered habitable for Bishop Cosin, who almost renovated it by making considerable alterations and additions.

Oliver Cromwell entered Durham July 14th, 1650; and after the battle of Dunbar a great number of Scottish prisoners were brought to the city; they were confined in the cathedral, and defaced many of the finest tombs; and are said to have warmed themselves at a huge fire made of the wooden stall work of the choir.

In 1651, the corporation of the city purchased the borough of Durham and Framwellgate, of the parliamentary commissioners for £200. The county of Durham, which, in consequence of its palatinate privileges, had hitherto never sent knights or burgesses to parliament, sent representatives for the first time, in 1652, and subsequently in 1654 and 1656. In 1657 a writ of privy seal for founding a university at Durham was signed by Oliver Cromwell, lord protector. This university, rather intended to be founded than actually settled, was soon suppressed. The original writ is preserved in the archives of the dean and chapter of Durham; it appears to have been suppressed on account of petitions against it from the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. It had been obtained by a petition of the city and county of Durham, county of Northumberland, and town and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

The inhabitants of the city evinced great loyalty in celebrating the restoration of Charles II., in 1660, to his ancestral throne. During the same year the bishopric and the county palatine, and the dean and chapter were restored. In 1664, the guildhall in the city of Durham was rebuilt; and the courts of justice, the exchequer, and the court of chancery thoroughly repaired. At the assize held at Durham, in July 1668, Alice Armstrong, wife of Christopher Armstrong, of Shotton, labourer, was "tried for bewitching to death an ox belonging to Barbara Thompson." Sentence not recorded.

An act was passed, in 1678, to empower the freeholders of Durham to elect two knights for the county, and the mayor, aldermen, and the freemen of the city of Durham to elect two burgesses to represent them in parliament. The first election of representatives for the county took place on the 21st June, 1675. The candidates were John Tempest, Esq., of the Isle; Thomas Vane, Esq., of Raby Castle; and Sir Thomas Clavering, Bart., of Axwell. The two former were elected. Mr. Vane died of the small-pox two days after his election, and was succeeded by his younger brother, Christopher Vane, Esq. The election of members for the city was delayed by technical difficulties until 1678, Sir Ralph Cole, Bart., of Brancepeth Castle, and John Parkhurst, Esq., of Catesby, Northamptonshire, were returned,

The Frater house, or Monk's Hall, was converted into an elegant library for the dean and chapter, by Dean Sudbury, about the year 1660. This library contains many Roman inscriptions found in the counties of Northumberland and Durham, as well as many records and curiosities, and among them are two copies of Magna Charta, one dated November 12th, 1216, the other February 11th, 1224; a manuscript copy of the Bible, in four volumes, folio, 600 years old; and Bede's five books of history of the same date. Thoresby in his diary under the date of September 14th, 1681, speaking of the city of Durham, says, — "Went to see the abbey, viewed the exceedingly rich copes and robes, was troubled to see so much superstition remaining in Protestant churches; tapers, basins, and richly embroidered I. H. S. upon the high altar, with picture of God the Father like an old man; the Son as a young man, richly embroidered upon their copes."

Men and women servants presented themselves to be hired in Durham market for the first time on May 6th, 1682. — On April 26-27th of the same year the city was inundated, the river Wear overflowing its banks; and the following year from a similar cause, the judges of assizes were compelled to enter the city by Gillesgate. In August 1684, the mayor and a majority of the aldermen and privy council surrendered the charter of the city to Bishop Crewe, who, in the following year, granted them a new charter, but the surrender being deemed invalid, the old charter was again acted upon. Under the date of September 28th, 1684, we find it recorded that John Richardson, senior, alderman, and tanner, in Framwellgate, departed this life, and being excommunicated, was refused Christian sepulture by the bishop. He was interred in his own garden, at Caterhouse, near Durham.

Under date August 17th, 1715, we find that Henry James, of Ingleton, yeoman, was tried at the Durham assizes, for having, at Ingleton, on the 1st August, said: — "The king is neither protestant nor churchman, and I will prove it, and he never did good since he came into England, and I hope in a short time to be quit of him." He was found guilty, and sentenced to stand in the pillory at Wolsingham, for one hour in open market; to be imprisoned for one year, and to be fined 100 marks.

During the rebellion in 1745, the inhabitants of Durham publicly testified their attachment and devotion to the House of Hanover. Meetings of the clergy and gentry were held in the Castle of Durham; an association was formed for providing men and horses for the public service; every member subscribed one month's pay for each man and horse he sent, at the rate of 3s. 6d. per day. Subscriptions of money and arms were also received; and all papists, reputed papists, and non-jurors, were ordered to send to Durham Castle all their horses, mares, and geldings, exceeding the value of £5 each on pain of being proceeded against according to law. They were likewise required to remain within five miles of their own habitations. The volunteers raised by the above means mustered on Framwellgate Moor, but were discharged in December, on the horse militia of the county being raised.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland arrived at Durham on the evening of the 27th January, 1746. He was received by the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, at the head of Elvet, and was welcomed to the city in a short speech, delivered by the recorder. The procession then entered the city, preceded by bands of music, and amidst the acclamations of the people. The city was tastefully illuminated on the occasion. The duke proceeded to Scotland the next day to meet the army of Prince Charles Edward.

In 1750, an act of parliament was passed for rendering the river Wear navigable to Durham, but the commissioners never qualified to put it in force. A plan had been proposed in 1720; and in 1796, Mr. Robert Dodd, and afterwards Mr. Whitworth, surveyed the river with a view of joining the Tyne and the Wear, by a cut through the vale of Team to the Wear, near Picktree, and thence to the city of Durham. In January, 1763, the river Wear was frozen, and persons passed to and fro upon the ice from Chester-le-Street to Durham.

Crossgate Moor, containing 200 acres, was divided in 1769, the dean and chapter reserving sixpence an acre and the minerals; in 1772, Elvet Moor, 400 acres, was divided under the same reserved rent; in 1801, Framwellgate and Brasside Moors, and Wilton Gilbert Common, 2,400 acres, were divided. The Bishop (Barrington) had one-sixteenth of the soil allotted and all the minerals; this venerable prelate appropriated one-third of his whole allotment to the founding of schools within the county of Durham. In 1817, Gilesgate Moor, 270 acres, was divided; the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry had one-sixteenth allotted, as lord and lady of the manor, together with the minerals.

Many of the houses were illuminated, and the bells of the city rang, on April 18th, 1770, in consequence of the liberation of Mr. Wilkes, of political notoriety. In the evening an effigy was carried round the city on an ass, and afterwards burnt in a large fire in the Market Place. On the breast of the effigy was printed in large capital letters, "I HAVE BETRAYED MY CONSTITUENTS;" on its back, "LANGUARD FORT." One hand held out "BRIBERY," and the other "LIBERTY."

The river Wear, at Durham, November 17th, 1771, was eight feet ten inches higher than ever known before; two houses at the end of Framwellgate Bridge, were entirely swept away; one of the abbey mills, and the bridge belonging to the dean and chapter were demolished, as were four arches of Elvet Bridge, and all the buildings in the lower parts of the city, garden walls, &c., were either destroyed or left in a ruinous state. Happily no lives were lost, though cattle of various kinds were drowned.

In October, 1780, a new charter was granted to the city by Bishop Egerton; and, during the same year, the old market cross, becoming ruinous, the corporation ordered it to be taken down, and with the materials was erected the piazza where the markets were subsequently held. This cross, which had a large pillar in the middle, ornamented with a dial, stood in the Market Place, near the pant or reservoir.

The old gateway, called Claypath Gate, which stood near the west end of St. Nicholas's Church, with some adjoining shops, and houses were removed in 1791, by the commissioners under the paving and lighting act obtained in the preceding year.

Durham Infirmary was opened for the reception of patients, on September 17th, 1793. The building was commenced the preceding year in Allergate, on a plot of ground given by Thomas Wilkinson, Esq. In May 1794, a violent thunder and hailstorm occurred in the city, the lightning doing considerable damage.

An armed association was formed in Durham, in 1798. About 500 of the inhabitants enrolled themselves, from whom a very efficient corps of 300 men was selected, Ralph John Fenwick, Esq., lieutenant-colonel, commandant. The colours were presented by Lady Milbank, on October 10th of the same year. A corps of cavalry was soon after raised, under the command of Henry Methold, Esq. Both corps remained embodied till May, 1802. The Durham Armed Association was again called out at the commencement of the war, and had their first parade on November 6th, 1803. Colonel Fenwick resigned the command from ill health in 1806, and was succeeded by Edward Shipperdson, Esq. The corps remained embodied till March 24th, 1819, when they had their last parade, and extended their services to the local militia.

About two o'clock on the morning of Sunday, January 7th, 1804, the cotton manufactory of Messrs. Salvin, near St. Oswald's Church, was discovered to be on fire; and, despite the exertions of the volunteers, and many of the inhabitants, with the aid of the fire engines, the whole premises were reduced to a heap of ruins in the course of a few hours.

In July 1804, a vote having been passed at the quarter sessions, to double the width of Elvet Bridge, the work was commenced this month, and the last arch was closed August 4th, 1805. The workmen in taking down part of the southernmost pillar, found among the masonry a noble of Edward VI.

A new Methodist chapel was opened in Durham, November 13th, 1808. The Rev. Jabez Bunting preached on the occasion to a crowded audience. On the 24th December of the same year, the clock which graces the tower of Durham Cathedral first began to chime the quarter hours. It is the workmanship of the late ingenious John Bolton, and is put in motion by a clock which is erected upon the ground floor of the Cathedral, at a distance of about three hundred feet.

The foundation stone of the county courts, new gaol, &c., were laid on July 31st, 1809. The 25th of the following October, the jubilee of his Majesty George III., was observed by the inhabitants of this ancient city, by various acts of munificence. Exclusive of a large sum appropriated by the dean and chapter for the liberation of prisoners confined for small debts, a general collection, amounting to £120, was made and distributed to more than one thousand poor families. Thomas Wilkinson, Esq., of Oswald House, presented to a great number of poor old persons two shillings and sixpence each; upwards of five hundred charity children were also enabled to participate in the general festivity.

June 15th, 1812, the freemen of Durham, in consequence of several encroachments, perambulated the boundaries of that city, a custom which had been neglected since the enclosure of the adjacent moors.

The city of Durham was illuminated, April 13th, 1814, on account of the surrender of Paris to the allies. The signal for lighting was given by the bells of the cathedral and the other churches beginning a merry peal at eight o'clock, and in a short time afterwards the whole city and suburbs were one blaze of light. The fountain in the college was tastefully decorated with coloured lamps, &c., as was also the Town-Hall; and the many transparencies and devices which were exhibited at the principal houses, showed a great degree of taste. An effigy of Bonaparte, mounted on an old horse, was carried through the streets, and at length brought to the Market Place and committed to the flames.

The first number of the Durham Advertiser, was published by the firm of Francis Humble and Co., on September 10th, 1814. This was originally the Newcastle Advertiser, and, after having various owners, it was removed to Durham.

The first spring assizes held in the city of Durham, were opened by commission by Jonathan Raine, Esq., on the 22nd March, 1819. On the 3rd of the following August the prisoners were removed into the new gaol, previous to the midsummer assizes.

The first number of the Durham Chronicle was published in the city of Durham, on the 1st January, 1820, by Mr. John Ambrose Williams. During the same year, the great northern gateway, used as the old county gaol, was taken down; and the register office, in the Palace Green, was built by subscription on the site of the old county courts.

The coronation of George IV., July 19th, 1821, was observed with great rejoicings in the city of Durham. Lord Stewart presented an ox for distribution amongst the people; it was roasted at the head of Old Elvet, and, after being cut up, was, with a quantity of bread, indiscriminately given to the mob. Several barrels of ale were also given away on the occasion.

A most tempestuous wind, accompanied with heavy rain, commenced on the 2nd February, 1822, and did not subside until the following day. Considerable damage was sustained by several parties in the city and neighbourhood. The chimneys of the house of Miss Wharton, North Bailey, were blown down, and fell through the roof into a room of the upper storey, in which were two servant maids, who had a most providential escape from destruction. In Claypath, a nail manufacturer was at work and another man sitting beside him, both at a yard's distance from the gable end of the house, which was blown down, but luckily falling outwards, they escaped unhurt. It was supposed that the river Wear rose twelve feet above its ordinary height; its banks were overflowed, and the low lands completely inundated.

On the 30th August, the Duke of Sussex visited the city of Durham, where a masonic provincial grand lodge was held to receive him, and a splendid procession took place, during which his royal highness was loudly cheered. He afterwards dined with the masons in their hall, and proceeded on the following day to Sunderland.

During January and February, 1823, the counties of Durham and Northumberland were visited by a dreadful snow storm, which, drifting into immense heaps, prevented the ordinary intercourse of business, as travelling in any shape was impossible. At the city of Durham the snow began to fall, January 11th, accompanied by a dense fog. On the 28th, some signs of a change appeared, and on the 29th, the ice on the river Wear began to give way, but on Saturday the 31st, another heavy fall of snow commenced, and continued almost incessantly for three days. The roads in every direction were entirely blocked up, and from Sunday, February 2nd, till the following Sunday, neither the mail nor any of the coaches reached Durham, either from the north or from the south. The London mail arrived at Darlington regularly, but required great efforts to reach Rushyford, whence the mail bags were forwarded on horseback. On Sunday, February 9th, the mail from the south arrived at Durham, drawn by six horses, and the same day the north mail, which had been detained in Durham for a week, reached Newcastle with great difficulty. The storm, which continued for about six weeks, was far more severe than that of 1814.

On the 17th May, 1827, the tomb of St. Cuthbert, after a lapse of nearly three hundred years, was again opened in the presence of the Rev. W. N. Darnell, B.D.; the Rev. W. S. Gilly, M.A.; the Rev. J. Raine, M.A., and several other persons.*

The Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, at the east end of Old Elvet, was opened on the 31st May, of the same year. High mass was celebrated by the Right Rev. Dr. Smith, Bishop of Bolino, and vicar-apostolic of the northern district, assisted by a number of clergymen; and an appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. James Wheeler. About four hundred persons were present, and the collection, in aid of the building, amounted to about £49, which was ultimately increased before the close of the day by private contributions, to upwards of £90.

The Lord Bishop of Durham, William Van Mildert, D.D., held visitations and confirmations, for the first time, in the various towns of his diocese, during the months of July and August, commencing with his visitation at the city of Durham on the 3rd of the former month, and ending with his confirmation at Stanhope, on the 3rd of August.

During the visit of the Duke of Wellington to the northern counties in October, 1827, his grace visited the Bishop of Durham, at Durham Castle, where, with the nobility and gentry of the county, he was entertained with a splendid banquet. The duke also paid a visit to John Buddle, Esq., at Painshier, and afterwards visited some of the collieries, in company with that gentleman.

The ancient custom of singing the Te Deum, on the tower of Durham Cathedral, in commemoration of the battle of Neville's Cross, was revived on May 29th, 1828. At the termination of divine service, the choristers ascended the tower, and performed the three anthems formerly sung on the occasion. In removing the old battlements of Framwellgate Bridge, in July of the same year, a large living toad was found in the very middle of the wall where it must have been confined for a considerable period. The bridge was erected by Bishop Flambard in the year 1120, but when the battlement containing the animal was built, was not known.

The ceremony of proclaiming his late Majesty William IV., at Durham, July 5th, 1830, took place under the centre of the piazza in the Market Place. The proclamation was made by T. Griffith, Esq., the under-sheriff, in presence of the mayor and aldermen, the Bishop of Bristol, Rev. W. S. Gilly, Rev. C. Thorp, prebendaries of Durham, and a great concourse of spectators. The proclamation was afterwards read in front of the county courts, at the head of Old Elvet.

On the 27th May, 1831, was opened the large tomb in the Galilee of the Cathedral of Durham, in which such of the bones of the Venerable Bede, as were in possession of the monks of Durham, were buried at the Reformation. There were present on the occasion, the Revs. W. S. Gilly, T. Gisborne, James Raine, and several workmen. After a cast had been made of the skull, the bones were carefully deposited in a strong oaken box covered with lead, together with a record upon parchment of the above particulars, and were carefully reinterred, and the massive superincumbent tomb of blue marble was replaced on the following day.

A meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the county, was held on the 31st October, in front of the Court House in the city of Durham, to deliberate on the rejection of Earl Grey's bill for parliamentary reform. The meeting was unusually large, there being nearly ten thousand persons present on the occasion.

The royal assent was given by commission to the Durham University Bill, on July 4th, 1832. During the following September, a portion of the clergy of Northumberland and the diocese of Durham, memorialised the Lord Bishop of Durham, and also the king, on a reform in the church. The memorial to the bishop was signed by thirty-seven, and that to his majesty by forty-three clergymen; and it is said to be the first instance known of a movement of a similar nature emanating from the clergy.

On May 15th, 1833, the city of Durham was visited by a violent storm of thunder, lightning, hail and rain. The flashes of lightning were almost incessant, and the hail-stones exceedingly large, breaking several windows of the Cathedral, as well as the windows of many private houses. The University of Durham was opened on the 28th October of the same year.

A meeting was held in the city of Durham on April 27th, 1834. John Ralph Fenwick, Esq., in the chair, when it was determined to establish a literary society, to be called "The Surtees Society," in honour of the late Robert Surtees, Esq., of Mainsforth.

A grand regatta took place at Durham on the 18th June, 1834. The boats proceeded in grand procession up the river to old Durham, accompanied by a band of music. Crowds of people were attracted to witness the scene, and in the evening a brilliant exhibition of fireworks took place near the Banks Mill. These aquatic amusements have since become annual, with varied and additional attractions.

On Thursday, July 30th, 1835, a dreadful boiler explosion occurred, in the extensive worsted and carpet manufactory of Messrs. John and William Henderson, Back Lane, near Framwellgate Bridge. There were upwards of 170 persons employed in the establishment at the time, nine of whom were killed by the explosion. The amount of damage done to the property was considerable, a large portion of the building being entirely destroyed.

The first election of town councillors, under the Corporation Reform Act, took place in Durham, January 1836. Considerable interest was manifested in the city, though there was little or no canvassing for municipal honours.

The last Count Palatine Bishop of Durham, William Van Mildert, died on February 21st, 1836, in the seventieth year of his age, and his remains were interred in a vault prepared in the nave of the Cathedral. The palatinate jurisdiction of the Bishop of Durham has, from this period, been vested in the crown.

Her Majesty Queen Victoria was proclaimed, with the usual ceremonies, in the city of Durham, on the 24th June, 1837. The following month a general election took place, and the representation of the city was contested by the Hon. A. Trevor, W. C. Harland, Esq., and T. C. Granger, Esq.; the two former were declared duly elected.

Great liberality was displayed by the inhabitants of the city of Durham on the occasion of her Majesty's coronation, June 28th, 1838, when it was resolved to provide a substantial treat for the poor of the city. Considerable sums were collected for this purpose, and four fat bullocks were given away, besides bread, groceries, and ale. The bells of the churches rang merry peals during the day; various boat races took place on the Wear, and, to finish the day's amusements, a balloon was set off from the Prebend's Bridge, which excited the admiration of a crowd of spectators.

About the middle of June, 1839, a curious discovery was made in the old tower or keep of Durham Castle, which was then being restored for the purposes of the university. Amongst the rubbish in two rooms of the lower story or crypt, several bones of a whale were dug out, consisting of about fifteen vertebrae and twenty ribs in one room, and on the opposite side of the tower, in another room, the lower jawbones were laid bare. From a letter written by Bishop Cosin to his steward, Miles Stapylton, dated in London, 20th June, 1661, in the possession of the Rev. James Raine, of Durham, the particulars of this discovery are clearly made out, as it there appears that this animal being cast ashore near Easington, the bishop ordered the skeleton to be prepared, and placed in the tower where it was found.

On the 23rd of the following October, his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, accompanied by Lady Cecilia Underwood, the Earl and Countess of Lambton, and the Misses Lambton, visited the city of Durham, when he received an address of congratulation from the corporation, and was entertained in the college by the Rev. Prebendary Ogle. After attending divine service in the Cathedral in the evening, the distinguished party returned to Lambton Castle.

The first attempt to establish a fair, for the sale of horses, at Durham, was made on the 13th and 14th September, 1840. Subscriptions were freely entered into by various residents in the town, and most of the neighbouring gentlemen and agriculturists. A committee having been chosen, and judges appointed, premiums were awarded to the best harness, hunting, and draught horses brought bona fide for sale, as an inducement to the furtherance of this great object.

The Market Place, in the city, was considerably enlarged during the month of September, 1841, and the thoroughfare at the foot of Claypath widened; and during the same month, the dean and chapter of Durham permitted the use of the Galilee Chapel, in the Cathedral, to the curate and parishioners of St. Nicholas's, until the alterations and repairs that their parish church were then undergoing should be completed.

On October 18th, 1848, Durham Cathedral was visited by the Duke de Bordeaux, Henry V. of France; the descendant of St. Louis manifested considerable interest in viewing the ancient and sacred edifice.

The Durham Railway, being a branch of the Newcastle and Darlington Junction Railway, was opened for traffic on April 15th, 1844. The new Grammar School was opened on the 14th of the following October.

The Duchess of Gloucester and suite, with several members of the Londonderry family, visited the Cathedral of Durham on October 14th, 1846, and, during their stay, were the guests of the dean.

During the month of May, 1847, a virulent fever prevailed in the city, and, in consequence, the warden and senate of the University considered it expedient to take medical opinion upon the subject. After due inquiry, it was decided that it did not seem requisite to disperse the students, but that if any desired to leave for a time, every facility would be afforded, though it was intimated that the lectures would not be discontinued.

The foundation stone of the new building for the Mechanics' Institution was laid on March 30, 1849; J. Fawcett, Esq., performing the ceremony. So general was the interest felt throughout the city, that most of the shops were closed, and business suspended on the occasion.

Having thus completed a selection from the best authorities, of the most important events, we trust the chronological system adopted in our arrangement will not be displeasing to our readers. It would be as easy for us to give only notices in a narrative form; but we think it must be obvious, that, by giving the express dates, the knowledge of a place within a given period is more easily attainable.

THE CATHEDRAL.

THE Cathedral of Durham excels all other sacred edifices in the kingdom in the beauty of its situation; and, though not so large as some of them, its magnificence is not surpassed by any. It occupies, as has already been described, the summit of a lofty peninsula enclosed by the river Wear, extending on the west to the verge of the steep rocks which form the banks of the river. This singular position adds greatly to the striking effect and grandeur of its general appearance. The original form of the structure, as erected by Bishop Carileph, and his successor Flambard, consisted of the nave and chancel, with their side aisles, north and south transepts, two western towers, and between them a large and richly-ornamented entrance door. Successive additions, including the great central tower, built in the thirteenth century, have rendered this Cathedral a perfect specimen of the Norman style, and a highly instructive series of examples, illustrative of the gradual changes in the English style up to the beginning of the fifteenth century.

From the square called the Palace Green, by which the Cathedral is generally approached, the whole of the north front is at once seen in one unbroken and imposing view. The exterior, though much decayed, remained in its original condition till 1775, when a general repair was commenced and continued till 1795, under the direction of James Wyatt, including the western towers, the whole of the northern side of the Cathedral, and the eastern end of the chapel of the nine altars. The principal entrance was originally at the western end, but in consequence of the erection of the Galilee against that part of the edifice, the northern doorway has long formed the chief entrance to the Cathedral. This doorway is in the Norman style, and was erected by Bishop Pudsey when he built the Galilee; but various incongruities in the style and ornaments are observable, and many tasteless alterations have destroyed its character and peculiar associations.

On the door within the porch is a curious metallic ring, or knocker, sculptured with a terrific visage in bold relief, and well executed, with which persons claiming sanctuary in the night-time were accustomed to alarm the inmates of the Cathedral. Above the great window of the north transept were formerly, in two roundels, the figures of Benedictine monks, carved in relief; these, which displayed the state of the arts at the period when that division of the building was erected, have been removed, and their places occupied by two new figures: one, a prior, seated in his installation chair—the other, an effigy of Bishop Pudsey, as portrayed on the episcopal seal attached to his charter to the city of Durham. At the north end of the Chapel of the Nine Altars is a splendid window, called Joseph's Window; it is in the early decorated style, within an equilateral pointed arch. On the octangular tower, at the west angle of the Chapel of the Nine Altars, which forms the eastern extremity of the Cathedral, is the carving of the Dun Cow, representing the event which caused the latter to be founded on this spot. The figures appear in a recess of the stone work, but have been re-sculptured, and their original forms somewhat altered. The east front has been repaired and modernised. The windows, forming a double range, are all of the lancet shape, excepting the centre window of the upper tier, which is circular. This window is coeval with the erection of this part of the edifice, and was exceedingly interesting, both as regards its architecture and painted glass; during the repairs in 1795, the stained glass was replaced, though its arrangement is not in accordance with good taste. The south front is partly enclosed by the cloisters, college, the residence of the dean, &c. The south end of the Chapel of the Nine Altars, the clerestory of the choir, and the whole surface of the transept, were restored a few years ago, under the direction of Mr. Bonomi. The restoration of the nave has just been completed; the facing of the walls is of new masonry, and properly bonded in the old work. The west front, consisting of two highly ornamented square towers, each 143 feet in height, with the Galilee* between, appears to great advantage from the opposite side of the river. The basement line of the elevation presents the projecting chapel of the Galilee eighty feet from north to south, and fifty feet from east to west, flanked by huge buttresses and arches springing out of the rock to contribute due support to its walls, which form one vast combination of security to the main edifice. Above the Galilee is the great west window, with various enriched compartments springing up to the roof. The architectural adornments of the towers are modern; and the attempt to make them accord with the original forms has, in many instances, proved unsuccessful. Their summits are crowned by pinnacles and open worked battlements. The great centre tower rises from the intersection of the nave and transept, and is singularly rich and elegant. It is surrounded by a profusion of fine tracery, pointed arches, and other ornaments; and its buttresses are graced with niches, canopied and decorated with tracery, within which various statues are placed, representing the original founders and patrons of the see. The following are the general dimensions of the edifice: Length from east to west, 420 feet; length of the nave, 240 feet; length of the choir, 117 feet; length of the transept from north to south, 176 feet; breadth of the nave and aisles, 80 feet; breadth of the choir, 33 feet; height of the centre tower, 212 feet; height of the west towers, 143 feet.

The sanctuary of St. Cuthbert extended to the church and churchyard and its circuit; and it is reasonable to suppose that this privilege was afforded to all those who came within a certain distance of these limits. At Beverley the right of sanctuary extended for a mile every way from the church, and this outward boundary was indicated by stone crosses, in convenient situations. The church of Hexham enjoyed similar privileges; and the crosses which are known to have existed at the extremities of some of the streets leading out of Durham, were in all probability erected for the same purpose.

Having now taken a survey of the exterior, let us examine the interior of this venerable edifice. On taking his stand at the west end of the nave, the * Females were only admitted to the Galilee. St. Cuthbert had an inveterate hatred to or dread of them. The following description is curious; it explains the word "Galilee," as connected with conventual architecture:—"Galilee, a porch or porticus annexed to a church. It was used for various purposes. Public penitents were stationed in it; dead bodies were there deposited previous to interment; religious processions formed; and it was only in the Galilee belonging to certain religious houses that the female relatives of the monks were allowed to converse with them, or even to attend divine service. Much speculation has arisen as to the origin of this name. The most commonly-received opinion (founded chiefly upon a passage in the writings of Gervase of Canterbury) is as follows: When a female made an application to see a monk, she was directed to the porch, usually at the western extremity of the church; being answered in the words of Scripture, 'He goeth before you into Galilee; there you shall see him!' " (Milner's Treatise on Eccles. Architect., p. 106.) The only English buildings to which the term Galilee is applied, are those attached to the Cathedrals of Durham and Ely. A porch at the south end of the great transept of Lincoln Cathedral is sometimes called a Galilee. The word has also been used to designate the name of a church, as well as of a small gallery or balcony opening towards it, from which visitors might view processions; probably, however, in the latter instance, the name is confused with that of a gallery.

visitor has an uninterrupted view of this magnificent pile, exhibiting a lengthened array of massive columns, with their high overarching roof,

"Stretching in aisles majestic;
In branches of embowering length
And avenues of pillared strength," terminating in the graceful lines of the groined roof of the choir, and the splendid Catharine window of the Chapel of the Nine Altars. It is in very truth

"A dim and mighty minister of old time!
A temple shadowy with remembrances
Of the majestic past!"

The interior of the Cathedral is highly interesting to those who wish to trace the connection between the Saxon and Norman styles, or to observe the latter in perhaps its highest stage of perfection. The comparison of these styles with the pointed may also be made, as the Chapel of the Nine Altars partakes, in its general enrichments and proportions, of the architectural character of Salisbury Cathedral; and from its singularly light appearance, presents a striking contrast to the massive Norman work prevalent in the other parts of the Cathedral. A few paces from the western entrance, there is observed in the pavement a cross of blue marble, which, as tradition reports, marks the boundary beyond which females were not permitted to advance in the direction of the shrine of St. Cuthbert; and to the west of this stands a beautiful font of Caen stone, having on its four sides bas-reliefs illustrative of the life of the patron saint of Durham.

The western end of the church possesses two beautiful painted windows, for which it is indebted to the liberality of the present bishop of the diocese. They are situated at the end of the north and south aisles respectively. The former, by Willement, contains a full length figure of St. Cuthbert, bearing the head of St. Oswald. The saint is clad in his episcopal vestments, with the crosier in his hand and the mitre on his head; and stands within a Romanesque trefoil and canopy, supported on pillars. Beneath the figure of the saint is a medallion, representing the mission of King Egfrid to the Farne Island, to request the saint to become Bishop of Lindisfarne. The remainder of the window is filled with tracery and coats of arms, and the legend, in large Saxon letters, "Sanctus Cuthbert." The window at the western end of the south aisle is occupied by a figure of Venerable Bede in doctor's robes, bearing in his hand a book, a pen, and a portable inkstand. This is surrounded by medallions, on which the various events of his life are represented, such as his ordination, death, &c.; the remainder being occupied by emblematical figures and beautiful tracery. This window does great credit to Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle, by whom it was constructed.

There are several monuments in this part of the Cathedral; one near the southern door of the Galilee, is erected to the memory of Sir George Wheler, who was buried in the Galilee, and, in accordance with his own request, as near as possible to the remains of Venerable Bede. Advancing along the nave, we arrive at the tombs of the Nevilles, which were sadly mutilated during the period of the Commonwealth. On the opposite side of the nave is a modern altar tomb, erected to the memory of the Rev. James Britton, D.D., formerly head master of the Durham Grammar School.

The north transept is terminated by a large window of six lights, the tracery of which has all the elegance of the decorated period. On its restoration by Prior Castell, he filled it with beautiful painted glass, on which were large figures of the Blessed Virgin, and the four great doctors of the church,—St. Ambrose, St. Augustine, St. Gregory, and St. Jerome; from these last four it obtained the designation of the Window of the Four Doctors. Between two of the pillars in this transept stands a monument, by Rickman, of the Rev. John Carr, M.A., who was head master of Durham Grammar School for a period of twenty-two years. At the south end of the same transept is a large marble cenotaph to the memory of Mr. Woodfield, receiver to the dean and chapter.

The south transept contains a large perpendicular window, called the Te Deum Window, from its having, at one time, the words of that hymn painted upon it. There is a monument of Bishop Barrington, by Chantry, in this transept, which is much admired for its chaste simplicity. Between the north and south transepts, and covering the space between the nave and the choir, is the great central tower or lanthorn. It is supported by four large clustered Norman piers, with round arches, and is supposed to have been erected about the year 1474. A gallery, with an open parapet, pierced in quatrefoils, is carried round the interior of the tower stage of the lanthorn, and rests upon corbels, which are ornamented with grotesquely sculptured heads. Each side of the gallery has a door, which communicates respectively with the roofs of the nave, transept, and choir. Above this, on each side, are two lofty windows. Above the groined roof of this stage of the tower is the belfry, which contains a fine peal of eight bells.

The rood screen, which formerly separated the nave and choir, was erected by Prior Wessington, in 1416-45; and was of dark oak, ornamented with a profusion of carving, representing fruit, flowers, &c., in bold relief. This structure and the organ by which it was surmounted were removed in March, 1847, and the view of the magnificent choir is now entirely free from obstruction. The choir is entered by two marble steps; on each side are ranged the stalls for the bishop, dean, and canons, minor canons, and some of the other officials of the diocese, surmounted by canopies of rich tabernacle work. Beneath these are seats for the lay choristers, foundation scholars, bedesmen, &c. At the end of the stalls the pavement of black and white marble is again elevated by one step; and here are placed, on the north side, a pulpit in Caen stone, of beautiful early English design; and to the east of this the organ, a splendid instrument, containing 1,018 pipes, built by Schmidt, in 1584-5, and remarkable for the fulness and mellowness of its tone. On the south side, under a rich stone canopy, surmounted by an open stone screen of beautiful design and workmanship, which fills up the whole space between two piers, is the noble altar tomb of Bishop Hatfield, with a recumbent figure of the prelate in his pontifical robes and mitre, exquisitely chiselled in pure white marble. The canopy projects into the choir and forms the episcopal throne.

The altar is situated at the eastern end of the choir, whose roof, columns, and all the other architectural ornaments, are here of a richer and much more decorated character than in the other parts of the Cathedral. The altar itself is of marble, supported by six pillars of the same; immediately above it, is an alto-relievo of Leonardo da Vinci's Last Supper in Caen stone. Between the altar and St. Cuthbert's Feretory is the altar screen or reredos of Caen stone, "curiously wrought, reaching in height almost to the middle vault and containing the breadth of the Quire in length." Though despoiled of "the fair images of alabaster," with which it was once adorned, to the number of 107, it still remains one of the finest specimens of mediæval taste in the kingdom. There are four Sedilia on each side of the altar, of the same period and character as the screen. In the basement of the screen are two doorways leading to the chapel called the Feretory, where, in ancient times, stood the shrine of St. Cuthbert, "a goodly monument, exalted with most curious workmanship of fine and costly green marble, all limned and gilt with gold." But its ancient splendour has vanished, and the only mark of its former reputation is to be found in a blue marble slab inserted in the pavement, and which is said by some to cover the remains of St. Cuthbert.*

The Chapel of the Nine Altars had its origin in the threatened fall of the semicircular end of the choir, and is a most interesting specimen of early English architecture, not more to be admired for the majestic effect of its clustering columns and vaulted roof, than for the exquisite perfection of some of its minor details. It measures one hundred and thirty-four feet from north to south, and thirty-eight feet from east to west, and is entered by gates leading from the side aisles. It is divided into seven compartments, the central division, with three windows, is of the same width as the choir; and the side compartments are divided by stone shafts, with columns of Frosterly marble. This chapel formerly contained nine altars, which were erected beneath the windows on the east side. "These altars," says an ancient writer, "had their several screens and covers of wainscot over-head; having likewise between every altar a very fair and large partition, varnished over with fine branches and flowers, and other imagery work, containing the several lockyers and amberies for the safe keeping of the vestments and ornaments belonging to each altar." This chapel contains the last resting place of the powerful prelate

* When the Cathedral was consecrated in 1104, the body of St. Cuthbert was examined and found to be in a good state of preservation; and the historians of the period describe with great minuteness, the coffins in which the body was enclosed, the robes in which it was clad, and the various ornaments and relics which were buried along with it. In this state the coffin was placed in the shrine in the Feretory, where it remained till the arrival of the commissioners of Henry VIII., in 1540, when it was again examined by the commissioners, Dr. Lee, Dr. Henley, and Mr. Blithman, who found several jewels in the shrine, one of which is described as of sufficient value to redeem a prince. Having taken possession of whatever valuables they could find, they "approached nearer the saint's body, expecting nothing but dust and ashes; but perceiving the chest he lay in strongly bound with iron, the goldsmith, with a smith's great for-hammer, broke it open, when they found him lying whole, uncorrupt, with his face bare, and his beard as of a fortnight's growth, and all the vestments about him as he was accustomed to say mass, and his mitre and of gold lying by him. When the goldsmith perceived he had broken one of the saint's legs, in breaking open the chest, he was sorely troubled at it, and cried, Alas! I have broken one of his legs; which Dr. Henley hearing, called to him, and bade him cast down his bones. The other answered he could not get them asunder, for the sinews and the skin held them so that they would not separate. Then Dr. Lee stepped up to see if it were so, and, turning about, spake in Latin to Dr. Henley, that he was entire; though Dr. Henley, not believing his words, called again to have his bones cast down. Dr. Lee answered, if you will not believe me, come up yourself and see him. Then Dr. Henley stepped up to him, and handled him, and found he lay whole. Then he commanded them to take him down; and so it happened, contrary to their expectation, that not only his body was whole and uncorrupt, but the vestments wherein his body lay, and wherein he was accustomed to say mass, were fresh, safe, and not consumed. Whereupon the visitors commanded him to be carried into the vestry, till the king's pleasure concerning him was further known; and upon the receipt thereof, the prior and monks buried him in the ground under the place where his shrine was exalted." This spot was afterwards covered by the blue marble slab above mentioned.

A tradition has long been in existence that the body of St. Cuthbert was removed from the Feretory to some other part of the Cathedral shortly after the events we have just narrated, and that the secret of the saint's present resting-place is known only to a chosen few of the English Benedictine Monks, who have in their possession a plan of Durham Cathedral, on which the exact spot is marked out. In 1703, we find this tradition alluded to by Bishop Minter, who, in a paper published in the "Archæologia," says, "We are informed that some of the monks contrived to steal away the body, which they buried in a private place, yet so as to transmit the secret to their successors, to be communicated to others after them, so long as Christianity should continue to be professed in Durham. This much I can say, from my certain knowledge, that there are always three gentlemen of the Benedictine order, who profess to know the identical spot at Durham where the body of St. Cuthbert rests, and who, as one of them dies, choose another to whom they impart the secret."

Influenced, perhaps, by the knowledge of the existence of this tradition, and desirous of testing its accuracy, a number of clergymen, and gentlemen, availing themselves of some repairs which were being effected in the Cathedral, procured the opening of the vault beneath the blue marble slab, on the 17th May, 1827, when they discovered a large chest, made strong originally by rods of iron, with iron rings on its sides and ends. This contained three coffins, the second of which contained several human remains; the third, which is described as being carved with rude delineations of saints, &c., Anthony Beck; a plain slab of blue marble is the only visible memento of his greatness. In close proximity to Bishop Beck's grave is the monument of the last prelate who enjoyed the palatine privileges, Bishop Van Mildert. It is a sitting figure of colossal size, from the studio of Gibson, and was erected by public subscription.

With this brief description of the external and internal appearance of the Cathedral of Durham, let us retrace our steps to the western end, and visit the Galilee, or St. Mary's Chapel, which, as has been observed, rests upon a solid rock, and was erected by Bishop Pudsey, in 1154-97. It is a parallelogram in form, seventy-six feet from north to south, forty-seven from east to west, and may be described as consisting of a nave, with double aisles on each side. The original entrance to the chapel was from the north, so that women might enter without passing the gates of the church; but the door was closed during the episcopacy of Cardinal Langley. The great western doorway of the Cathedral, which formed a communication with the Galilee, was also closed by the same prelate, and the two new entrances opposite the aisles were opened. Under the arch of the great western doorway was the altar of the Blessed Virgin. The altar-stone, of blue marble, yet remains; but the doorway has recently been re-opened, and the screen-work of the altar, which has stood within the recess of the arch since the days of Cardinal Langley, has consequently been removed. After a long period of desecration, the Galilee was fitted up with movable benches; and, since the year 1828, evening service has been performed in it during the summer months. In describing the monuments in this chapel, we cannot do better than quote the words of a contained a human skeleton swathed originally in robes of great beauty, but most of them in great decay. When the skeleton was laid bare, the bones, although no longer connected by sinews and ligaments, were found to be perfect, and smooth, and dry, and in their respective places. The human remains which had been brought to light, were reinterred the same evening in a new coffin; and several interesting objects of antiquity which had been found during the investigation were removed into the Manuscript Closet of the Library, where they are now carefully preserved.

From the discoveries made on this occasion, the persons present concluded that they had examined the remains of St. Cuthbert, that the tradition of their removal was false, and that the story of the saint's incorruptibility was a monkish imposture. An account of the various circumstances attending this investigation was shortly after given to the world by the Rev. Mr. Raine, who was present on the occasion. A year after Mr. Raine's work, Dr. Lingard, the historian, published a tract, entitled "Remarks on the St. Cuthbert of the Rev. James Raine," in which he adduced many arguments to prove that the remains examined in 1827 were not those of the patron saint of Durham. He also alluded to the tradition given above, and states that he "has been favoured with the following information from one of the monks, the depositaries of the secret: that according to the tradition which has descended to them, the body of St. Cuthbert was buried under the shrine in the reign of Henry VIII., and was taken up during the reign of Queen Mary; that the Catholic clergy, previously to their expulsion under Queen Elizabeth, buried many things which they esteemed as sacred in the vault under the place where the shrine had stood; but for greater security, deposited the saint's body in a vault in a different part of the church; and that the secret was communicated to the restorers of the English Benedictine Congregation, by some of those who had actually been employed in this removal."

In 1849, the Rev. C. Eyre, Catholic priest of St. Mary's, Newcastle, published a History of St. Cuthbert, in which he advances the following remarks, in corroboration of the opinions advanced by Dr. Lingard. "Much has been said and written of a supposed discovery of the saint's remains in the year 1827, but it is very far from being proved that those were the bones of St. Cuthbert. One thing the reader must bear in mind, that the grave in which St. Cuthbert was buried had been disturbed between the years 1542 and 1827. In 1827, an opening was found in the masonry, at the end of the vault, filled up with loose stones; a fact which proves that the grave had been opened previously to the investigation in 1827. It is stated that the bones of the skeleton, although disjointed and detached from each other, were all of them perfectly whole; now, it has already been shown, that one of the leg bones of St. Cuthbert was broken on the occasion of the opening of his tomb by the visitors appointed by Henry VIII.; so that both leg bones of this skeleton being found whole, is a proof that it is not the skeleton of St. Cuthbert." By making further inquiries into the history of the tradition to which we have above referred, the same writer says, that he has ascertained, from one of the Benedictines in possession of the secret—"First, that it is not confined to three of the body but is known by more. Secondly, that the traditions they possess are verbal, as well as a plan of the Cathedral, and the two entirely coincide; the original plan on paper, is in a very decayed state. Thirdly, that they do not hold this secret on oath." After bringing forward various arguments in favour of the removal of the saint's remains, and showing how easily this removal might be effected, Mr. Eyre concludes, by expressing his firm belief "that the remains of St. Cuthbert are in safe keeping in another part of the church," and adds, "that there is a tradition that this secret will be disclosed when England again becomes Catholic, and the Cathedral shall again revert to Catholic hands."

recent tourist, who says,—“But what tomb is that which looks so simple, yet so conspicuous an object in this ancient place? Read that inscription on its surface—

‘HAC SUNT IN FOSSA BEDE VENARABILIS OSSA.’

O! 'tis the tomb of Bede! It is a treasure worthy of the place, and a place worthy of the treasure. If any spot should be honoured with his death, besides his beloved Jarrow, whence kings, nor popes, nor promises of highest allurements could draw him during life, surely no place were fitter than this. The precious shrine of gold and silver jewels, with which Hugh Pudsey marked his profound reverence for the morning star of English literature, has long vanished; but the fame of Bede is a spiritual shrine, hidden from sordid spirits, and inviolable to greedy hands, yet covering the little heap of his remains—a tabernacle of light. Here too lies, as near to him as possible, his ardent admirer, Richard, of Barnard Castle. Here rests, too, Cardinal-Bishop Langley, who, in the finest taste of his time, the fifteenth century, added light and finish to the architectural richness of this chapel. We need not say more. He who would have a full idea of what the Galilee is, and what it contains, must see it.”

THE CLOISTERS, on the south side of the Cathedral, were erected between the years 1389 and 1438, by Bishop Skirlaw and Cardinal Langley, at a cost of £888. These cloisters form a quadrangle of one hundred and forty-seven feet, having eleven windows in each front, which were formerly glazed, but are now open; they were restored during the latter part of the last century, but their original character was almost entirely altered. The ceiling, which is of Irish oak, was originally ornamented with emblazoned shields of the arms of the various persons who had contributed to enrich the work by their donations; but scarcely any of these embellishments are now discernible. In the western aisle of the cloister is the Treasury of the church, now the Record Office, which is entered by a small pointed door-way, and remains in precisely the same state as in ancient times. Here are deposited the charters, yearly account rolls, and other records of the church, from the period of its foundation in 1093. These are preserved with the utmost care, and many of the charters relate to several of the most important families of the bishopric.

THE CHAPTER HOUSE adjoins the cloisters, and was originally erected by Bishop Rufus, about the year 1136, and, in ancient times, was considered to be without a rival in the kingdom. It was in the Norman style, and measured about eighty feet in length, by thirty-seven in breadth, and about forty-five feet in height, the east end being circular. The interior was decorated with Norman columns and intersecting arches; the roof was elegantly groined, and the floor rich with inscriptions. Against the eastern wall stood an ancient stone chair, in which the bishops of the see, from Carileph to Barrington, had been successively installed. This ancient and interesting structure was destroyed, in 1799, for no other purpose than to make a comfortable room; and no means were taken to preserve the brasses and grave stones of the bishops and priors, which ornamented the floor of the edifice. Even the episcopal chair, that interesting relic of antiquity, was not thought worthy of preservation. When the roof of the chapter house was destroyed, the eastern portion, about forty feet in length, was then pulled down, and a wall, with common sash windows, built across the remainder. The western doors and windows were then blocked up, and a plaster ceiling added. Two door-ways cut through the north wall, completed the improvement (?)

A more artistic spirit has been recently manifested, and the plaster with which the stone work was covered, has been removed, bringing to light the beautiful tracery and ornamented interlaced arches, which were so long hidden.

THE LIBRARY, belonging to the dean and chapter, is situated on the south side of the cloisters, and owes its origin, in its present form, to Dean Sudbury, who, in 1680, established it in the large hall, which, in Catholic times, served as the refectory of the monastery. The room is well lighted by a range of tall mullioned windows on each side, and is wainscotted with oak to the level of the window sills; cases for the books are arranged along the walls, projecting into the room, forming a series of recesses, with seats and desks between each. Its walls are adorned with portraits of Dean Sudbury, Sir George Wheler, Bishops Chandler and Butler, Dr. Cowper, Queen Mary, &c. The library contains upwards of 8,000 volumes, about six hundred of which are in MSS., and the munificence of the bishop and dean and chapter, are annually adding to its stores. Besides a great number of records and curiosities, the library contains a manuscript copy of the Bible, in four volumes folio, six hundred years old; and Bede's five books of history, of nearly the same date.

THE DORMITORY, on the west side of the cloister, over the common-house and the treasury, was erected on the site of a similar edifice, in the year 1398. It is in the perpendicular style, and contained, as its name implies, the sleeping apartments of the monks. It has lately been restored, and now forms a magnificent hall, and when finished it will probably be used as a library and museum.

THE COLLEGE is a spacious quadrangle, in which are the deanery and the houses of the prebendaries, which may be approached by a passage leading from the east aisle of the cloister, or through the college gateway, from the street called the Bailey. The deanery is situated at the south end of the eastern aisle of the cloister, and was originally the residence of the lord prior. It still retains some of the architectural features which prevailed at the time of its erection, especially an early English crypt, beneath what was formerly the prior's domestic chapel; but much alteration has been made lately in the arrangement and disposition of the rooms, adapting them to the requirements of the present day. A beautiful old panelled roof of carved oak remains in one of the bed rooms. Nearly a fourth of the ground of what is called the college is occupied by the gardens of the deanery. The prebendal houses are of modern date, presenting few external features of interest. A fountain, or reservoir, stands at the upper end of the quadrangle, and supplies the neighbouring families with water. At a short distance a passage leads to the banks of the river. The whole of the western side of the square, upon which stand the houses of the second, fourth, and tenth stalls, was of old occupied by the Guest Hall of the convent, and its subordinate buildings. The north-west angle of the square was occupied by the infirmary of the monastery, with its offices; other establishments filled the remaining sides of the square.

CHURCHES, CHAPELS, PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

Parochial churches in most of our ancient cities are very numerous, but in Durham there are only six, viz.:—St. Giles', St. Nicholas', St. Mary-le-Bow, St. Mary-the-Less, St. Oswald, and St. Margaret's; the two latter are in the deanery of Chester, the other four being in the deanery of Easington, they are, however, all comprehended in the archdeaconry of Durham.

ST. GILES'S CHURCH, situated on the highest ground in Durham, at the head of Gilesgate, was erected by Bishop Flambard, about the year 1112, and the tower was added in 1414. This church has a great resemblance to that of Jarrow, being without aisles, narrow, long, and lofty; and consists of nave and chancel, separated by a pointed arch. Three large perpendicular windows were inserted in the nave, in 1828, and some other tasteless alterations effected. It formerly possessed a chantry or guild, dedicated to the patron saint of the parish; and, at the time of the survey made by order of Henry VIII., the incumbent was possessed of a house with two gardens, and twenty-four burgages in the street of St. Giles, altogether of the value of £4 7s. 4d. In the chancel there is a wooden effigy, said to represent one of the Heath family of Kepier, who died in 1590; the head rests upon a helmet, surmounted by the family crest, a heath-cock's head erased sable, and at the feet is the solemn warning, HODIE MIHI, CRAS TIBI. There is a monument to one of the Davison family near the south porch, and a large altar tomb commemorates the Rev. Henry Egerton, M.A., who died prebendary of Durham, 28th February, 1795, in the 66th year of his age. The living, a curacy not in charge, valued in the Liber Regis at £24, was augmented, in 1768, with £400, one half of which was obtained from Queen Anne's Bounty, and the remainder from a subscription of the parishioners. It is in the deanery of Easington and patronage of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry. The tithes have been commuted for a rent charge of £284, payable to the impropiators, and £42 to the incumbent. The parish register commences in 1584. Rev. Francis Thompson, M.A., incumbent; Rev. James John Cundill, B.A., curate.

The church-yard commands a beautiful and extensive prospect of the river Wear, Pelaw Wood, Maiden Castle Scar, Old Durham, Elvet, with its bridge, the Baileys, the Cathedral, &c. Further removed are the villages of Shincliffe, Houghall, Butterby, and Croxdale; while the view is bounded by the high grounds of Quarrington and Coxhoe, Ferryhill, Merrington, with its lofty tower, and Branton Hill. *

ST. MARY-LE-BOW.—This church, situated on the east side of the North Bailey, is built of hewn stone, and was opened for service in 1685. It consists of nave and chancel, of equal width and height, with eight regular pointed lights, and a large east window; and is supposed to occupy the site of the White Church, or tabernacle of boughs, in which St. Cuthbert's body rested till the completion of the Cathedral. The west tower was erected in 1702 by the parishioners, and repaired after its original plan in 1827. The screen of open work separating the nave and chancel, was erected in 1707, and the gallery at the west end of the nave, in 1741. The interior is handsomely pewed, and Bishop Crewe's arms are repeated in compartments on the ceiling. The visitations of the bishop and archdeacon are generally held in this church. The living, a rectory in the deanery of Easington, valued in the Liber Regis at £5, is in the patronage of the archdeacon of Northumberland. The income is about £150 per annum; the parish register commences in 1687.—Rev. W. Clark King, M.A., rector.

ST. MARY-THE-LESS.—This edifice closely adjoins the buildings of the college, and is half hidden from the street by the boughs of the trees which shade its little cemetery. It was founded at a very early period, and is generally ascribed to a lord of Brancepeth, of the name of Bulmer, from whose family the patronage passed, by marriage, to the Nevilles of Raby, and was subsequently transferred to the crown, with whom it still remains. The church, which is in the Norman style, consists of a nave and chancel, separated by a circular arch, and has been almost entirely rebuilt during the incumbency of the present rector. It contains some fine stained glass windows, by Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle, which contribute very much to the general impressiveness of the structure. The window at the east end of the church represents the Annunciation and the Offering of the Magi; and the north window in the chancel presents a full-length figure of St. Oswald, King of Northumbria, and a half-length figure of St. Cuthbert. The others are chiefly memorial windows. The font, in the same style as the church, is from the chisel of White, of London, and is much admired. The seats in the nave are well adapted for the comfort and convenience of the congregation. The chancel screen and stall work are by Cummings, a Durham carver, and are highly creditable specimens of art. The entire restoration was effected under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Raine, assisted by Mr. Pickering, clerk of the works of the dean and chapter. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Easington; and the parish register commences in 1559. There was anciently a chantry in this church, dedicated to St. Catharine, and of the annual value of £5 7s. 9d. Rev. James Raine, rector.

ST. NICHOLAS' CHURCH is an ancient structure, situated on the north side of the Market Place, and consists of a nave and aisles, with chancel and square tower. This edifice is very plain and indifferently built, being constructed of small and perishable stones; and appears to have been erected at different periods, but there are no records to show the date of its foundation, which is by some authors supposed to be coeval with the first settlement of the Saxons in this city. The exterior of the building was repaired and chiselled over in 1768, when a large new window was inserted at the west end. The tower was again repaired in 1833. The recent widening of the street at the east end of the church caused that portion of the building to be taken down; and considerable alterations at that extremity of the chancel were effected. The tower occupies the south-west corner of the church, and beneath it is the principal doorway. The roof of this entrance is groined, but its external doorway has lost all its original mouldings and ornaments. The south aisle extends from the tower to the eastern extremity of the church, and is separated from the nave and chancel by pointed arches. Similar arches separate the nave and north aisle; but the chancel is divided from this aisle by circular arches; while a low pointed arch separates the nave and chancel. The windows are all modern. Near the chancel are seats appropriated to the mayor and aldermen, and the Drapers' Company. At the west end of the church is a gallery, erected in 1821, by Sir John Eden, Bart., now used by the children of the Sunday-schools, and containing an organ. Another gallery was erected over the north aisle, by voluntary subscription, in 1826. This church formerly contained four chantries, viz.:—St. Mary's, value £4, founded by Hugo de Querringdon; St. James's, value £5 18s. 4d., founded by Thomas Cockside and Alice his wife; the Holy Trinity, of the value of £7 13s. 10d.; and Sts. John the Baptist and Evangelist, value £6 16s. 4d., founded by Thomas Kirkley, rector of Whitbury. The two chapels on Elvet Bridge, were also chantries belonging to this church, in which there was anciently a guild, called Corpus Christi Guild, established by virtue of a license from Bishop Langley, according to the ancient mode of instituting fraternities of merchants, before any royal charters were granted for that purpose. The benefice was formerly a rectory, appropriated to Kepier Hospital, by Bishop Neville, in 1443; and so continued until the dissolution, when it became the property of the crown. It was afterwards granted, among other possessions, to Sir William Paget, Knt. Edward VI., in the sixth year of his reign, gave the advowson, and also that of St. Giles', to John Cockburn, lord of Ormston, from whom they were purchased by John Heath, whose daughter Elizabeth intermarried in the Tempest family; and the patronage is now vested in the Marquis of Londonderry. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Easington, and of the certified value of £13 10s. 4d. About the year 1750, it was augmented with £800, half of which was obtained from the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty; £200 was given by Sir Philip Butler, of Kent; £100 by Mr. Forster; and £100 was raised by subscription. With this money land was purchased at Easington, worth about £30 per annum. The award for the commutation of tithes for St. Nicholas has been confirmed for a rent charge of £5 15s. payable to the impropiators. There is an evening lectureship instituted in this church, to which the mayor, recorder, and aldermen have the presentation. Its endowment arises out of lands at Easington. The parish register commences in 1553. Rev. Edward Davison, M.A., incumbent.

ST. OSWALD'S CHURCH occupies an elevated situation, at the top of Church-street. It is surrounded by a large burial ground, and commands a fine view of "the sunny gardens and houses of the Bailey on the opposite side, clustered at the feet of the reverend abbaye which rises proudly behind them." A church was founded here before the Conquest; but the present structure cannot lay claims to so high an antiquity. It is, however, generally considered to be the most elegant parochial edifice in Durham, though the alterations which were considered necessary a few years ago, owing to the failure of its foundations by the working of a colliery, have deprived it of much of its ancient character. It consists of nave, aisles, chancel, and tower, the latter being in the perpendicular style. During the alterations to which we have just alluded, the walls of the side aisles, and part of the chancel, were taken down and rebuilt, the original character of the windows being attended to in the restoration. The fine vaulted roof of oak, for which this church was formerly remarkable, was unfortunately almost wholly destroyed—the only portion remaining is in the north aisle. The piers of the nave are beautiful specimens of the early English style, as are also the piers and capitals supporting the arch which separates the nave and chancel. The chancel contains some remains of old desks and stall work, and also one or two monumental slabs from which the brasses have been removed. The church was repewed at the time of the recent alterations, and the nave partially filled with seats. The living, which is a vicarage, valued in the Liber Regis, at £16, is a peculiar belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham, but does not pay any procurations to their official, or to the archdeacon. Rev. E. Sneyd, M.A., vicar.

ST. MARGARET'S CHURCH stands in an elevated situation, at the junction of Crossgate and South-street, in the parish of St. Oswald. It consists of nave, chancel, aisles, and square tower, and is said to have been erected during the episcopacy of Bishop Pudsey. The building appears to have been subject to repeated alterations, as various styles of architecture may be discovered. There are four circular arches on each side of the nave, supported by cylindrical pillars with Norman capitals, and pointed arches separate the chancel from the side aisles. A pointed arch supports the tower, while a circular one separates the nave and chancel. There are galleries on the west and over the north aisles, in the latter of which is an organ. On each side of the chancel there are several mural tablets; on the floor of the nave lies the grave stone of Sir John Duck, also one belonging to the Raine family. There was anciently a chantry in this church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and of the yearly value of £7 14s. 8d., out of which 40s. was annually paid to the king's receiver. Rev. John Cundill, B.D., incumbent.

ST. CUTHBERT'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, situated at the east end of Old Elvet, opposite to the County Courts, is a neat stone structure, in the Gothic style, erected in 1827, from a design by J. Bonomi, Esq. It possesses a fine ceiling of oak in panels, and a beautiful stained glass window, the gift of the late Rev. Thomas Witham. The altar is chaste in decoration, and surmounted by a small oil painting of the crucifixion. There is a small altar dedicated to Our Lady. There are two galleries in the church, which have been rendered necessary from the increasing number of the congregation. The presbytery, or priest's house, adjoins the church on the west. The Very Rev. Provost Fletcher, D.D. and V.G., is the incumbent.

BETHEL CHAPEL (NEW CONNEXION), situated on the North Road, is a handsome stone edifice, erected in 1853, at an expense of £8,000, which sum includes the cost of the organ, pews, ground, &c. The ground floor is used as a Sunday-school. Rev. Thomas Cartwright, minister.

THE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE is situated in Claypath, nearly opposite to the Independent Chapel.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL, Claypath, is a neat and commodious building, capable of accommodating 300 persons. It was much improved in 1846, by some alterations which were then effected, at a cost of £220. Rev. Samuel Goodall, minister.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL, situated in Silver-street, is a small stone building, erected at a cost of about £250, and opened for divine service in 1825. Revs. Thomas Smith, John Malin, Charles Priestley, and William Barrass, ministers.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL is situated in Elvet, and is a spacious and convenient building, containing upwards of 1,000 sittings. It was erected in 1808, at a cost of £1,000, and opened in November of the same year. The members of this religious body formerly possessed a chapel in Court Lane, whence they removed to the present building. Attached to this chapel is the residence of the superintendent of the district. Revs. William Wilson, William Hales, and R. Stephenson, ministers.

THE UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

The following particulars respecting the past and present state of the University, its professorships, fellowships, prizes, scholarships, &c., are extracted chiefly from the University Calendar for the present year.

The great and increasing population of the north of England, and its remoteness from the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, have long pointed out the expediency of establishing in that part of the kingdom an institution which should secure to its inhabitants the advantages of a sound yet not expensive academical education. It was perceived by the late Bishop Van Mildert, and by the dean and chapter of Durham, that the means of supplying this acknowledged deficiency might be provided from the resources of that body, not only without contravening, but in exact conformity with the principles on which it was incorporated; the education of youth being enumerated among the objects of the establishment, both in its charter of foundation and in its statutes.* It was at the same time felt, that any institution established on these grounds must necessarily be placed in close connection with the Cathedral Church; and also that, to ensure the attainment of its objects, it must be planned and endowed on a large and liberal scale.

In accordance with these views, a scheme was arranged between the bishop and the dean and chapter, for the foundation of a University in connection with the Cathedral Church; the chapter undertaking to assign immediately to this purpose property producing £3,000 per annum; and the bishop promising to provide eventually for the warden, the professor of divinity, and the professor of Greek, by attaching prebendal stalls to the several offices. As some time would elapse before the intended provision would be available, the bishop engaged in the meanwhile to make a large annual contribution. This contribution, which was at first £1,000 and afterwards £2,000 per annum, ceased at the bishop's death.

In pursuance of this arrangement, a bill was introduced into parliament in 1832, to enable the dean and chapter to appropriate an estate at South Shields for the establishment of a University. The general principles on which the projected institution was to be conducted were clearly stated by Bishop Van Mildert during the progress of the bill through the House of Lords. "I have already noticed to your lordships," he observed, "one express provision in the printed statement of the plan, which allows persons to be admitted to public lectures in science or literature, of whatever description, without being subject, as other students will be, to the discipline of the University. By this regulation, many may avail themselves of very considerable advantages from the institution, subject to no previous inquiry or restrictions as to their religious persuasions. With respect also to those students who are to be actually members of the University, I have to state that it is intended to adopt the regulation of the University of Cambridge, which does not require tests or subscriptions at the admission of members, nor until they take degrees or other academical privileges. Such persons, however, will necessarily become subject to the discipline of the University, and, consequently, as part of that discipline, will be required to attend the daily service of the church." The bill, after this explanation, being supported by the premier, Earl Grey, in the House of Lords, and by Lord Althorp, in the House of Commons, passed the two houses, and on the 4th July, 1832, received the royal assent.

By this act, the dean and chapter of Durham were empowered to appropriate the above-mentioned estate "for the establishment and maintenance of a University for the advancement of learning, in connection with the said Cathedral Church; such University to consist of such warden or principal, of such professors and readers in such branches of learning and sciences, of such tutors, students, and other officers and persons, and generally to be established and instituted, and continued, according to such scheme and regulations as the said dean and chapter for the time being shall, from time to time, by writing under their common seal, with the consent of the Lord Bishop of Durham for the time being, order and prescribe." And it was further enacted, "that the government of the said University, and the order and discipline to be observed therein, according to the scheme and regulations which the said dean and chapter of Durham for the time being, with such consent as aforesaid, are hereinbefore empowered to order and prescribe, shall be, and the same are hereby vested in the said dean and chapter of Durham for the time being;" and that "the said University shall be subject to, and under the jurisdiction of, the Lord Bishop of Durham for the time being, as the visitor thereof."

* It is also a fact worthy of notice, that the dean and chapter were endowed by Henry VIII., not only with the revenues of the Benedictine Priory at Durham, but also with those of the college connected with it in the University of Oxford. This college, though in existence at an earlier period, seems to have owed much of its prosperity to Bishops Richard de Bury and Hatfield, and at the death of the latter prelate in 1281, it is stated to have enjoyed a provision for eight fellows, one of whom was warden or prior, and eight secular scholars. It was dissolved at the Reformation on account of its connection with the Priory of Durham; and its advowsons and other endowments were granted by Henry VIII. to the new dean and chapter. This body, therefore, is the representative of the ancient college, as well as of the ancient priory; and thus there is a peculiar fitness in their endeavour to replace the suppressed establishment for education in Oxford by the foundation of a new one of a similar nature at Durham.

In the year 1834, Bishop Van Mildert, in pursuance of the plan arranged, as above stated, between himself and the dean and chapter, introduced a bill into the House of Lords for annexing the eleventh, first, and third stalls in the Cathedral Church of Durham to the respective offices of warden, professor of divinity, and professor of Greek, in the University, the patronage of those offices being, in consequence, vested in the Bishop of Durham for the time being. Circumstances caused that bill to be withdrawn; Bishop Van Mildert was prepared, however, in the ensuing session of 1835, to bring in another bill for the same purpose; but relinquished his intention, in consequence of the appointment of the Ecclesiastical Commission, being fully persuaded that his proposed measure would be included in the recommendations of that board.

In the meantime, the dean and chapter being unwilling to withhold from the public the advantages of the new institution, until the plans for endowing it might be fully carried into execution, had opened the University in October, 1833. The Bishop of Durham, exercising the power which was proposed to be vested in him in consequence of his annexation of prebendal stalls to the offices of warden, professor of divinity, and professor of Greek, appointed persons to fill those offices; the professor of mathematics and the other offices of the University were appointed by the dean and chapter.

Although the University was thus opened, the course of study and nearly all the arrangements for conducting its business were left open to future deliberation. Considerable progress was gradually made in completing this part of the scheme; and in July, 1835, a statute was passed by the dean and chapter, and approved, according to the provisions of the act, by the bishop, entrusting the ordinary management of the University under the bishop as visitor, and the dean and chapter as governors, to the warden, a senate, and a convocation. The senate was composed of the chief officers of the University; the convocation consisted originally of the warden, and of a certain number of doctors and masters in the faculties of divinity, law, medicine, and arts, from the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; and consists at present, besides the original members, of all such persons as have been regularly admitted to the like degrees in the University of Durham, and have conformed to the regulations thereof.

The senate, in the exercise of the powers vested in them by the statute, lost no time in preparing a body of regulations for conducting the studies and the general business of the University. These regulations were submitted to convocation, and approved by it, on the 4th March, 1836.

The constitution and studies of the University having thus been satisfactorily arranged in accordance with the provisions of the act of parliament, a royal charter was granted under the great seal on the 1st June, 1837, incorporating the persons therein described by the name of "The Warden, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Durham," recognising and confirming the constitution of the University as established by the dean and chapter, and authorising the body corporate to have perpetual succession and a common seal, and to enjoy all the rights and privileges which are assured to the University by the act of parliament, or are incident to a university established by royal charter. The first degrees were conferred, under the sanction of the charter, on the 8th June, 1837.

By an act of parliament of 1 Victoria, c. 56, § 1, passed July 15th, 1837, entitled "An Act for Amending the several Acts for the Regulation of Attorneys and Solicitors," the provisions of former acts, relating to the admission and enrolment as attorneys of Bachelors of Arts or Law of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin, are extended to Bachelors of Arts or Law of the University of Durham.

A further provision was made for the University by an order of her Majesty in council, June 4th, 1841, in pursuance of a recommendation of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England.

By that order in council, it was provided that the office of Warden shall in future be permanently annexed to the deanery of Durham; a canonry in the cathedral church was annexed to each of the Professorships of Divinity and Greek; the Professor of Mathematics was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy, with an increased salary. It was also provided that, when the office of Warden shall be annexed to the deanery, a Professorship of Hebrew and the other oriental languages shall be founded; and, in addition to the six fellowships which had previously been established by the dean and chapter, eighteen other fellowships were founded.

Towards providing the funds for those purposes, certain estates were assigned to the University immediately, and a power was reserved for making a further endowment at a future period. This power has since been exercised by orders in council, conferring on the University an additional grant in money, and vesting in it landed estates in the immediate neighbourhood of Durham.

The founders of the University, in framing their plans for an efficient academical education, considered it necessary to provide, not only for the delivery of able lectures, but also for the maintenance of that system of domestic discipline and instruction which has been found to be so efficacious in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. With this view they formed, within the University, a college, to which, or to some other college, hall, or house, established on similar principles, every matriculated student is required to belong. They fitted up buildings for the reception of students, and appointed censors and tutors to watch over their conduct and direct their studies, under the superintendence of the warden. These accommodations for students have subsequently been much enlarged, especially by the addition of the Castle of Durham with its precincts, which is now held in trust by the bishop for the benefit of the University, under an order of the Queen in council, made on the 8th August, 1837, in pursuance of the act of 6 and 7 William IV., for carrying into effect the reports of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. This acquisition has provided the college with an excellent chapel and hall, besides affording a number of convenient rooms for the reception of students and for general academical purposes.

Upon the same principle of uniting domestic discipline with efficient lectures, and with the especial view of placing these advantages within the reach of persons of limited means, a new hall, called "Bishop Hatfield's* Hall," was opened in Michaelmas term, 1846, and enlarged by a considerable building in 1849. And the applications for admission at this hall continuing to increase, another hall, called "Bishop Cosin's† Hall," was opened in Michaelmas term, 1851.

The rooms in these halls are let furnished, by which plan the expenses of a student's outfit are greatly diminished; and in other respects, also, their arrangements are made on a more economical scale. Students in every faculty are received in the halls as well as in the college. The members, too, of each society are subject to the same discipline, are under the same tutors, and are eligible for the most part to the same endowments. The exceptions are, that the Pemberton fellow and scholars must be members of the University college, and that, in the appointment to Bishop Maltby's exhibition, a preference is given to Bishop Hatfield's hall.

Provision has thus been made for a regular course of general academical education, similar to that which is given at Oxford and Cambridge. The qualifications of the students to enter on this course are ascertained by examination before admission. Their proficiency during its continuance is ascertained by public examinations held annually, particularly by one at the end of the third year for the degree of Bachelor of Arts. At this last examination, by the assistance of examiners from Oxford, the same standard of attainments has been fixed for a certificate which is observed on the like occasion in that University. The standing for the degree of B.A., as for all other degrees, is the same as that which is required at Oxford.

Besides this general academical education, provision was at the same time made for a course of theological study. Those who have passed the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Durham, Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, are admitted as students in theology, on producing satisfactory testimonials of character. Other persons, also, between the ages of 21 and 26 (and in certain cases beyond that age), are admissible to this class; but they must previously pass an examination in the Greek and Latin languages, and in the elements of theology. At the end of the course, the students of this class, if they pass the requisite examination, and produce the necessary testimonials, receive, under the common seal of the University, a certificate of competency, which is called a license in theology. Those who have been admitted to the degree of B.A., at least, at Durham, Oxford, Cambridge, or Dublin, obtain a license at the end of one year. Other students cannot become licentiates till they have completed two years; and they are required, also, to pass the previous examinations appointed by the warden and senate.

In the year 1837, the benefits of the University were extended by the establishment of a course of instruction for students in civil engineering and mining. The full course of study extends over three years; and at the close of it, such as have passed all the requisite examinations are admitted to the "academical rank" of civil engineer.

In the year 1852, an addition was made to the regulations of the University, with the view of giving additional facilities for students in medicine. By * Bishop Hatfield was a liberal contributor to the endowment of Durham College, in Oxford. See p. 143, note.

† John Cosin, translated to the see of Durham in 1660, was not only a theologian of a high order, but memorable in the diocese for the restorations he effected, and for his munificent benefactions; of which the library, founded by him for the use of the clergy, is an instance.

these regulations it is provided, that students in medicine, after residing one year in the University, and passing their first public examination, may continue to pursue their studies, either in the University or in some school of medicine within the United Kingdom which has been received into connection with the University by the authority of convocation. In every such school of medicine students must reside in some college, hall, or house attached to it, or under such general superintendence as the warden and senate shall approve. After three years thus passed in the study of medicine, and the sciences connected with that faculty, a student may present himself for the final examination in medicine, to be conducted in the University by three examiners, at least, nominated annually by the warden and approved by convocation. There is a provision, by which students who have passed the examinations for the degree of B.A. may proceed as students in medicine. Regulations are also made respecting the standing requisite for obtaining a license and admission to degrees in medicine.

In Easter term, 1852, the Newcastle-upon-Tyne College of Medicine was received into connection with the University, in conformity with the above-mentioned regulations, and the terms were sanctioned by convocation.

The regular course of academical and theological instruction is confined to the members of the University, and is conducted by the professors and tutors, who give lectures daily. Public lectures, on various branches of literature and science, are also delivered, from time to time, by the professors, readers, and lecturers. These are open, under certain regulations, to persons who are not members of the University. The following are the principal public lectures delivered in the University, in addition to the daily lectures given by the professors and tutors:—

PROFESSOR OF DIVINITY.—Public lectures have been delivered on the Advantages of the Study of Theology, and on the Study of Church History. Courses of lectures are given to the members of the University on Sunday evenings, during Michaelmas and Epiphany terms.

PROFESSOR OF GREEK AND CLASSICAL LITERATURE.—Public lectures have been delivered on the advantage of classical studies, on the best mode of pursuing them, on the imitation of the ancients, and on the Greek dialects. Courses of philological lectures have been given to the members of the University, on the Philippics of Demosthenes, on Æschylus, Aristophanes, and Sophocles.

THE PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS has delivered public lectures on the advantage of the study of mathematics, as conducive to the development of the intellectual powers; on eclipses; on the solar system, and its connection with the rest of the material universe; and has also given courses of lectures on popular astronomy to the members of the University.

THE READER IN LAW has delivered several lectures upon the history of the House of Commons, in which he has traced the progress of that legislative body from its earliest origin, illustrating the subject by numerous references to original documents. He has also discussed the law of tithes, and the laws relating to mines and minerals.

THE READER IN MEDICINE has delivered courses of lectures on anatomy and other subjects.

THE READER IN HEBREW delivers two courses of lectures during each academical term; on two days in the week, a perfectly elementary lecture; and on two other days, a lecture adapted to those who have made some progress in the Hebrew language.

THE READER IN HISTORY AND POLITE LITERATURE has delivered several lectures upon general history; and intends to pursue the same course, together with lectures upon particular portions of ancient and modern history. In the lectures already given, Mr. Greenwood has deduced from a variety of sources information with respect to the geographical position of the place whence the present inhabitants of the world have spread; and pointed out the physical and moral causes which appear to have influenced the progress of the tide of population. He has traced the rise of the general divisions of the human race, and of the principal ancient nations, referring constantly to original authorities both in sacred and profane history; and has pursued more minutely the history of the people of Israel from the earliest period to the commencement of the Christian era. His lectures in 1816 related to the origin and growth of the papal power; and subsequently he has treated of various interesting points in the early history of England.

THE READER IN NATURAL PHILOSOPHY has delivered courses of popular elementary lectures.

THE LECTURER IN CHEMISTRY AND MINERALOGY has delivered courses of lectures on several departments of general chemistry, and chemistry applied to the arts; and on mineralogy and geology; and has also more especially the charge of instructing the students in civil engineering and mining in these branches of science as connected with their respective pursuit. Occasional courses of practical chemistry are also given; and laboratory pupils receive instruction, on paying an additional fee.

THE FRENCH AND GERMAN LANGUAGES form a part of the regular course of study appointed for students in civil engineering and mining; and any other member of the University can receive instruction in those languages.

UNIVERSITY FELLOWSHIPS.—Six University fellowships were founded by the dean and chapter in the academical year 1839-40; but by the order of the Queen in council, for the further endowment of the University, bearing date June 4th, 1841, the number of fellowships was increased to twenty-four, two of which are to be filled up every year, until the number is complete. By the order in council it is provided—That no person shall be eligible unless he has been admitted to the degree of B.A. in the University; that no person shall be eligible oftener than three times, nor at any other than consecutive elections of fellows; that, when the number of twenty-four fellows is complete, not more than eight of those fellows who have attained the age of twenty-five years shall be laymen; that the annual value of each fellowship shall be £120; and that a further annual sum of £30 shall be paid to each of the senior clerical fellows to the number of ten; that a fellowship shall be tenable for eight years, from the time of election, and for the further time of two years, by a fellow who has taken holy orders within a specified time; that a fellowship shall be vacated by marriage, or by admission to any cathedral preferment, or to any benefice; that the warden shall have power to require any fellow to take part in the public examinations, and to call him into residence, when he shall deem it expedient to do so; and that the University shall have authority to make regulations, from time to time, for securing the election of the most meritorious candidate, regard being had to moral character as well as to learning.

In accordance with the power given to the University by this order in council, the following regulations were proposed by the warden and senate, and approved by convocation, December 22nd, 1841:—1. The University fellows shall be elected by the warden and senate, in the Michaelmas term in each year. 2. No one shall be eligible, unless he has been placed by the examiners in the third class at least, at the public examination for the degree of B.A.; or in the second class at least, at the public examination for the degree of M.A., or has been recommended by the said examiners as eligible. 3. No one shall be eligible, unless he has produced satisfactory testimonials of character from his college, hall, or house. 4. No one shall be eligible at more than three elections, after he is admissible to the degree of B.A. 5. The warden and senate, in making their election, shall have due regard to the candidate's place upon the class list. But they shall have authority, if they think fit, to subject the candidates to further examination, either by themselves, or by persons whom they may appoint. 6. The warden and senate shall have authority to settle the form of admission to a fellowship. 7. The fellows shall be under the government of the warden; but in graver cases the warden shall consult the senate; and, with their concurrence, he shall have full power to forbid residence, to suspend the payment of the stipends, or to remove from the fellowship altogether. 8. Every fellow shall proceed regularly to the degree of M.A., unless he shall obtain the consent to proceed to a degree in another faculty. If he neglects to proceed to the required degree within a reasonable time, the warden shall have authority to declare the fellowship vacant. 9. A fellowship shall not be tenable with a foundation scholarship. 10. If any lay-fellow, when he attains the age of twenty-five years, is not included in the number of the eight lay-fellows allowed by the order of council of the 4th of June, 1841, the warden and senate shall declare his fellowship vacant.

PEMBERTON FELLOWSHIP AND SCHOLARSHIPS.—A fellowship of the annual value of £100 was founded in the year 1844, by Mrs. Pemberton, of Sherburn Hall, in compliance with the recommendation of her late husband, John Pemberton, M.A., one of the first members and a constant friend of the University. The same lady has also founded two scholarships of the annual value of £30.; they are known as the Pemberton scholarships. The right of nomination is reserved to Mrs. Pemberton during her life, subject to the following conditions:—"1. The appointment to a fellowship is restricted to those who have taken the degree of B.A. at least, in the University of Durham, being members of University College, and having college testimonials; with a preference, ceteris paribus, to natives of the county of Durham. 2. The appointment to scholarships is restricted to students of University College, in their first Michaelmas term of residence, with due regard to moral character, attainment in classics and mathematics, and pecuniary circumstances, upon condition of residence and attention to academic discipline and studies. The fellowship is to be tenable for ten years, with a year of grace, and to be voided on marriage, and by fortune or preferment of £200 a year net income. The scholarships are tenable for three years. By a grace passed in convocation on March 4th, 1844, it was determined that, when the nomination of the fellowship and scholarships shall lapse to the University, the foundation shall be regulated by statute of the University, namely, of the warden, senate, and convocation, subject from time to time, to necessary alterations to be made by the same authority, upon the principles and conditions already indicated, vesting the election of fellows for ever in the warden, senate, and as many of the senior fellows as shall equal in number the members of the senate, exclusive of the warden; the warden having an original and casting vote: and the appointment of scholars in the warden, who shall be guided in his choice by moral character, pecuniary circumstances, and attainments, with a preference, ceteris paribus, to natives of the county of Durham."

UNIVERSITY SCHOLARSHIPS.—There are twenty University scholarships, of the annual value of £30 each. They are in the patronage of the dean and prebendaries, the former of whom nominates to two of these scholarships, and each of the latter to one. One is filled up from the pupils of Durham Grammar School, and the remainder are given to the students who distinguish themselves at admission or at the first or second year examination in arts. The distribution of these open scholarships is regulated by the following order of senate, which was made November 17th, 1840:—"If there is only one vacancy to be filled up, the examiners for the first and second years' examination in arts shall recommend to the warden and senate the student (not being already a foundation scholar), who has acquitted himself best in the above mentioned examination. If there is more than one vacancy, they shall recommend, as far as may be, an equal number from the students in each year; provided that they do not, for the sake of preserving such equality, recommend any one who is either undeserving or decidedly inferior to the student of the other year. In any case where the merits of the students are nearly equally balanced, the examiners shall have the power of recommending two or more candidates for one vacancy, of whom the warden and senate shall elect one. If a student thus recommended by the examiners produces a testimonial from his college, hall, or house, he shall be forthwith elected, and admitted to a scholarship by the warden. If a student fail to obtain such a testimonial, the recommendation shall be considered void; and the scholarship shall either continue vacant, or shall be filled up by the student who may be recommended by the examiners, on the requisition of the warden, as having acquitted himself the next best in the examination. One scholarship, at least, if there is any vacancy available for the purpose, shall be open for competition in the Michaelmas term of each year to all candidates for admission, and to all the students in arts who are in their first or Michaelmas term of residence."

BARRINGTON SCHOLARSHIPS.—The trustees of Bishop Barrington are accustomed to grant annual stipends of £35 each, for three years, for the support of students, being the sons or orphans of clergymen in the diocese of Durham.

CREWE SCHOLARSHIPS.—Exhibitions are granted by Lord Crewe's trustees, and the scholarships are held by students, according to certain regulations.

VAN MILDERT SCHOLARSHIPS.—On the death of Bishop Van Mildert, in February, 1836, a subscription was commenced for the purpose of endowing one or more scholarships in the University, to be called the Van Mildert Scholarships. One of these was founded in 1837; and in 1841, a further sum having been given by the subscribers to a monument in memory of the late bishop, instead of this scholarship, two scholarships were founded, of the annual value of £50 each. The first election on this foundation took place in June, 1842. The following are the regulations for these scholarships:—"1. Unless examiners shall be specially appointed for the purpose by the warden and senate, the electors for the Van Mildert Scholarships shall be the examiners for the degree of B.A. 2. The candidates for the Van Mildert Scholarships shall be such undergraduates admitted to the examination for the degree of B.A. as are desirous of becoming students in theology, and are recommended as fit by the warden and their tutor. 3. Unless there be a special examination for the purpose, the examination for the degree of B.A. shall also be the examination for the Van Mildert Scholarships. 4. The examiners shall elect that candidate who, from the talents and acquirements shown in the examination, shall appear to them to be the best qualified to pursue the study of divinity with success. 5. The election shall be certified to the warden, in writing, attested by the signature of the examiners. 6. Each Van Mildert Scholarship shall be tenable for two years, provided the scholar shall during that time keep his terms and pursue his studies in the University of Durham as a student in theology. 7. The warden shall have authority to dispense with the keeping of one term during the two years. 8. If a Van Mildert scholar shall, without such dispensation, fail to keep any one term, as a student in theology, or if, under any circumstances, he shall fail to keep any two terms as a student in theology, during the two years, the warden shall declare the scholarship vacant, and direct the examiners to proceed to a new election. 9. In such cases the scholar shall receive only such portion of the proceeds of the scholarship as may be due for the terms which he has kept. The residue which may be occasioned, either by this or any other circumstances, shall be either laid out in prizes for those who distinguish themselves at their final examination in theology, or applied in any such other manner as the warden and senate may think most conducive to the interests of the University. 10. No Van Mildert scholar shall receive the proceeds of the scholarship, unless he produces a certificate from the tutor of good conduct and attention to his studies. 11. The University shall have the power to alter or amend these regulations from time to time, provided that the Van Mildert Scholarships shall always be applied to the encouragement of theological learning in the University."

GISBORNE SCHOLARSHIP.—This scholarship was founded in 1841, by the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, M.A., canon of Durham, who, at the period just mentioned, placed at the disposal of the dean and chapter £500 for the benefit of the University, and the capitular body having determined that the sum should be applied to the foundation of a scholarship, a grace was passed in convocation, on December 22nd, 1841, for adding to this sum £100, previously given by Mr. Gisborne to the University, and for founding a scholarship of the annual value of £80, to be known by the name of the Gisborne Scholarship. At the same time power was given to the warden and senate to make regulations for the Gisborne Scholarship. It is tenable for two years.

THORP SCHOLARSHIP.—This scholarship was founded in Easter term, 1848, in consequence of the executors of the late Robert Thorp, Esq., having offered to the University a sum of £420 for its foundation. It is of the value of £21, and is filled up annually on the nomination of the warden.

NEWBY SCHOLARSHIP.—This scholarship was founded by convocation on October 31st, 1848, in conformity with the wishes of the pupils and friends of the late Rev. George Newby, who subscribed funds for its establishment. The following are the regulations for this scholarship, viz.:—"1. The Newby Scholarship shall be open to all undergraduates who are not yet qualified to present themselves for the final examination for the degree of B.A., and to all persons not yet admitted to be students in the University. 2. Every candidate must produce to the warden satisfactory testimonials of character before he can be admitted to examination. 3. Unless examiners are specially appointed by the warden and senate, the examiners for the first and second examination in arts shall be examiners for the Newby Scholarship. The examination shall be exclusively classical. 4. The Newby Scholarship shall be tenable until the scholar is of standing to present himself for the final examination for the degree of B.A., provided the scholar during that time keep his terms and pursue his studies in the University."

LINDSAY SCHOLARSHIP.—Ralph Lindsay, Esq., has founded a scholarship, of the annual value of £40, tenable for four years by natives of the Diocese of Durham, who shall have been educated for three years at the Grammar School at Durham.

BARRY SCHOLARSHIP.—James Barry, Esq., late of the city of Durham, who died November 4th, 1847, by his last will, devised to certain trustees therein named, such part of his effects, as should enable them to invest in their names in some of the parliamentary or public stocks or funds of this kingdom, such a sum as would produce an annual dividend of £30, for the establishment of a Divinity Scholarship in the University of Durham. The right of election to this scholarship is vested in the Dean of Durham, or in case of his absence such one of the canons of the Cathedral as he shall name in his stead, the canon of the Cathedral in residence, the warden of the University, the professor of divinity, and the professor or reader in Hebrew. The scholarship, which is of the value of £30 per annum, is tenable for one year only, and the candidates must be undergraduate students who have been pursuing their studies in the University as divinity students during three successive terms then next preceding the time of election. It is requisite that candidates should produce to the electors satisfactory testimonials of good conduct and studious habits, signed by the divinity professor, the senior tutor to the house or college to which the student shall belong, and the proctors of the University. The candidates are required to deliver to the electors three weeks at least before the day of election, one or more essay or essays, either on the Liturgy of the Church of England, or on such part thereof, or on such one or more of the Articles of the Church of England as the professor of divinity shall appoint. The electors, or any three of them, having appointed some day in the month of May in each year for the election, are to meet in the chapel of the University, and cause the authors of the two essays, which the said electors, or any three or more of them which the said electors shall declare to be the best, to be read by the respective authors openly and audibly: and for the encouragement of elocution as well as composition, they are to adjudge the scholarship to the candidate who has read his essay in the best manner.

ELLERTON SCHOLARSHIP.—This scholarship was founded in February, 1848, by the Rev. Edward Ellerton, D.D., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. It is open to the natives of the north riding of the county of York, with a preference to a candidate educated at Richmond Grammar School, and is tenable in ordinary cases for three years. We subjoin the regulations for this scholarship. "1. The Ellerton Scholarship shall, in ordinary cases, be elected by the warden and senate in the Michaelmas term of each year. 2. Each candidate, before he is admitted to examination, must submit to the warden testimonials of character and certificates to show that he possesses the qualifications specified in the deed of foundation. 3. The examination for admission to the scholarship shall be conducted by two or more examiners, to be nominated by the warden. The examiners, being furnished with a list of the candidates, shall make to the warden and senate a report of the proficiency of each. 4. The Ellerton scholar will be required to keep his terms, and pursue his studies in the University as a student in arts. 5. The warden shall have authority to dispense with the keeping of not more than one term of residence in the course of two years; and not more than two terms of residence in the course of three years. 6. In such cases the scholar shall receive only such portions of the proceeds of the scholarship as may be due for the terms which he has kept. The residue which may arise either from this cause, or from any other circumstance, shall be added from time to time to increase the value of the scholarship. 7. The University shall have power to alter and amend these regulations from time to time, consistently with the deed of foundation."

SCHOOL SCHOLARSHIP.—A subscription has been set on foot and several sums have been already contributed by former and present members of Durham Grammar School, towards the foundation of a scholarship.

PRIZES.—Prizes of various kinds have been given from time to time by the University and its friends, which have been devoted to encourage proficiency in the various arts and sciences. The foundation of a permanent Prize Fund has also been laid by several liberal donations.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.—This college was formed, at the opening of the University, for the purpose of uniting a system of domestic discipline and superintendence with academical instruction. Several houses, conveniently situated in the neighbourhood of the castle, were thrown together and divided into rooms for the reception of students. Since the castle has been held in trust for the University by the Bishop of Durham, much additional accommodation for students has been obtained within its walls. The hall of the castle has been occupied as a college hall, and its chapel as a college chapel. Every student in statu pupillari must reside within the College, unless a dispensation to reside elsewhere be granted by the warden; and thus the control under which the students are placed is similar to that which is exercised in the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. College examinations, independent of those appointed by the University, are held at the end of every term.

BISHOP HATFIELD'S HALL.—A convenient site and premises having been purchased by the warden and senate, this hall was opened in October, 1846, for the reception of students in any faculty; and a new building was added to it in October, 1849. Members of the hall are classed under the various professors and tutors, according to their qualifications and attainments; and in this respect, as also in their being eligible to all fellowships and scholarships,* with the exception of the Pemberton foundation, are exactly on the same footing as members of University College. In the management of this hall, the greatest regard is paid to economy.

BISHOP COSIN'S HALL.—This hall was opened in October, 1851. Premises conveniently situated, and already in the possession of the University, were fitted up at once for the reception of students in any faculty. The arrangements in this hall are the same as in Bishop Hatfield's hall, and its members are eligible to fellowships and scholarships.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE COLLEGE OF MEDICINE.—This college was founded in 1851, and was admitted into connection with the University at a convocation holden on the 27th January, 1852. Students in medicine, who desire to avail themselves of this connection, are matriculated into the University, and may proceed, in the first place, to a license in medicine, and subsequently to the degrees of bachelor and doctor in the same faculty. One year's residence in the University, and attendance on appointed lectures, are required preparatory to an examination in the rudiments of religion, literature, and science. In order to obtain a license in medicine, students who pass the above examination must afterwards pursue their studies at this college for three years, and may then present themselves for the final examination in medicine, which is directed to the medical sciences, and is conducted by the University. The Winter Session commences on the 1st of October, and the Summer Session on the 1st of May, in every year. Students, who are members of the University, are subject to the same discipline as collegiate students of the University. Students within the schools are under the control of the president and council. Matriculated students are eligible to scholarships in the University. Two exhibitions have been founded, each amounting to £15 per annum, and tenable for two years. They are awarded by examination, and are open to all students of the college. Students of the college have daily access to extensive libraries in the college and infirmary. The museums of anatomy, pathology, and materia medica, and the laboratories, are open daily.

NEVILLE HALL, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.—This hall was opened by the University in October, 1852, for the reception of students in medicine. Special leave may be given in certain cases, by the warden of the University, for students in medicine to reside elsewhere. Other students, who must conform to the regulations of the hall, may be received in it as residents. The hall is under the general charge of the resident principal.

THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.—The University Library was founded on the opening of the University. The books consist principally of donations from various members and friends of the University. Bishop Van Mildert contributed, with many costly and useful works, a splendid collection of the Benedictine Fathers; and many other friends of the University have contributed liberally to the library. A fund for maintaining and increasing the library is raised by a tax on the members of the University, out of which useful books are purchased from time to time. The library is open daily, during term, from twelve to one o'clock; and, during the vacations, on Mondays and Wednesdays, at the same hour. The University library is under the direction of a board of curators. Books may be taken from the library by the members of the University, under regulations fixed by the curators. The books are chiefly deposited in an oaken gallery, erected in Bishop Cosin's library, on the Palace Green, at the sole expense of the late munificent Bishop Van Mildert.

THE MUSEUM.—Soon after the University was founded, the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, canon of Durham, purchased and presented to the University a valuable collection of objects of natural history. These have been deposited in a commodious building, fitted up for the purpose, on the banks of the river Wear, and have since received several valuable additions, by donations from the members of the University and others. The museum, which is open to the public, now contains nearly a complete collection of British birds, and is under the direction of a board of curators.

THE OBSERVATORY.—In the year 1839, an opportunity occurred of securing a valuable collection of astronomical instruments, including a transit instrument, a telescope of above eight feet focal length, by Fraunhofer, and a clock, by Hardy. A liberal subscription was made among the members and friends of the University, and the instruments were purchased to furnish an observatory. An eligible site was obtained upon elevated ground belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham, to the south-west of the city, upon which the building is erected. The observer resides at the observatory, and observations are regularly made. The Duke of Northumberland, in 1840, made an important addition to the instruments, by presenting an excellent refracting telescope. The observatory is placed under the direction of a board of curators.

HOODS—INSIGNIA OF DEGREES.—The following hoods are adopted by the University of Durham: B.A., black silk or bombazine, lined with white wool; M.A., black, lined with palatinate purple; B.D., entirely black; D.D., scarlet lined with palatinate purple. For the University regulations, &c., see the University Calendar, published annually.

Auditor of the University Accounts: William Lloyd Wharton, M.A.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, situated at the southern end of South-street, is a handsome stone building, in the Tudor style; on its western side is attached the residence of the head master, and, at a short distance, a separate and commodious dwelling has been erected for the second master. This school is in connection with the Cathedral, and its establishment is almost coeval with that of the church itself. Previous to the suppression of the religious houses, the Monastery of Durham possessed two schools; one was situated in the cloister, where novices were taught by the ablest and most learned of the monks; the other was in the infirmary, beyond the abbey gates, where the boys of the almshouse were educated. On the extinction of these seminaries at the dissolution, Henry VIII. appointed commissioners "to set out dwelling houses, for the master and usher of the new Grammar School;" and, by the 28th chapter of the school statutes, it is ordained, "that there shall be constantly maintained eighteen poor boys of apt parts, whose friends are not able to give them education, but not to be admitted until they have learned to read and write, and, in the dean's judgment, are sufficiently grounded in the first rudiments of grammar; after admission, to be maintained by the church, until they completely understand grammar, and can read and write Latin, for which they shall be allowed four years, or, with the dean's assent, five at most; none shall be admitted above fifteen years of age. The choristers shall not be limited to that age, but may be admitted scholars if they are fit; in case they have proved themselves particularly serviceable to the choir, and skilful in music, they are to be preferred before others." During the parliamentary wars, this school was suffered to fall into decay, or, according to some writers, was destroyed by the Scots in 1640. After the Restoration, it was re-founded by the dean and chapter, under whose patronage the course of instruction continued to be exercised in the building on the Palace Green until 1844, when the present school-house was provided by the liberality of the capitular body. The head master is to be "learned in the Greek and Latin languages, of good fame, sound faith, and pious life; and, besides the eighteen boys maintained by the church, he is also to teach all others that shall resort to his school." The usher, or second master, is also to have an unexceptionable character, similar to that required of the head master; and they are "to teach such books and rules, and follow such order as the dean and chapter, with the bishop's assent, shall prescribe." This establishment has, for many years past, enjoyed a high reputation, both from the respectability and attainments of its teachers, and the many distinguished persons who have been educated within its walls. Among its eminent scholars, we find the present Bishop of Chester; the Ven. Archdeacon Thorp, D.D.; the Rev. Ralph Tatham, D.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge; the Rev. Frederic C. Plumptre, D.D., Master of University College, Oxford; Viscount Hardinge; Sir Roderick I. Murchison, F.R.S.; Robert Cadell, the eminent publisher of the works of Sir Walter Scott, &c., &c. There are eighteen King's Scholarships, of the annual value of nearly £40 (£30 in money, besides exemption from classical fees), tenable at the school for four years, to which period a fifth may be added at the discretion of the dean. The dean and chapter fill up the vacancies every year, on the first Saturday after the 20th November, by examination; and any one under fifteen years of age, whether previously at the school or not, is admissible as a candidate, provided always that his parents are not in wealthy circumstances. The following scholarships and exhibitions are attached to the school, at the universities:—Two scholarships of £15 a year each, founded by Dr. Hartwell, canon of Durham, and tenable at any college or hall at Oxford or Cambridge. Five scholarships of £10 a year each, founded by Bishop Cosin, at St. Peter's College, Cambridge. Six scholarships of £10 a year each, at St. John's College, Cambridge. One scholarship, at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of £10 a year, for which a preference is given to Durham and Newcastle schools. One scholarship, of £30 a year, at the University of Durham. One scholarship, of £15 a year, at the University of Durham. One exhibition, of £40 a year, founded by Ralph Lindsay, Esq., formerly a king's scholar at Durham school, and tenable at the University of Durham by natives of the diocese who have been educated at the school for three years. The Patynson Scholarship, of Christ's College, Cambridge (value about £20 a year), was founded by Dr. Patynson, with a preference to natives of Northumberland, or, in default of such, to natives of the diocese of Durham; in default of such again, it is open to all. The nomination to it is vested in the dean and chapter of Durham, who are not obliged, however, to nominate a boy from their own school. Governors: the dean and chapter. Head Master: Rev. Henry Holden, M.A. Second Master: Rev. Henry Stoke, M.A. Mathematical Master: Rev. T. C. Durham, M.A. First Assistant Master: E. H. Goldsmith; Second Assistant and Foreign Language Master: Mr. Brunner. Arithmetic and Writing Master: Mr. Forster. Drawing Master: Mr. Newton.

DURHAM UNITED BLUE COAT AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—This establishment, erected in 1810-11, is situated on the south side of Claypath, and comprises two large school-rooms, with class-rooms, &c, annexed. The Blue Coat School had its origin in 1708, in the application of some portion of the charitable funds of the city; only six boys were then educated, but, in 1736, six girls were added to the establishment. In 1753, seven additional boys were admitted, in consequence of a bequest from Mrs. Ann Carr, of the interest of £500. From 1718, the Blue Coat School had been kept in the New Place, an old house belonging to the corporation, near the church of St. Nicholas (recently taken down, and the site occupied by the new markets). In 1810, the Sunday Schools were united to the Blue Coat School, and the present buildings were erected for their reception. The new schools were opened in January, 1812. In the year 1851, an infant school was added, which has always been well filled, and is now of great importance as a place of sound preparation for other schools. The total average attendance at these schools is 498 children. President: the Ven. Archdeacon Thorp. Vice Presidents: the Dean of Durham, Rev. Dr. Townsend, Rev. Canon Douglas, Rev. Canon Jenkyns, A. Wilkinson, Esq., J. F. Elliot, Esq. Treasurer: Jas. Brooksbank, Esq. Secretary: Rev. James Raine. Superintendent: Rev. John G. Cromwell. Teachers; J. Reed, Miss Greener, and Miss Allen.

DURHAM DIOCESAN TRAINING SCHOOL.—This school is delightfully situated on that part of the banks of the Wear, called Pelaw Leazes, near Gilesgate, and commands interesting views of the city and neighbourhood. It was established in October, 1811, and has for its object, as its name implies, the preparation of pupils for the profession of schoolmasters. Candidates must be communicants of the Church of England, not under sixteen years of age, and must produce certificates of baptism and character, signed by the minister of their respective parishes, and one of health, signed by a surgeon, when they appear for the admission examination. This examination embraces reading, spelling, grammar, scripture history, general religious knowledge, the church catechism, geography and arithmetic. The payment required from the pupils is at the rate of £20 a-year, payable in advance, at the commencement of each term. The committee, however, offers to the competition of the most deserving students five exhibitions of £10 and six of £5 each, tenable for one year, but renewable for the same period, if an exhibitor shall show at the annual examination that he has made great progress during the preceding year; and all pupils above 20 years of age are eligible, at the end of their first year's residence, for Queen's Scholarships of £20 or £25. These limitations do not apply to pupil teachers, who may obtain Queen's Scholarships at the first examination that follows the completion of their apprenticeship. Instruction is given in—I. Scripture and ecclesiastical history, evidences, exposition of scripture, the church catechism, liturgy and the thirty-nine articles.—II. History.—III. Geography.—IV. Grammar.—V. Mathematics.—VI. Agricultural chemistry.—VII. Vocal music.—VIII. Model drawing. A large garden is cultivated by the pupils; and those who show an aptitude, have opportunities of using bookbinders' and carpenters' tools. The usual period of training extends over two years. The pupils attend the practising school a stated number of times during the week, where they are practised in the art of teaching. On Sundays they attend, in rotation, the services of the Cathedral; while those not at the Cathedral are engaged at the Sunday-school connected with the practising school, and accompany the children to church.

In the annual report of the sub-committee of management, presented January 11th, 1855, it is stated, that during the year 1854 nineteen pupils have been admitted into the Training School, ten have been sent out to schools, and thirty were resident in the institution at the end of the year. The examination held in December, 1853, resulted in the award of certificates to sixteen pupils. This was the second occasion when every candidate presented for examination succeeded in gaining a certificate of merit. At the examination held at Christmas, 1854, twenty-three students were presented as candidates, twenty of whom gained certificates. A new dormitory, kitchens, &c. have been recently erected, at a cost of £1,107 18s. 8d., towards which the Privy Council contributed £450, and the National Society £110. In making these alterations, due care has been taken to provide better means than were before possessed for maintaining good discipline, and for enforcing those habits of order, propriety, and cleanliness, which it is so essential to inculcate upon the teachers of elementary schools. The possibility of a further extension of the school has not been overlooked, and the recent alterations have been so contrived that additional accommodation could be provided at no very considerable expense.

The Society of the Durham Diocesan Training School is governed by a committee, which consists of the Bishop of Durham, the Dean and Chapter of Durham, the Archdeacons of Durham, Northumberland, and Lindisfarne, and two deputies, one of whom at least shall be a layman, appointed by the subscribers in each of the following deaneries:—Stockton, Darlington, Easington, Chester, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Corbridge (including Hexhamshire), and in the remainder of the archdeaconry of Lindisfarne.

COMMITTEE, AS AT PRESENT CONSTITUTED.—The Bishop of Durham, president; the Dean and Chapter of Durham; the Archdeacons of Durham, Northumberland, and Lindisfarne.

DEANERY DEPUTIES.—County of Durham.—Stockton—T. R. Grey, Esq.; Rev. T. L. Strong, Sedgefield. Darlington—J. H. Aylmer, Esq., Walworth Castle; Rev. W. Beckett, Heighington. Chester—Ralph Carr, Esq., Dunston Hill; Rev. James Carr, South Shields. Easington—Rowland Bourdon, Esq., Castle Eden; Rev. A. Bethune, Seaham. County of Northumberland.—Newcastle—John Clayton, Esq., Newcastle-upon-Tyne; Rev. C. Reed, Tynemouth. Corbridge (including Hexhamshire)—W. B. Beaumont, Esq.; Rev. F. Gipps. The Archdeaconry of Lindisfarne—The Earl Grey, Howick; Rev. Dixon Clark, Belford. Morpeth—J. H. Atkinson, Esq., Angerton; Hon. and Rev. F. R. Grey, Morpeth.

The management of the Training School is vested in a sub-committee of not less than five, nor more than seven, named by the committee: the treasurer and secretary being members ex officio.

PRESENT SUB-COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT.—The Dean of Durham; the Archdeacon of Durham; Rev. Professor Jenkyns; R. Burdon, Esq.; John Fawcett, Esq.; Rev. James Raine; and Henry Stapylton, Esq.; treasurer—J. F. Elliott, Esq.; secretary—Rev. J. D. Eade.

OFFICERS OF THE SOCIETY.—Chairman of the sub-committee of management—The Dean of Durham; principal—Rev. J. G. Cromwell, M.A.; vice-principal—Rev. R. D. Dingle, B.A.; treasurer—J. F. Elliott, Esq.; secretary—Rev. John D. Eade, M.A.; master of practising school—Mr. John Fish; singing-master—Mr. Ashton; drawing-master—Mr. W. Newton.

DURHAM SCHOOL OF ART.—This institution was established in January 1853, and has already more than realised the expectations of its promoters. From April 1854 to April 1855, the number of individual students who have attended the school for various periods has been—40 in the morning class, and 70 in the evening class; the four subscribing schools give a further addition of 100, which makes a total of 210 students who have received art instruction, more or less through the instrumentality of the institution. At the present time there are 20 in the morning class, and 39 in the evening class. Several medals have been gained during the last two years by the scholars of this school, and the department of science and art has also appointed two of the students pupil teachers. The attendance at the evening class continues steady, which shows that the institution is productive of benefit to the city. To increase its usefulness some additions to its stock of examples are desirable, for both morning and evening classes; and for the use of the latter a small library of works of art should be, if possible, obtained.

Palmer, the Dean of Durham; treasurer, J. Howison, Esq.; hon. sec., Rev. T. C. Durham; drawing master, Mr. G. Newton.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL, Clock Mill, Millburngate, has for its object to relieve the public from juvenile vagrancy, mendicancy, and consequent depravity. To rescue as many children as possible from degradation and misery; to prepare them for a useful and respectable course of life; to try the power of kindness over the young and destitute; and thus to discharge a Christian duty towards a class which particularly requires attention and amelioration. Chairman of committee, Rev. J. Cundill; treasurer, Mr. Backhouse; secretary, Mr. Bonomi; teacher, Miss Carter.

ST. OSWALD'S NATIONAL SCHOOL, Church-street Head, was erected in 1845, at a cost of about £1,500. It is a substantial stone building, comprising schools for boys, girls, and infants, and is numerously attended. There is a dwelling-house and garden for the master, at the back of the school. William Lawson, Flora Watson, and Fanny Porter, teachers.

ST. CUTHBERT'S (CATHOLIC) SCHOOL is a neat stone structure, beautifully situated in Old Elvet, and is attended by about 120 children of both sexes. Thomas Chapman and Miss Malone, teachers.

THE WESLEYAN DAY AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS, situated in New Elvet, were erected in 1817, at an expense of £295. They are supported by voluntary subscriptions. John Champion, teacher.

Besides the above there are infant schools in Framwellgate and Gilesgate; Sunday-schools in connection with the various churches and chapels; and several private academies and boarding schools, the situation of which, with the names of the teachers, will be found in the Directory.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, INSTITUTIONS, SOCIETIES, ETC.

THE CASTLE.—This spacious and ancient structure is situated on the north side of the Palace Green, and is supposed to have been first built by William the Conqueror, who, in the year 1072, ordered a fortress to be erected here, to secure the governor of the province from tumult and insurrection, and also to protect the bishop and his church. On the erection of Framwellgate Bridge, the fortifications were continued from the keep along the brow of the hill, so as to command the passage. This part of the castle was destroyed by fire in the time of Bishop Pudsey, who rebuilt it about the year 1174. Several additions were made to the edifice in 1348, by Bishop Hatfield, who erected the great hall, and also the constable's hall; but the latter, which is described as having "two princely seats, one at each end," was altered by Bishop Fox, about the year 1494, and part of it converted into a kitchen, and stewards' apartments. A staircase tower and a new chapel were built by Bishop Tunstall. The fabric was repaired and enlarged in 1619, by Bishop Neile, at an expense of £3,000; and Charles I., when entertained here by Bishop Morton, expressed his approbation of the alterations. The castle was sold by the parliament to Thomas Andrews, lord mayor of London, May 2nd, 1649, for the sum of £1,267 Os. 10d., when it was miserably defaced. After the Restoration, Bishop Cosin placed it in a complete state of repair; and during the episcopacy of Bishop Crewe the chapel was enlarged, a portion of the tower rebuilt, and the structure adorned with new windows. Bishop Butler, in 1752, began to rebuild a great part of the north wall, and to insert several new gothic windows, which were finished by his successor, Bishop Trevor, who made considerable additions. Bishop Barrington, in 1791, rebuilt Tunstall's Gateway, and cleared the arch of Pudsey's great doorway from the numerous coats of white-wash which had from Tunstall's time downwards, concealed its splendid decorations. Several other improvements were effected during the latter part of Bishop Barrington's episcopacy; and his successors, Bishops Van Mildert and Maltby have continued the work of restoration.

The most ancient part of the castle is the keep, a lofty octagon of irregular sides, supposed by some to have been originally the work of William the Conqueror, but afterwards re-built by Bishop Hatfield. It occupies the summit of an artificial mount, forty-four feet high, and is supposed to be supported by crypt work beneath. Since the appropriation of the castle to the University, the keep has been admirably restored under the superintendence of Mr. Salvin. The rest of the building is a curious mixture of different and utterly incongruous styles; which, however, produce an effect perhaps more pleasing than a rigid adherence to any one would have done. The various styles, too, form an interesting guide to the chronology of the place. From the Norman chapel of the Conqueror—the more ornate Norman of Pudsey—the richly decorated style of Hatfield's magnificent hall—down to Cosin's Ionic columns and Italian screen work, all the changes in architectural taste may be distinctly traced. Hatfield's great hall, with its open roof of oak, is still a noble apartment; it is now used as the dining hall of University College. Its walls are adorned with the portraits of Bishop Van Mildert, the last count palatine, and other founders of the University. Adjacent to this hall, on the north side, and once forming part of it, is a parlour, which contains, amongst other interesting relics, two old paintings, representing the castle and cathedral as they were two centuries ago. From this parlour a door leads to the great staircase, by which we may proceed to the drawing room of the castle, and some of the state apartments. A door at the foot of this staircase gives access to a gallery, hung with some ancient tapestry, leading to the chapel, a building with few pretensions to architectural elegance, of the time of Bishop Tunstall. On the north side of this gallery is a richly ornamented Norman door-way, of the date of Pudsey, which had been long concealed by lath and plaster, but was restored to light under the auspices of Bishop Barrington. The most ancient portion of the castle is the Old Chapel, which may with certainty be assigned to the time of William I., and is an interesting specimen of the Norman style. It was long shut up, or used as a receptacle for fuel and lumber, but since it came into the possession of the University it has been treated with a little more respect. The castle is no longer the property of the bishop; and had not the University been founded when it was, this interesting relic of antiquity would have become the property of the ecclesiastical commissioners, "in which case," says a local writer, "it might, perchance, have been sold to some successful stock jobber, or millionaire, railway contractor; perchance have been converted into a mechanics' institute, museum, or a mustard manufactory."

THE TOWN HALL.—The old Town Hall, on the west side of the Market Place, was erected and given to the city by Bishop Tunstall, about the year 1555. It is not known whether there was a Common Hall prior to the building of this edifice; but there was a Toll Booth in the centre of the Market Place, where weights and measures were adjusted. In 1752 and 1754, the edifice was partly re-built and enlarged, and a new cupola added to the centre of the roof. This edifice, though suitable at the time of its erection, became at length too small for the increasing business of the city, and in 1849, the mayor, William Henderson, Esq., suggested the erection of a new Town Hall. This suggestion was favourably received by the inhabitants, who subscribed liberally to the proposed undertaking. A committee was at once formed for carrying the object into effect, and P. C. Hardwick, Esq., appointed architect. The new edifice was completed in January, 1851, and on the 29th of the same month, formally opened by the mayor, J. H. Forster, Esq., on the occasion of the annual civic banquet. The entrance is by a broad lobby, sixty feet in length, "whose subdued light," says a local writer, "happily prepares the stranger for the brilliant appearance which presents itself on the great doors being thrown open." "There are few persons," he adds, "who have not been taken by surprise at the view of the hall thus suddenly exhibited; and it is one of the great triumphs of an architect thus to impress the visitor of his works with a sudden burst of magnificence." The same writer continues, "the hall is of that kind of pointed architecture which time and experience have conceded to be the most appropriate for public rooms of great size; its length is seventy-two feet, breadth thirty-six, and height, to the ridge of the roof, fifty-six feet; the roof is open and similar in style, though of course much smaller in extent, to that of most of the open roofs of the middle ages. The effect produced by a contrast of bright colours, is strikingly exhibited in the shields borne on the breasts of angels, twelve in number, which form the termination of the hammer-beams. In addition to these, within the spandrels of the arched beams are quatrefoils enclosing shields, sixteen in number, on each side eight, on which are emblazoned the arms of sixteen of the incorporated companies. The four spandrels at the ends of the hall are, of course, only emblazoned on one side, and together with the shields on the breasts of the angels, complete the number of coats to which the incorporated companies are entitled. Brackets, four on each side, of ironwork, very gracefully executed, stand out from the walls about eight feet, immediately under the cornice. From these depend ornamented pipes conveying gas to four burners, disposed around corona, quatrefoil in form. Brackets, pipes, and corona, are painted, in blue, red, and gold. Besides these, there is a corona in the centre of the room, painted as the rest, and containing eighteen lights. The walls are panelled several feet high round the ceiling, and at the west end this panelling is made to support the arms of twenty families of note and degree in the county and city. Here are the coats of Shipperdson, of Durham; Wharton, of Dryburn; Wilkinson, of Durham; Shafto, of Whitworth; Russell, of Brancepeth; Backhouse, of Darlington; Clavering, of Greencroft; Musgrave, of West Auckland; Eden, of Beamish; Eden, of Windlestone; Standish, of Cocken; Dean Waddington; Archdeacon Thorp; Baker, of Elemore; The University of Durham; Salvin, of Croxdale; Fawcett, of Durham; Fenwick, of Durham; Surtees, of Mainsforth; Allan, of Blackwell. A number of other coats appear in carved oaken frames upon the walls, to which each year additions are made. At present there are placed there those of the Rev. G. T. Fox, of Durham; Francis Dixon Johnson, of Aykley Heads; Gustavus F. H. Russell, of Brancepeth (Viscount Boyne); John Pemberton, of Sherburn; Ralph Stephen Pemberton; Ralph Lindsay, of London; Rev. James Baker, of Nuneham; John Burrell, of Durham; Martin Dunn, of Durham; Henry Fenwick, M.P., of South Hill; T. C. Granger, of Durham; Rev. W. Nicholas Darnell, of Stanhope; J. R. Mowbray, M.P., of London; and W. Atherton, Q.C., M.P., of London. A series of smaller panels show the appointment of the several mayors and officers of the corporation since the passing of the Municipal Reform Bill; a panel being selected each year to commemorate the holder of the civic office. The following list gives the names of those already inserted :—

T. GREENWELL, mayor, 1st January, 1836.	R. H. ALLAN, mayor, 9th November, 1843.

The beautiful projecting fire-place is the leading feature of the room; the raised hearth is inlaid with encaustic tiles of good pattern; and the back and splay are similarly ornamented. The grate is, as a specimen of iron-work, entirely without a rival in this part of the country. The andirons are full of artistic merit, and will bear the most careful examination. The stone work is well designed, the lines entirely satisfy the most critical artist, whilst the beautiful tint of the Prudhoe stone adds to its grace and beauty. A Latin inscription as follows runs round the cornice: Hæc aula in publicos dicatur usus Gulielmo Henderson præfecto anno dom. MDCCCLIX pecunia contata. In panels on the side are the initials of two of the gentlemen who formed the building committee: Mr. Mark Story, Mr. J. H. Forster. A battlement surmounts the principal inscription. In the wall immediately above the fire-place, and forming its fitting termination, are the arms of Bishop Maltby impaled with those of the see, those of the city of Durham, and the initials of Mr. William Henderson. Upon the corbels supporting the roof of the hall, twelve in number, occur the initials of the twenty-four councillors and aldermen who sanctioned the erection of the building. These are cut on the stone in relief. This spacious hall is lighted from the north side, and from an oriel on the south, through which the sun streams pleasantly, making the room warm and cheerful, a quality in which these large apartments are usually deficient. There now only remains to describe the great west window: the effect of this at sunset is most striking; the upper portions of the tracery contain the arms and quarterings of R. Allan, Esq., of Blackwell; those of Mr. Shipperdson, of Durham; and those of Mr. Wharton, of Dryburn. The arms of the architect likewise appear in this position. The upper and lower side lights represent four Bishops of Durham, who were among the most eminent benefactors to the city, these are, Bishop Pudsey, who gave the first charter to the burgesses of Durham; Bishop Pilkington, who appointed an alderman to be elected yearly by the trades; Bishop Matthew, who gave a charter for a corporation, to be presided over by a mayor; Bishop Lord Crewe, who, besides recovering the charter after it had been taken away by James II., was the most munificent benefactor to the town, and the giver of the plate which is now displayed at the civic banquets. The three upper centre lights exhibit the ancient procession of the citizens to the Cathedral on Corpus Christi Day, with their tapers and trades' banners, so fully described by the author of the 'Rights and Monuments of Durham Abbey.' The three under lights are intended to show how the citizens of Durham so distinguished themselves by their loyalty and honesty as to call forth the public thanks of King Edward III.; and the moment for picturing this is, when surrounded by his barons, the sovereign is acknowledging the valuable services of the inhabitants. Besides the window there are on the left, against the west wall, the arms of the houses of Raby, Eldon, and Lambton, emblazoned very richly, and of large size; on the right are those of Wynyard, Ravensworth, and Scarborough. The hall is raised upon arches, and the space beneath and round it forms the New Markets." Public meetings on all matters connected with the borough are held in this magnificent hall; its use is also gratuitously afforded for all charitable, social, and festive assemblies. Adjoining the hall and connected with it are the Justices' Room and the City Police Station.

THE GAOL, COUNTY COURTS, &c., situate at the head of Old Elvet, were erected in 1809-11, from designs by Mr. Bonomi, at a cost of nearly £140,000. The buildings form a large quadrangle, on the north side of which is the court house, with the Crown and Nisi Prius Courts, besides numerous offices for the judge, jury, counsel, &c. The exterior is decorated in the centre with Tuscan pilasters, supporting a pediment; and on the top is a cupola and clock. The governor's house is an excellent building, and so contrived that the prison yards are under constant inspection. The buildings of the prison are separated into three divisions; the central and largest one containing the men's prison and house of correction, with the chapel attached. The internal regulations of the gaol and house of correction are conducted on the most humane principles consistent with a due regard to the safe custody and improvement of the inmates; and in conformity with the acts of parliament which prescribe the classification of prisoners, and the returns to be made periodically to the Secretary of State. The whole of the arrangements are also subject to the inspection of the visiting magistrates, and the grand jury make a thorough survey of the gaol at each spring and summer assize. The governor is appointed by the Bishop of Durham, and has a salary of £300 per annum. The magistrates appoint the chaplain, whose salary is £200 a year; he is not allowed to engage in any parochial duty, and is required to read divine service in the chapel twice, and to preach every Sunday, and on Christmas-day and Good Friday; to read prayers daily, and to attend prisoners under sentence of death, unless in such cases where prisoners, dissenting from the Church of England, desire to be attended by a minister of their own religion. A surgeon is appointed by the magistrates, with a yearly salary of £40, and an allowance for medicines at prime cost. Besides the schoolmaster, taskmaster, and matron, there are a turnkey, a porter, and other subordinate officers. Mr. W. Green, governor; Rev. Alan Greenwell, chaplain; George Shaw, surgeon.

DURHAM COUNTY INFIRMARY, a handsome stone edifice in the Elizabethan style, situated on the North Road, was erected in 1849-50, at a cost of £7,518. 14s. 10d., and possesses accommodation for forty-eight in-patients. It commands beautiful and extensive views of the city and neighbourhood, and is furnished with every modern appliance tending to promote the convalescence of the inmates. The building is surrounded with gardens; and an elegant terrace, the centre having an ornamental open parapet, adds much to its external appearance. We subjoin the following extracts from the last annual report of this praiseworthy institution, hoping that by thus giving them publicity, the usefulness of the establishment may be more appreciated:

"Annual subscribers of one guinea or upwards, or benefactors of ten pounds or more, at one time, are trustees, and have the direction of the affairs of the Infirmary. A committee of trustees attends monthly to examine the accounts and to superintend the conduct and expenses of the house.

"At the general meetings, held in February, 1851 and 1852, the privileges of the subscribers to this hospital were enlarged:—1. By entitling an annual subscriber of £2. 2s. to recommend five out-patients (four having been the previous number), and so on in proportion for larger subscriptions. 2. By entitling the possessor of three out-patient tickets to recommend an in-patient, four having been the previous proportion.

"The result of these changes has been a very considerable increase in the number of patients. In 1850 the number was as follows:—In-patients, 139; out-patients, 514. Total, 653. In 1853 the number was as follows:—In-patients, 184; out-patients, 744. Total, 928.—Thus it appears, that in the course of three years, the benefits conferred by this institution have increased in the proportion of thirty-two per cent in the in-patients, and forty-five per cent in the out-patients.

"Meanwhile the funds have not received any material augmentation; yet, by careful management, they have been found sufficient to meet the increased expenses. Inasmuch that the committee have thought themselves justified in endeavouring to extend still farther the usefulness of this hospital; they therefore proposed, and the general meeting have adopted, the following resolution:—'For the year 1854, and longer, should the funds of the institution permit, two out-patients' tickets shall be sufficient for the admission of one in-patient—instead of three, as is the present rule.' Consequently, the privileges of the subscribers stand for the present year as follows:—Every subscriber of £1. 1s. per annum may recommend two out-patients, or one in-patient. Every subscriber of £2. 2s. per annum may recommend five out-patients, or two in-patients and one out-patient, or one in-patient and three out-patients, and so on in proportion for larger subscriptions.

"Whether these additional privileges and advantages shall be permanent or not, must depend, of course, entirely on the support which the institution shall continue to receive, and which ought to be somewhat augmented. Townships, parishes, bodies corporate, societies, or companies, subscribing to the charity, obtain the following privileges, viz.:—For a benefaction of ten pounds, they have the same privileges during the period of ten years (exclusive of the year of subscription) as a benefactor of ten pounds; and for a subscription of any smaller sum, they have the same right as a private subscriber to the same amount, and may nominate a person to exercise those rights. By the eleventh rule it is provided that, at all elections of officers, no subscriber whose subscription is in arrear shall vote. Ladies are allowed to vote by proxy appointed in writing. Of other subscribers, those only shall vote who attend in person.

"Sudden accidents or diseases which require the immediate help of a surgeon, are received at any hour of the day or night without recommendation. But such patients cannot be retained upon the list of the institution (if, according to the opinion of the medical attendant, they are removable to their own homes), unless the parties sending them are subscribers, or pay the sum of 10s. 6d. for every such out-patient, and two guineas for every such in-patient. Patients of other descriptions cannot be admitted unless they bring a recommendatory letter, which may be thus expressed, but which must be signed by a subscriber."

OFFICERS OF THE INSTITUTION.—President: the Very Rev. the Dean of Durham. Committee: the President, the Ven. Archdeacon Thorp, Mr. Wharton, Mr. A. Wilkinson, Mr. Elliot, Mr. A. W. Hutchinson, the Rev. J. Cundill, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. William Henderson, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Brooksbank, the Rev. H. Douglas, the Rev. E. H. Hopper. Physicians: John Trotter, M.D., and T. L. Watkin, M.D. Surgeons: Mr. Green and Mr. Shaw. House Surgeon: Mr. Robert Webster. Matron: Miss Caroline M. Taylor. Secretary and Treasurer: Mr. Francis Greenwell.

LYING-IN CHARITY.—This establishment for the relief, at their own homes, of poor married women, was commenced many years ago, and is supported by the contributions of the ladies of Durham. About one hundred and fifty women now annually receive the benefits of this admirable charity. Its affairs are managed by a committee of ladies resident in the city, who have three matrons engaged, to whom is paid an annual salary of six guineas each, the medical gentlemen giving their attendance gratuitously. Besides the subscriptions, the committee receive annually £8. 5s., being the dividend upon £275 stock, three-per-cent consols, appropriated for the purposes of this charity. Mrs. Tristram, treasurer and secretary.

THE DURHAM COUNTY PENITENTIARY, a neat stone building, favourably situated in Gilesgate, was erected by subscription in 1852. It was opened in August of the same year by the reception of two inmates, and the chaplain entered on his duties, being licensed by the bishop of the diocese; the domestic chapel having also been licensed for the celebration of divine service. After seven inmates had been admitted, an assistant matron was appointed, and a laundry opened as a means of remunerative employment. The inmates previously had been employed in making clothing and household furniture for the establishment. Thirty-nine inmates have been fully admitted to the institution since its establishment. Of these, thirteen are now in the house; thirteen, who have left, are living respectably; the condition of two is unknown; whilst eleven are ascertained to be now leading a sinful life. Nine, however, of these eleven, remained only for a short time in the establishment.

OFFICERS OF THE INSTITUTION.—Governors: Mr. Johnson, Aykley Heads, Chairman; Rev. Dr. Gilly, Mr. Stobart, Etherley; Rev. T. Chevallier, Rev. G. T. Fox, Rev. H. Douglas, Rev. E. H. Hopper, Rev. A. Greenwell, Mr. William Henderson, Mr. J. C. Backhouse, Hon. Geo. Liddell, Rev. Jas. Carr, South Shields; Rev. J. J. Cundill, ex-officio. Secretary: Mr. John Howison, Durham. Treasurer: Mr. Thomas Greenwell, Old Elvet, Durham. Local Treasurers: Mr. G. Hodgson, Sunderland; Rev. Jas. Carr, South Shields; Mr. J. C. Backhouse, Darlington; Mr. Jas. Clephan, Gateshead. Trustees: Mr. W. L. Wharton, Mr. J. F. Elliott, Mr. William Henderson. Auditors: Mr. Green, Rev. G. T. Fox. Chaplain: Rev. Edward Prest, M.A. Hon. Surgeon: Mr. Jepson. Matron: Mrs. Wilson. Assistant Matron: Mrs. Hobson.

RELIGIOUS AND MORAL SOCIETIES.—Amongst the religious and moral societies of Durham we may mention the AUXILIARY TO THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY, which is supported by Dissenters, and annually makes a remittance to the parent society; the CHURCH MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION, which has been established upwards of a quarter of a century; the CLERICAL INSURANCE FUND, established in 1810, by private benefactions and subscriptions, which has for its object the insurance of the lives of incumbents and curates, and now possessing a fund of about £10,000; the DIOCESAN SCHOOL SOCIETY, established in 1809, for the encouragement of parochial schools in the diocese of Durham; it is under the patronage of the bishop, and the superintendence of the parochial clergy; the DIOCESAN SOCIETY FOR THE PROMOTION OF CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE; the DURHAM AUXILIARY BIBLE SOCIETY; and the SOCIETY OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY.

DURHAM BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES.—This establishment is handsomely situated on the right bank of the river Wear, and close to Elvet; and was erected by the corporation in 1854-5, at a cost of £5,000. The structure is of hewn stone, in the Italian style, from a design by John A. Curry, Esq., and comprises two swimming baths, each fifty feet by twenty, beside twelve private baths. There are also twelve washing stalls fitted up with every requisite convenience.

THE DURHAM POOR LAW UNION embraces an area of sixty-five square miles, and comprehends the following parishes and districts, which contained, in 1851, a population of 35,877 souls:—Bailey (North), Bailey (South), Brancepeth, Brandon, Broom, Cassop, College, Coxhoe, Crossgate, Elvet, Framwellgate, Hett, Kimblesworth, Pittington, Quarrington, St. Giles, St. Nicholas, Shadforth, Sherburn House, Shincliffe, Stockley, Sunderland Bridge, Tudhoe, Whitwell House, and Willington. The receipts from the poor rates during the year ending 25th March, 1855, amounted to £6,043 15s. 9½d., and the cost of maintenance for the same year was £195 17s. 8½d.; the out-relief amounted to £1,811 4s. 4d. Total receipt for union, exclusive of balances, £5,806 0s. 6d.; total expenditure, exclusive of balances £5,482 3s. 10½d. George Smith, clerk to the guardians.

THE UNION WORKHOUSE occupies an agreeable and pleasant situation in Crossgate. It is a plain stone building, erected in 1837, and contains ten rooms as sleeping apartments, a dining hall, which also serves as a chapel; a room for the meetings of the guardians, together with the other requisite offices, &c. It generally contains about 150 inmates, and the greatest order and cleanliness prevail throughout the entire establishment. Charles W. Buddle, master; Ann Buddle, matron.

FRAMWELLGATE BRIDGE.—This ancient structure, connecting the borough of Framwellgate with the city, was built by Bishop Flambard, about the year 1120, and is a very excellent piece of masonry. It has one pier, and two elliptic arches of ninety feet span, so flat as to be constructed on the quarter section of a circle, calculated to suit the low shores on each side. A large tower gateway, which stood at the city end of the bridge, was removed in 1760. The widening of this bridge is at present in contemplation.

ELVET BRIDGE, of eight arches, was erected by Bishop Pudsey, about the year 1170, and repaired by Bishop Fox, who granted an indulgence to all who contributed towards defraying the expense. It was improved by widening it to twice the breadth, in 1806. Upon, or near it, were formerly two chapels, dedicated respectively to St. James and St. Andrew. Two-thirds of this bridge are in the parish of St. Nicholas.

THE PREBEND'S BRIDGE is an elegant structure, erected between the years 1772 and 1777, at the expense of the dean and chapter. It crosses the river Wear opposite the extremity of the South Bailey, and consists of three semi-circular arches, with a balustrated battlement, designed by Nicholson, architect to the dean and chapter. The old bridge, which stood higher up the river, was carried away by a destructive flood, in November 1771, when the water rose eight feet ten inches higher than had ever been recorded in the annals of Durham.

PFLAW LEAZES BRIDGE.—The want of a communication between Elvet and Gilesgate has long been felt by the inhabitants of the city; and it is in contemplation to erect a new bridge close to the baths, for the accommodation of persons visiting them, as well as for the convenience of the inhabitants of Elvet and the south end of Durham.

THE DURHAM AND AUCKLAND BRANCH RAILWAY STATION is situated on the North Road. This line, the property of the North-Eastern Company, was commenced in August 1853, and is expected to be opened in September 1856. It possesses a double line of rails, and will be used for the conveyance of passengers and merchandise.

CITY OF DURHAM GAS COMPANY.—The city of Durham was first lighted with gas in the year 1824, through the enterprising spirit of Mr. West, who erected a gas works on the banks of the river, behind Framwellgate, in 1823. In 1845 a joint-stock company was projected, with a capital of £10,000, in 2,000 shares of £5 each; the project was favourably received by the public, and soon afterwards the promoters entered into an arrangement with Mr. West for the purchase of his establishment. The new company has supplied the town with gas since 1846, and its capital is now upwards of £11,500. There are about 180 street lamps in Durham, which are lighted by the company at £1 9s. 8d. for each lamp per annum; the charge to private consumers is on a scale according to quantity, varying from 8s. to 4s. per 1,000 cubic feet. Offices, 24, Market Place.

DURHAM WATER COMPANY.—The Water Works are situated on the road to Shincliffe, and close to Shincliffe Bridge, about a mile and a half from the city. The works belong to a private company, which was registered in 1847, and commenced supplying water in 1849. The capital, £14,000, with power to raise it to £20,000, is divided into shares of £5 each. The company is not incorporated, and the liability of its proprietary is unlimited. The water is pumped from the Wear into filtering beds, and thence flows into a tank from which it is forced by a steam-engine into the service reservoir, capable of containing about 500,000 gallons. From this reservoir it is conveyed through pipes to the city and neighbouring villages, Belmont Railway Station, Shincliffe Colliery, &c. During 1854, the works were enlarged, a storehouse added, and the property protected on the river side by a fence wall; the cost of these improvements was about £380. The company convey the service pipes to the outer wall of each house; the interior fittings are at the cost of the consumer. The supply of water is constant, so that no tanks or cisterns are required except by those who are supplied by quantity. We subjoin the scale of quarterly charges for domestic purposes.

THE SURTEES SOCIETY was established in 1834, by a number of the friends of the late Robert Surtees, Esq., the historian of Durham; and has for its object "the publication of such inedited manuscripts as illustrate the intellectual, the moral, the religious, and the social condition of those parts of England and Scotland, included on the east between the Humber and the Frith of Forth, and on the west between the Mersey and the Clyde, from the earliest period to the time of the Restoration." A committee was appointed at the general meeting held on the 7th February, 1849, to revise the rules of the society. The report of the committee was received at a general meeting held on the 31st May, of the same year, and it was agreed that there should be a patron of the society, and that the Lord Bishop of Durham should be the first patron; that the warden of the University of Durham, for the time being, shall be president of the society; that there shall be twenty-four vice-presidents, of whom four shall be such of the professors, tutor, or fellows, of the University of Durham as shall be members of the society; that there shall also be a secretary and two treasurers; that these officers shall form the council, any five of whom, including the secretary and treasurers, shall be a quorum, competent to transact the business of the society; that the subscription of each member shall be reduced to one guinea annually; that an octavo volume at least, shall be supplied to each member every year free of expense; and that the armorial bearings of the University of Durham, in conjunction with the armorial bearings of Mr. Surtees, shall be used in each publication.

BISHOP COSIN'S LIBRARY.—This library, which occupies an ancient stone building on Palace Green, was founded by the prelate whose name it bears, in 1660, "for the common benefit of the clergy, and others that should resort thereto." The library contains a large and valuable collection of printed books, chiefly in theology, and a few manuscripts. Several additions were made to the collection by Bishop Barrington, who also substantially repaired the library buildings. The public lectures of the university and the meetings of convocation are held in this edifice.

DURHAM MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.—This institution, situated in Gilesgate, has been recently erected at a cost of £760, and contains the usual departments of such an establishment. The newsroom is well supplied with the various metropolitan and local journals and periodicals; and the library contains an extensive collection of works in the various departments of the arts and sciences, many of which have been presented to the institution by J. R. Fenwick, Esq. and G. E. Shipperdson, Esq. Patron, Mr. J. R. Fenwick; president, Mr. Alderman Bramwell; vice-presidents, H. J. Spearman, W. L. Wharton, Mr. A. W. Hutchinson, Rev. W. S. Gilly, D.D., Mr. John Fawcett, Mr. Henry Stapylton, Mr. John Ward, Mr. A. Wilkinson, and Mr. J. F. Elliott; treasurer, Mr. T. Hopper; secretary, Mr. W. Hutchinson; librarians, Mr. George Sewell and Mr. John Usher.

DURHAM ATHENÆUM.—This institution, situated in the Market Place, was founded in 1818, and possesses a handsome newsroom, where a number of daily and weekly papers, as well as the leading reviews and magazines, may be found. Electric telegraph despatches, containing the latest news, are received twice a day. There is a well-selected library, and classes have been formed for the study of various branches of knowledge. Lectures are also given during the winter season. Patron, the Lord Bishop of Durham; president, Mr. W. L. Wharton; vice-presidents, the Rev. Dr. Townsend, the Rev. Temple Chevallier, B.D., Mr. J. F. W. Johnston, F.R.S.; treasurer, Mr. T. B. Rule; hon. secretary, Mr. Bonomi; acting-secretary, Mr. W. R. Fitzgerald.

SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY AND NEWS ROOM.—This institution was established in 1802, in a building erected for the purpose on the site of the old gaol, Sadler-street ; the library contains about 5,000 volumes in history, philosophy, and science. There are ninety members, who pay each an annual subscription of one guinea. The Subscription News Room is held in a portion of the same building, and is confined exclusively to gentlemen and members of the learned professions. There are forty members—subscription, one guinea per annum.

NEWSPAPERS.—Durham possesses two newspapers, the "Durham Advertiser," and the "Durham Chronicle," both of which appear every Friday morning. The "Advertiser" was commenced by Mr. Francis Humble, in September, 1814, and at the time of its first publication was the only newspaper published between York and Newcastle. In politics it is what is called liberal conservative. Shortly after the decease of Mr. Humble, the "Advertiser" became the property of the Messrs. Duncan, the present proprietors. The "Durham Chronicle" was established by Mr. John Ambrose Williams, in January, 1820, under the auspices of John George Lambton, Esq., M.P., afterwards Earl of Durham. It was subsequently carried on by Mr. John H. Veitch, and is now printed for the proprietor, by Mr. W. L. Robertson. This paper is liberal in politics, and very ably conducted.

THE DURHAM COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY has been in existence many years, and was originally established for the purpose of exciting emulation in the breed of horses, cattle, &c., and to encourage improved methods of cultivation.

BANKS.—THE NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM DISTRICT BANKING COMPANY have a branch office in this city ; the head office being in Grey-street, Newcastle. It is a joint-stock banking company, with a paid-up capital of £800,000, divided into shares of £10 each. This company issue the notes of the Bank of England, and draw upon Messrs. Barclay & Co. and Messrs. Glyn & Co., London. Messrs. BACKHOUSE & Co.—This firm has carried on business in the city of Durham for about forty years, and issue their own notes, which, by Peel's Act, are limited to £86,212. The establishment has long had the entire confidence of the public, and is much resorted to by depositors throughout the district. The head office is at Darlington, where it was established in 1774. The SAVINGS BANK is held in the Town Hall, and is open every Saturday afternoon, from two to three o'clock.

FREEMASONS' HALL.—This building, situated in Old Elvet, was built by subscription fifty years ago, and dedicated on the 9th May, 1811 ; donations of ten pounds or more rendering the givers free for life. This lodge, called the "Marquis of Granby Lodge" and numbered 146, is very prosperous, and numbers about eighty members, comprising many of the principal gentlemen in the city of Durham. Meetings held on the first Tuesday in each month. There is also a chapter attached to this lodge, called the "Chapter of Concord." Meetings last Tuesday in the months of January, March, September, and November. Present constitution of the lodge dated 19th September, 1763, in which year the lodge met at the sign of the Marquis of Granby. This lodge has borne the numbers 304, 245, 195, 166, and 204. In 1739, the lodge met at the Bird and Bush ; 1745, at Clement Schaffs, Framwellgate (then a principal street) ; 1746, at the Shoulder of Mutton. 1747, at the Fox. 1763, at the Marquis of Granby, Castle, private room at T. Richaby's. The foundation stone of a new lodge was laid on 2nd of February, 1741, of which no further notice appears. 1745 : in this year a Swiss regiment was quartered at Durham, commanded by General Hertzell, when Solomon Hertzell, his son, and several other officers of the regiment were made masons. 1763, September 19th : The lodge was constituted by Dr. Nicholas, Master of the Marquis of Carnarvon Lodge, in Sunderland. 1772, August 17th: The brethren of this lodge laid the foundation stone of the present noble bridge over the river Wear, built by the dean and chapter of Durham and called the Prebend's Bridge. 1786: William Henry Lambton, Esq., raised to the degree of Master Mason. 1788, September 2nd: R. J. Lambton, Esq., made a Mason; and in this year his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland appointed William Henry Lambton, Esq., M.P., Provincial Grand Master for the province of Durham, who was duly installed into that office on the 9th September of that year, being the first G.M. of this province. In 1789, 5th August, Jno. Tempest and Ralph Milbanke, Esqrs, made Masons. 6th July, 1790: the brethren laid the foundation stone of a new theatre. 1801, November 3rd: Sir H. V. Tempest made a Mason. At the head of the lodges in the province, the P.G.M. assisted in laying the foundation stone of the splendid iron bridge over the river Wear, 24th September, 1793; the honour of laying the stone being conceded to Rowland Burdon, Esq., M.P., the projector. Mr. Lambton was succeeded by Sir Ralph Milbanke, Bart., M.P. for the county in 1799, and during the presidency of that nobleman (July 29th, 1809), the foundation stone of the County Courts was laid by Sir H. V. Tempest, Bart., M.P., appointed P.G.M. pro. tem., on the 3rd July, 1809, at the head of the Provincial Lodge, attended by the bishop (Barrington) of the diocese, the magistrates, clergy, and gentry of the county. The procession moved from the Granby Lodge. On retiring from the representation of this county, Sir Ralph Milbanke resigned the office of P.G.M., his successor being Jno. Geo. Lambton, Esq., M.P. for the county (afterwards Earl of Durham), who was installed 27th July, 1818, and under his benignant rule, Freemasonry has flourished in numbers and increased in honour. He presented a splendid and complete suite of furniture and jewels to the Provincial Grand Lodge, which are still used by the lodge; he also established a provincial fund, and drew up with great care a code of rules and regulations for the management of the same, which have been acted upon with great success and with signal advantage for the benefit of the less fortunate brethren. On the 28th October, 1814, Jno. Geo. Lambton, Esq. (afterwards Earl of Durham), made a Mason. On 30th August, 1822, his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, G.M. of the United Grand Lodge of England, visited Durham province, and was pleased to express his unqualified approbation of the state of Masonry in the province; and as an especial testimony of his favour, he granted permission to the P.G.M. to establish the Lambton Lodge, each member having the privilege to wear a medal in commemoration thereof. On the 2nd September, 1822, the Provincial Lodge attended his royal highness to Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in the province of Northumberland, to assist in laying the foundation stone of the Literary and Philosophical Society. In 1834: the P.G.M., with a munificent hospitality (perhaps without a precedent in the annals of Masonry) invited the whole fraternity of this province to dinner at Lambton Castle, where they were received with that urbanity and fraternal kindness by which he was so eminently distinguished. The brethren eagerly availed themselves of this festive occasion to present their P.G.M. with a splendid Masonic jewel.* In the same year the Earl of Durham was appointed D.G.

* This splendid Masonic jewel is oval shaped, bordered with flowers in various tints of gold of exquisite workmanship, and in the centre, on a blue enamel ground, is placed the square and compasses, with a star of five points in brilliants. The design is chaste and elegant, and it bears the following inscription:—"Presented to the Earl of Durham, P.G.M., by his grateful brethren. 21st January, 1834."

Master of England (30th April), which important appointment he resigned on being appointed ambassador to the court of Russia. Sir Cuthbert Sharp, Bart., was the successor of the Earl of Durham as P.G.M., and on his relinquishing the office, it was conferred on John Fawcett, Esq., of the city of Durham, then high sheriff for the county, who still retains it. In the month of March, 1849, at the head of the lodges in the province, the P.G.M. laid the foundation stone of the new building of the Mechanics' Institute in the city of Durham.

THE THEATRE is a commodious building, situated in Sadler-street. The foundation stone was laid on July 6th, 1791, and the theatre opened for public performance in the following March, under the management of Mr. Cawdell. He was succeeded by Stephen Kemble, Esq., Messrs. Anderson and Faulkner, Mr. Bland, Mr. Mitchell, Messrs. Beverley and Roxby, and Mr. J. W. Benson.

THE RACE COURSE adjoins the suburb of Old Elvet, and commands picturesque views of the surrounding country. The races take place about the first week in May.

MARKETS, TRADE, FAIRS, &c.—THE NEW MARKETS.—The erection of this desirable accommodation was proposed to the inhabitants of Durham in 1832, and, after lying dormant for twelve years, the scheme was again revived in 1851, when, under the guidance of W. L. Wharton, Esq., of Dryburn, an act of parliament was obtained, and a body of shareholders incorporated, with a capital of £12,000. The site of the new markets comprises an area of 2,191 square yards, and the buildings are, in point of construction, somewhat after the manner of a railway station, being lighted and ventilated from the roof and sides; the height of the wall, at the lower portion of the Back Lane, is sixty-six feet, and this great elevation has necessarily occasioned the walls to be of immense thickness. The principal portion of the ground occupied by the New Market Buildings was formerly the site of the palace and gardens of the Neville family; the former stood at the extreme north-west corner of the Market Square, and was an object of great interest to antiquarians until its demolition in 1861, being erected in the style of architecture prevalent in the 15th century. The formation of the New Markets beneath and around the Town Hall has led to the improvement of much of the frontage on that side of the Market Place. The market day is Saturday.

The general trade of the city is chiefly of a local character, though two or three manufactories are carried on to a considerable extent. The carpet establishment of Messrs. Henderson & Co., enjoys a very high reputation, and affords employment to about 400 persons. There are two carriage building establishments in Elvet, one the property of Mr. Cairns, the other that of Messrs. Hodgson & Co.; cabinet makers and upholsterers, are amongst the trades pursued in the city, and curriers are described as doing a somewhat extensive business.

There are six fairs held at Durham during the year, for the sale of horned cattle, sheep, and horses, at the following periods:—March 31st; Tuesday in Easter week; Saturday before May 13th; September 15th; Saturday before Martinmas Day, November 11th; and Saturday before November 23rd.

INCORPORATED COMPANIES.—Durham formerly possessed sixteen incorporated companies, but that of the dyers having become extinct, the number at present is fifteen. The election of town councillors was restricted to thirteen of these companies until the passing of the Municipal Reform Act. The ordinances of the various companies differ but little in form and substance; and we may form a tolerably correct idea of what they were from the agreement of the Weavers' Company, the preamble of which is to the following effect:—"In the worship of God, and the sustentac'on of the procession, and the play on Corpus Christi Day, in the city of Durham, after the old custom, for the wele, profit, and right of all the king's people, it is ordained and assented by all them that occupy the weaver craft, in the said city of Durham, &c., that they meet yearly and choose two wardens and two searchers; that they may make procession on Corpus Christi Day; and to play and go to play, the play that of old times 'louges to yaire craft,' penalty 6d. To obey the ordinances stipulated by the wardens, under the penalty of 4d. That none shall set up and exercise his trade till his looms and his proficiency in the trade be certified by the wardens, under the penalty of 6s. 8d. No Scotchman to be taken apprentice, penalty of 6s. 8d. No one to weave till he has taken oath before the bishop's officer, to be trewe, and trewely to occupy and use his craft to the profet of the co'mon people, and no dissaite to use in his craft, and trewely on his party to fulfill his ordonance on pain of xxs. Imprisonment on refusing to take the oath. Also, that no man shall go into the said city, to desire no other men's customers or werk from him; penalty 3s. 4d. to the bishop, and 3s. 4d. to the craft."—Rudd's MSS. The companies are weavers; cordwainers; barbers; skimmers and gloves; butchers; goldsmiths; drapers and tailors; mercers, grocers, haberdashers, and ironmongers; salters; carpenters and joiners; fullers and feltmakers; curriers and chandlers; masons; smiths; saddlers and upholsterers; bakers and tanners, and dyers and listers.

CORPORATION, &c.—Durham was in ancient times governed by a bailiff nominated by the bishops, but of its ancient privileges as a borough history is silent. Bishop Pudsey granted to the burgesses a charter, by which the inhabitants were for ever freed from in-toll and out-toll for all their merchandise; they were also exempted from heriots and other burdens. The city continued under the government of a bailiff from the time of Bishop Pudsey until after the Reformation, when Bishop Pilkington granted a charter bearing date January 30th, 1565, whereby he ordained that the city of Durham and Framwellgate should be united, and should be governed by an alderman and twenty-four assistant burgesses, who were empowered to publish laws, statutes, and ordinances for the common benefit; to sue and be sued, and to have a common seal, &c. The city was governed by this charter till 1602, when a more ample one was granted by Bishop Matthew, by which the burgesses and inhabitants were constituted a body politic and corporate, consisting of a mayor, twelve aldermen and commonalty, with divers privileges, liberties, and free customs, with powers to make laws and regulations far the better government of the city. Under this charter the corporation thus constituted continued to exercise their power till 1678, when, in consequence of various disputes arising in the corporate body, the requisite numbers could not be obtained to carry into effect the several powers of the charter, which, in this manner, became obsolete, and the city was again placed under the government of bailiffs. This state of things continued until October 1780, when a new charter was granted by Bishop Egerton. This instrument remedied the defects of the previous charters, and confirmed the power and privileges of the corporation and citizens. The city continued to be governed by this charter till the passing of the Municipal Reform Bill, by whose provisions the municipal borough is divided into three wards, termed respectively North Ward, South Ward, and St. Nicholas' Ward, for each of which six councillors are elected. The revenues of the corporation are rather limited; they are derived from the market tolls held by lease under the bishop. The revenue from this source is about £225 per annum. Their jurisdiction includes the extra-parochial districts of the Castle Precincts, the University, and St. Mary Magdalen; the parishes of St. Mary in the South Bailey, St. Mary-le-Bow, St. Nicholas, and St. Giles; and parts of the parishes of St. Oswald and St. Margaret, or Crossgate, of which the latter includes part of the township of Framwellgate, and is itself an ancient chapelry in St. Oswald's parish. For corporation of the city see the end of this work.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT.—Durham was not represented in parliament till the time of the Commonwealth, a circumstance which may undoubtedly be ascribed to the vast power and influence of the bishop, in ancient times, when returning members to parliament was considered as grievous and inconvenient rather than useful or honourable. In the last parliament of the Commonwealth neither the city nor county was represented; but, after the Restoration, efforts were made to procure an act to enable both to send members, which, though strenuously opposed by Bishop Cosin, was at length carried in 1673; and since that time the city has returned two members to parliament. The mayor is the returning officer. Members for the city, William Atherton, Esq., Q.C.; John Robert Mowbray, Esq.

THE COURTS OF DURHAM.

As we have elsewhere described the buildings in which the various courts are held, we purpose in this section to notice the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical and other courts, the proceedings in some of which are peculiar to Durham.

ECCLÉSIASTICAL COURTS.—The ecclesiastical laws of this country have principally originated from the authority exercised by the Roman pontiffs in the different states of Europe during the middle ages, with the "constitutions" promulgated in this country at various periods by the papal legates, and decrees passed by the national councils of the English church, from 1237 to the reign of Henry VI.; and also the "canons" of the English Protestant Church, passed in convocation in 1603. The ecclesiastical laws, as now existing, have been for three centuries administered, in the principal courts, by a body of men associated, as a distinct profession, for the practice of the civil and canon laws. The ecclesiastical courts are the prerogative courts of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York in their respective provinces, and the consistory courts of the bishops in their respective dioceses. The PREROGATIVE COURT of the Archbishop of York has jurisdiction over all wills and administrations of personal property left by persons having bona notabilia, or effects of a certain value in the archdiocese of York, and has also concurrent jurisdiction in these matters with all the consistory courts in the province of York, including of course that of the see of Durham. If the deceased leaves bona notabilia in only one diocese his will may be proved either in the consistory court of such diocese, or in the prerogative court of the province, but should a party leave property in more than one diocese, then recourse must be had to the prerogative court only. The CONSISTORIAL COURT exercises jurisdiction throughout the diocese. The proceedings of the court are held in the Galilee of the Cathedral, and the documents connected with it are deposited in the register office, on the Palace Green. The causes which come within the jurisdiction of this court are of a civil and temporal nature; different parts of the county, at stated periods throughout the year, the officers of which are as follows :—Steward—Alexander Atherton Park, Esq. ; Deputy Steward and Clerk—Joseph Davison ; Steward of Howdenshire—Lord Howden ; Steward of Allertonshire—Earl of Harewood ; Steward of Bedlingtonshire—Alexander Atherton Park ; Deputy—Joseph Davison.

COURTS OF ASSIZE.—The Assizes for the county of Durham are held in the County Courts, head of Elvet, twice a year, generally about the last week in February and the first week in August. The business is, as a matter of course, confined to the civil and criminal affairs of the city and county.

QUARTER SESSIONS.—The Durham General Quarter Sessions are held in the County Courts, on the Monday in each week appointed by the statute, viz. : the first week after Epiphany, the first week after the close of Easter, the first whole week after the feast of St. Thomas a'Becket (Midsummer), and the first whole week after the 11th October (Michaelmas) ; and inquire into "all manner of felonies, poisonings, sorceries, trespasses," &c. The general business connected with the county relates to bridges, prisons, rates, &c.

NEW COUNTY COURT.—The proceedings of this court are held once a month in a portion of the buildings of the County Courts, Elvet. Actions can be brought in this court for the recovery of debts not exceeding £50 ; and the practice and jurisdiction are the same as in other counties, and in accordance with the recent acts of parliament. The Durham County Court circuit embraces, besides the city, the following other towns in the county, viz. :—Barnard Castle, Bishop Auckland, Darlington, Hartlepool, Shotley Bridge, South Shields, Stockton, Sunderland, and Wolsingham. Gateshead is included in the Northumberland circuit. Judge—Henry Stapylton, Esq. ; Clerk—John Edwin Marshall ; High Bailiff—George Taylor ; Appraiser—William White.

THE DEAN AND CHAPTER.—By a foundation charter of Henry VIII., a dean and twelve prebendaries were instituted to the Cathedral Church of Durham, and they and their successors were incorporated under the title of "The Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Christ and Blessed Mary the Virgin," empowering them, under that denomination, to perform all legal acts, and to sue and be sued. By this charter, the dean and chapter were also invested with considerable powers, which were afterwards confirmed in the first and second years of the reign of Philip and Mary. The dean is the head ; and, in questions affecting the government of the church, his power and jurisdiction are supreme. Disputes among the prebendaries on any chapter matters are determined by the chapter, and must be submitted to without having recourse to common law.

OFFICERS.—Steward of the Manor Courts—William Grey. Registrar—William C. Chaytor. Deputy Treasurer—S. Rowlandson. Deputy Receiver—William Peele. Land Steward—T. Davison. Official to the Dean and Chapter—Charles Thorp, D.D. Deputy Registrar—John Burrell. Keeper of the Woods—John Forster. Clerk of the Works—Gibson Kyle.

CHARITIES.

BISHOP LANGLEY'S SCHOOLS AND BISHOP COSIN'S ALMSHOUSES.—These formerly occupied buildings situated on the east side of Palace Green ; but the tenements being required for the University, the almspeople have been removed to a new dwelling of appropriate character, recently erected at the head of Queen-street. The almshouse was founded in 1688, by Bishop Cosin, for the reception and perpetual maintenance of four poor men and four poor women, and was endowed by him with a rent-charge of £70 out of lands in Great Chilton. The almspeople are appointed by the bishop from the poor of Durham, except two, one of each sex, from the parish of Brancepeth. The persons appointed are never under fifty years of age, and receive £1 13s. 4d. each per quarter. They also receive eighteen shillings a year for coals, besides cloaks and gowns once in three years. In addition to these sums, they also receive £2 annually from Lord Crewe's trustees, and £3 a year each from Bishop Barrington's charities. The Song Schools, said to be founded by Cardinal Langley, were situated at each end of the old almshouses, and were endowed with £16 13s. 4d. per annum, out of the manor of Kaverdley, in Lancashire, and £2 a year each from the revenues of the bishopric. The school has long fallen into disuse, and its mastership become a sinecure.

BISHOP WOOD'S CHARITY.—Thomas Wood, bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, by will, November 11th, 1690, bequeathed a rent-charge of £20 per annum out of his lands and tenements in Egglecliffe, to be devoted to the release of prisoners in Durham Gaol for debts not exceeding £5 each. A considerable sum having accumulated in the hands of the trustees, it was invested in the three-per-cent consols, and the interest and annuity were applied to the release of prisoners, whose debts, exclusive of costs, did not exceed £20; the applications from £5 debtors being very rare. At the time of the charity commissioners' report, there was a balance of £128 7s. 7d. stock in the three-per-cent consols, and £72 5s. 4d. in the hands of the treasurer.

CRADOCK'S CHARITY.—Thomas Cradock, Esq., "long since deceased," bequeathed £500 to be lent, without interest, and to be employed in building a workhouse, and carrying on a woollen manufactory in the city of Durham. In respect of this legacy, there is now a sum of £401, which was lent out, in 1814, to the late Gilbert Henderson, for the purpose of carrying on his manufactory, and employing such poor of the county as were willing and fit to work. The charity commissioners add, "The manufactory carried on by the late Gilbert Henderson is now carried on by John Henderson, his son, who is under the same agreement."

DONOR UNKNOWN.—The yearly sum of £12 11s. 4d. (from which 1s. 4d. is deducted for a stamp, &c.) is paid by the receiver of the crown rents of the five northern counties to the mayor of the city of Durham. The payment is made soon after Michaelmas, and the amount is distributed, in sums of 1s. each, among poor men and women of Durham, according to the directions of the mayor, except 10s. which is given to the sergeants-at-mace for their trouble in the distribution.

FRANKELYN'S CHARITIES.—John Frankelcyn, by his will, bearing date 19th November, 1572, directed that £100 should be delivered to the corporation of Newcastle, to be lent by them to one or two honest young men, upon good security, at ten per cent interest. Part of this was directed to be given to the poor of Newcastle and Houghton-le-Spring, and the residue, which amounts to £3 8s. 8d. per annum, is received by the Mayor of Durham, who, in accordance with the expressed wishes of the donor, gives to the churchwardens of the parishes of St. Giles and St. Nicholas, 7s. 4d. each, and to the governor of the county gaol £2 12s. The two former are distributed, with the produce of other charities, to the poor of the respective parishes above named, and the remainder is divided by the governor of the gaol equally amongst all the prisoners, whether criminals or debtors.

HARTWELL'S CHARITIES.—William Hartwell, D.D., by his will, dated March

9th, 1724, devised his landed estate at Fishburn, producing a rental of £80 per annum, to be disposed of in the following manner, viz.:—£20 a year to the corporation of Durham, which was to be bestowed, in two sums of £10 each, upon two merchants or tradesmen of the Established Church that should have served out their time in the said city, and should want some assistance to commence business with. He further gave £20 per annum, to be divided into two exhibitions of £10 each, towards the maintenance of two scholars, to be sent to either of the universities out of the schools of Durham or Newcastle; such exhibition to continue for four years, with a year of grace to take a degree, if the trustees should think fit. He also gave £10 yearly for the relief of two ministers' poor widows in the communion of the Established Church, and whose husbands had either benefice or curacy in the diocese of Durham, £5 each, to be continued during their widowhood, and so long only as they should continue objects of charity. He further gave to the Gaol of Durham £20, to be disposed of under the same restrictions as the charity of the like kind left by Bishop Wood, and, in the application of it, respect should be first had to the parishioners of Stanhope. He also gave, towards the maintenance of a schoolmaster in the town of Stanhope, £6 yearly, with an additional £2 for the purchase of books. The charity commissioners state, that, at the time of their inquiry, the following payments were made by the treasurer, under the direction of the dean and chapter:—1. To two tradesmen, £15 each, on the production of a certificate, signed by the mayor and six aldermen, stating that they have chosen the person therein named. 2. To two scholars brought up at the school of Durham (none having been appointed from the school of Newcastle for many years), an exhibition of £15 each. 3. To two ministers' widows, appointed in like manner, an annuity for their lives of £15 each. 4. For the discharge of debtors in Durham Gaol, there is paid such sum as may be required, not exceeding £30 a year. 5. To the master of Hartwell School, in the parish of Stanhope, for his yearly stipend, and for the purchase of books, &c., the yearly sum of £12. (See Stanhope parish.)

KIRBY'S CHARITY.—John Kirby, by his will, left £30, to be paid to the alderman and wardens of the Merchants' Company in Durham, to be by them distributed amongst the poor of the said company. The amount of this legacy is invested in the three-per-cent consols, and the interest, 80s., is paid to the widow of a deceased member, there being no other poor belonging to the company to receive.

CHARITY OF KIRBY AND MESSENGER.—In the parliamentary returns of 1786, it is stated, under the head of St. Nicholas, that Messrs. Kirby and Messenger gave land for forty poor housekeepers not receiving relief, then vested in the mayor and two aldermen of Durham, and producing £2 2s. annual rent. A small garden, let at £4 4s. a year, is the only land supposed to belong to this charity. The rent is given away by the mayor to poor persons of the city and suburbs of Durham, in sums of 2s. each.

SMITH'S CHARITY.—Henry Smith, by his will, bearing date 20th July, 1598, being possessed of several coal mines and coal pits, "devised the same to the city of Durham; and thereby declared that he gave the same chiefly that some good trade might be devised for the setting of the youth and other idle persons to work, as should be most convenient, whereby some profit might arise to the benefit of the city, and relief of those who were past work, and had lived honestly upon their trades." This bequest was shortly afterwards employed in establishing a cloth manufactory, which appears to have been inefficiently conducted, and lands and tenements were subsequently purchased with the capital. The property belonging to the charity, at the time of the charity commissioners' report, consisted of the following particulars:—1. The premises called the New Place, in the parish of St. Nicholas, let to nine tenants at rents amounting to £82 10s. per annum, with about £5 10s. for a place to deposit the market stalls. 2. The copyhold premises in the barony of Evenwood, called Wide Hope Leazes, let at a rent of £220 per annum. 3. An allotment at West Auckland, having a rental of £6 a year. 4. The farm called Hager Leazes, in the township of Lynesack and Softley, let for £40 per annum. 5. A messuage or tenement, called "The City Tavern," in the parish of St. Nicholas, whose yearly rent is £48. 6. A small house in the North Bailey, let at £6 10s. per annum. 7. The governors are also possessed of a small estate, called Glake Hall, in the township of Witton Gilbert, let at £27 a year. 8. The only remaining property is the manufactory, situated in the Back Lane, let on a lease, in 1824, to Gilbert Henderson, at a yearly rent of £28 16s. The lessee, Gilbert Henderson, is dead, and the business is carried on by his son, John Henderson. The annual income from the rents above mentioned may be stated at £464 6s. per annum, out of which about £300 is distributed annually amongst the poor of the city and suburbs of Durham, in sums varying from 5s. to 20s. They are selected by the mayor and aldermen, and the sergeants-at-mace go from house to house with the money.

TEMPEST'S CHARITY.—This was a charity for the benefit of the debtors in Durham Gaol, bequeathed by Elizabeth Tempest, in 1785. Nothing has ever been received on its account.

WALL'S CHARITY.—William Wall, September 24th, 1679, amongst other legacies, bequeathed the yearly sum of 15s. to the prisoners in Durham Gaol, which, at the time of the charity commissioners' report, was paid by Mr. Thomas Beacock, of Bishop Auckland.

LORD CREWE'S CHARITY FOR APPRENTICING.—Amongst other charities, Lord Crewe directed that £100 a year should be paid to the mayor and aldermen of Durham, for putting out apprentices in the city and suburbs. In the year 1780, £1,014 17s. 6d. due for arrears, was invested in the three-per-cent consols, and, when the charity commissioners made their inquiry, it had increased to £1,880 2s. The dividends, amounting to £56 8s. per annum, and the yearly sum of £100 received from Lord Crewe's estates, are distributed in sums of £4 each, nominally as a premium to the master, but, in point of fact, £1 is paid thereout for a stamp, and the residue is generally paid over to the parents or friends who maintain the apprentice during the term.

PARISH OF ST. NICHOLAS.—Callaghan's Charity.—Francis Callaghan, by will, 7th February, 1675, bequeathed, out of the rent of certain shops which he possessed in the city of Durham, to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. Nicholas, the annual sum of 20s. at Christmas, to be by them distributed amongst the most needy persons of that parish; and to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. Giles, the like sum of 20s. at Christmas, to be by them distributed amongst the most needy persons of that parish; also, that there should be paid out of the rents of the said shops, to the vicar of the parish church of St. Nicholas, and his successors, 20s. yearly at Christmas; and also to the lecturer or preaching minister of St. Nicholas, £4 yearly at Pentecost, on condition that the said lecturer should preach a sermon yearly in the said church on the day on which the testator should happen to be buried there, and give notice thereof by causing the bells of the church to be rung as was usual in case of divine service; in recompense for which ringing, he directed there should be paid, out of the profits of the said shops, to the bell-ringers, 5s. yearly at Pentecost; and, in case the said lecturer should at any time neglect to preach, he directed that the said legacy of £1 should for ever cease, as if it had never been given. These payments are made in accordance with the regulations of the testator.

Cooper's Charity.—Thomas Cooper, by his will, dated 6th March, 1702, assigned a yearly rent-charge of £5 4s., to be paid half-yearly out of his lands at Fishburn, to the churchwardens of the parish of St. Nicholas, for the time being, to be by them laid out in bread, and distributed in the parish church every Sunday, 2s. weekly, amongst the poor people attending divine service there. Twelve twopenny loaves are distributed accordingly.

Hole House Farm.—This is a farm in the parish of Wolsingham, which is supposed to have been given for the purpose of providing, out of the rents thereof, for the repairs and ornaments of the parish church of St. Nicholas. It is not known at what period it was given; but it appears that the churchwardens have demised it from time to time, at least from the year 1699. It is now let by the churchwardens at a yearly rent of £20, which is carried to their general account.

Lost Charities.—John Sparke, 25th July, 1638, bequeathed the interest of £6; Anthony Fawell gave to the poor a rent-charge of 10s.; and — Hedley a rent-charge of £1. Nothing is now paid on account of these charities.

Surtees' Charity.—Robert Surtees, by his will, December 27th, 1617, gave out of his dwelling-house, in the Market Place in Durham, 6s. 8d. yearly to the poor of this parish. This bequest is still paid by the owner of the house to the churchwarden, who disposes of it according to his discretion.

Out Rents.—The churchwardens of this parish, as well as those of all the parishes in the suburbs of the city, are possessed of houses, shops, and small plots of land, the fines and rents from which are carried, under the name of out-rents, to the account of the respective churchwardens.

PARISH OF ST. GILES.—Finney's Charity.—Jane Finney, by her will, bearing date 14th November, 1728, devised a close, in or near Claypath, to trustees, to pay the profits thereof to the minister of this parish for the time being, to be by him distributed yearly among such poor people of the said parish not receiving alms, as he should think most proper objects of charity. She also gave a house, garth, and garden, for the support of the charity school of blue coat boys and girls in Durham. This last-mentioned property was sold in 1799, for £140, and the produce invested in the funds for the benefit of the said school. With respect to the close in Claypath, the trustees being long dead, a contract was made about the year 1810 by the Rev. Joseph Watkins, incumbent of the parish of St. Giles, for the sale thereof for £150 to John Hancock, upon condition that any heir of the trustees might, notwithstanding this contract, resume the property. The sum of £150, the consideration for this sale, was never paid, and the purchaser mortgaged the property, for 2,000 years, to Mr. Watkins, for the purpose of securing the principal with interest at five per cent. From the period of this transaction, the yearly sum of £7 10s. has been paid as the interest on the purchase money, and the lessee, or his representatives, have built on the land, treating it as their own property. As the incumbent had no authority to alienate the property, the charity commissioners recommended that steps should be taken for appointing new trustees, to whom the premises should be conveyed, and that, in consideration of the money which had been laid out in building thereon, a lease for forty years should be granted, at the yearly rent of £7 10s.

These proposals were acceded to. The yearly sum of £7 10s. which, according to the will of the donor, ought to have been distributed amongst poor persons not receiving parochial relief, has hitherto been applied in providing for the education of the poor children of the parish.

Smith's Charity.—Jane Smith, by her will, bearing date 14th July, 1785, bequeathed to John Tempest, Esq., £60, to be applied in such manner as he should think fit, for the benefit of the poor boys and girls of the charity school in Gilligate. In respect of this charity there is a sum of £75 three-per-cent consols; and the dividends, amounting to £2 5s. per annum, are received by the schoolmaster, who, for this sum, and £7 10s. derived from the charity of Jane Finney, instructs thirteen poor children of the parish.

PARISHES OF ST. MARY-LE-BOW AND ST. MARY-THE-LESS.—Hutchinson's Charity.—Barnabas Hutchinson, by will, bearing date 11th of December, 1633, charged his house with 20s. a-year for the poor of the North and South Bailey. Nothing has been paid on account of this charity since 1751, and as the property has been divided, and sold to different parties, it would be impossible to establish a claim legally against any one of such parties, without being furnished with evidence to show which was the house belonging to the donor, and in which he lived.

PARISH OF ST. OSWALD.—Cock's Charity.—The Rev. John Cock, by will, dated 27th May, 1701, bequeathed to trustees the sum of £600, to purchase lands and tenements, whose yearly rents should be paid to the ministers and churchwardens of this parish, for distribution in the following manner:—£2 10s. for Bibles, prayer books, the Whole Duty of Man, and some brief explanation of the creed; the same to be distributed among such poor inhabitants of the said parish as should not, by reason of their poverty, be well able to buy such books for themselves; £5 in physic and other necessaries for the sick poor, if required; £5 for clothes for poor widows, widowers, or housekeepers, and £5 in money; £4 for teaching and instructing the young daughters of the poor to read, spin, knit, and sew, and their sons to read, write, and cast accounts; £6 for setting out yearly one poor boy, of good character, who should be able to read, write, and cast accounts, and repeat the Church Catechism; and the surplus, if any, to be applied in furnishing some apprentice in the said parish with tools, and setting him up in business, the sum allowed not to exceed 40s. This legacy was applied to the purchase of a farm at Cockerton, in the parish of Darlington, for £660, which is let at a rent of £70 per annum. Since the land has been let at the present rent, the annual distribution has been generally as follows:—

Bibles, prayer books, and other religious books . . . . .	£ 6	0	0
Paid to a surgeon for attending poor persons . . . . .	10	0	0
For coats and gowns about Christmas, for ten old men and ten old women, two of whom are of the township of Shincliffe, and two of the township of Broom . . . . .	10	0	0
£2 is given to the churchwardens of Shincliffe, and £1 to the churchwarden of Broom, which they distribute to their respective poor, in sums varying from 1s. to 3s. . . . .	3	0	0
To a schoolmistress for instructing 12 girls on weekdays, and for keeping a girls' Sunday-school . . . . .	10	10	0
To a schoolmaster for instructing 24 poor boys on weekdays, and attending a Sunday-school . . . . .	21	10	0
For clothing two apprentices annually, £3 to each . . . . .	6	0	0
From the residue, £2 is given to each of two tradesmen, to set up his trade, and buy tools . . . . .	4	0	0
	£ 70	10	0

With respect to the sum directed to be distributed to poor widowers, &c., nothing has been given in money in the township of St. Oswald since 1816, when, in consequence of a loss sustained by the failure of a bank in Durham, the payment of £3 was suspended, and several other items of expenditure reduced; but £25 was received on the notes of that bank in 1826.

Dixon's Charity.—David Dixon, by will, gave to the overseers of the poor of this parish £50, the interest of which was to be distributed among the poor of the parish, numbering those of Shincliffe. This sum was lent, in 1757, on mortgage of a house in Gilesgate, held on lease of forty years from the dean and chapter. £2 10s. per annum was paid as the interest of this money up to 1824, but nothing has been paid since.

CHAPELRY OF ST. MARGARET.—Charities of Andrews and Simon.—The Rev. John Simon, in 1739, gave £12 12s.; and Catharine Andrews, in 1782, bequeathed £100, to the poor of this chapelry not receiving parochial relief. These sums, in 1784, were invested in the three-per-cent consols; and the dividends are divided into three parts, one of which is distributed by the curate to the poor of the chapelry generally, and the other two parts by each of the chapelwardens of Crossgate and Framwellgate, amongst the poor of their respective districts, in sums varying from 1s. to 2s 6d.

Donor unknown.—A rent charge of 20s. per annum is paid out of the Bowes' estate at Alwent, to the chapelwardens, who distribute it at Easter, in sums of 1s. each to the poor of the chapelry.

Hutchinson's Charity.—Alderman John Hutchinson, in 1702, bequeathed 52s. a year, issuing out of two houses in Framwellgate, to be distributed in bread, every Sunday, to twelve poor people attending divine service in the church. Small loaves are provided and given away in accordance with the intentions of the donor.

Surtees' Charity.—Robert Surtees, by will, dated December 27th, 1617, left a rent charge of 6s. 8d. a year to the poor of St. Margaret's chapelry, out of his lands at Northwark, near Stockwellheugh, but it has not been paid for the last half century.

White's Charity.—Ralph White, by will, 1799, bequeathed £10 to the poor of South-street. This sum is now vested in the chapelwardens, who pay 10s. at Easter annually to ten poor widows.

THE DIOCESE OF DURHAM.

The Christian religion, established in Northumbria by the preaching of Paulinus and the zeal of King Edwin, became almost eradicated after that monarch's death, and idolatry again prevailed until the reign of St. Oswald, who, as soon as he ascended the throne, sent to the Scots, among whom he had dwelt during the period of his exile, desiring they would send him a bishop by whose instruction and ministry his people might be taught the advantages of Christianity, and receive the sacraments. His request was at once complied with, and Aidan, a monk of Iona, was consecrated bishop and sent into Northumbria, to reconvert the inhabitants to the Christian faith. The king himself assisted the missionary in his apostolic labours, travelling with him through his kingdom and interpreting the holy bishop's discourses to the people, so that by the exertions of the bishop and king, Christianity was soon re-established in the country. Aidan received from the king the island of Lindisfarne, since called Holy Island, in which he built a monastery, from which all the churches from the Tyne to the Tweed, had their beginning, as had some of those of Deira, from the Tyne to the Humber. Lindisfarne was probably chosen by Aidan as a secure retreat from the ferocious and unconverted states by which he was surrounded, and also for its proximity to Bambrough, the royal residence, and principal fortress of the Northumbrian kingdom. Aidan died in 651, after an episcopacy of seventeen years.

FINAN, a Briton, and a member of the same community as Aidan, was the second bishop of Lindisfarne; and during his episcopacy, he had the happiness of baptising two royal converts, Peada, son of Penda, King of the Mercians, and Sigebert, King of Essex; both of whom returned to their respective dominions, accompanied by missionaries invested with episcopal powers. Finan erected a church after the Scottish manner in the island of Lindisfarne, the seat of his bishopric. This edifice was not constructed of stone, but of hewn oak, covered with reeds, and was dedicated to St. Peter. He died in 661, having held the see ten years, and was succeeded by COLMAN, of the same monastery, who resigned the see at the end of three years, having for his successor TUDA, who fell a victim to the plague in the year 664.

The fifth bishop of Lindisfarne was EATA, a "most meek and reverend man," who was succeeded by St. CUTHBERT. The latter, Bede tells us, "from his very childhood had always been inflamed with the desire of a religious life; but he took upon him the habit and name of a monk when he was a young man. He first entered the monastery of Melrose, then under the government of the Abbot Eata, who was afterwards Bishop of Lindisfarne." Cuthbert was subsequently made abbot of the Melrose Abbey, where he instructed many in a regular life, both by the authority of a master, and the example of his own behaviour. After remaining fourteen years at Melrose he was removed by Bishop Eata to Lindisfarne, where he remained for twelve years. But yearning after a closer communion with God, and desiring more time for meditation and prayer than the duties of his position in the monastery allowed, he retired with the permission of his superior, to the largest of the Farne Islands, opposite to Bambrough, where he led the life of an anchorite. He had a cell and a small oratory, both of which were enclosed with a wall so high, as to cut off his view from every sublunary object. He enjoyed this solitary life for nine years, when he heard with the deepest sorrow, that he had been unanimously elected by the synod of Twyford, to be bishop of the Church of Hexham. After much opposition on his part, he was induced by the prayers of the king, the archbishop, and the whole body of the clergy, to receive the episcopal consecration, but from his great predilection for Lindisfarne, he was allowed to exchange sees with Eata, who, for that reason, was translated to Hexham. Following the example of the apostles, he became an ornament to the episcopal dignity by his virtuous actions, for he both protected the people committed to his charge, by constant prayer, and excited them by most wholesome admonitions to heavenly practices. Previous to the episcopacy of St. Cuthbert, the northern churches had received but few endowments; but several munificent donations were afterwards made by the Northumbrian kings, nobles, and others. He received a grant of all the land from St. Peter's, at York, round to the south wall of the city, and also the village of Craike, where he founded a monastery. He was also invested with the city of Carlisle and the lands for fifteen miles around it. Here the pious bishop restored a decayed nunnery, and instituted a public school. But the value of these, and many other gifts received by the saint, were greatly enhanced by privileges and immunities subsequently annexed to them. Having spent two years in his bishopric, he returned to his island and monastery, where he died two months afterwards, in the thirty-ninth year of his monastic profession, A.D. 687. So highly was the memory of this saint revered in the north, that more than forty churches and chapels were dedicated in his honour; and King Alfred even had the saint's name stamped on the coin of the realm. Often did the name of St. Cuthbert rouse the men of the north to the defence of their country, and often did his banner lead them on to victory.

Shortly after the demise of St. Cuthbert, EADBERT was consecrated bishop. He erected the Cathedral of Lindisfarne, and, on the right side of the high altar, caused a beautiful tomb to be constructed, in which he deposited the remains of his sainted predecessor. Bede informs us that on the opening of the grave, eleven years after the saint's death, the body was found whole, as if it had been alive, and the joints pliable, more like one asleep than a dead person; besides, all the vestments the body had on were not only found, but wonderful for their freshness and gloss.

Eadbert died in 698, and was succeeded by EADFRID, a learned man, who made a translation of the Gospels into Latin; and under his patronage the Venerable Bede wrote the life of St. Cuthbert. He died in 724, and was succeeded by ETHELWOLD, abbot of Melrose. CIGNEWOLF, the next bishop, was consecrated in 740; but having incurred the displeasure of King Eadbert, in consequence of his refusal to give up to the monarch a criminal who had taken refuge in the church of Lindisfarne, he was kept a close prisoner at Bambrough for a considerable period. This bishop held the see for more than forty years, and died at the Farn hermitage in the year 781. HIGHBALD, his successor, occupied the episcopal throne for twenty-two years, during which period the church of Lindisfarne, and many other religious establishments in the north were plundered and desecrated by the pagan Danes, whose course, in 797, was marked by the mangled bodies of monks and priests, and nuns, whom they had violated and massacred. Highbald's immediate successors, EGBERT and HEATHERED, are scarcely mentioned in history; but EGERID, who became bishop in 830, is described as having contributed largely to the honour and opulence of the church, by bestowing upon it several manors which he possessed in various parts of the country. After holding the see for fifteen years, he died in 845, and was succeeded by EANBERT, who survived him ten years. EARDULPH, the sixteenth and last bishop of Lindisfarne, possessed the see at the time of the second Danish invasion, when they pillaged and destroyed Tynemouth Priory, and afterwards proceeded northwards, destroying and plundering almost every church and monastery in Northumberland. Before these barbarians could reach Lindisfarne, the bishop and monks had fled, taking with them the body of St. Cuthbert, with many other precious relics; and away they went, wandering through the country like the Israelites of old, not knowing where they might find rest. The Danes, on their arrival at Lindisfarne, being disappointed of their anticipated booty, immediately set fire to the sacred edifices, and thus an end was put for ever to the glories of Lindisfarne.

BISHOPS OF CHESTER-LE-STREET.—After wandering about for the period of seven years, the monks settled at Craike, in Yorkshire, where they remained till the re-establishment of peace, when they removed to Chester-le-Street, of which place Eardulph was the first bishop. Here Guthred, King of Northumberland, had built for them a church, and the see received from the gratitude of the sovereign, a larger territory and franchise than any yet conferred by former benefactors. Eardulph died in the year 900, after an episcopacy of forty-six years.

He was succeeded by CUTHEARD, who was studious to augment the possessions of the bishopric, with which view he purchased the manor of Sedgfield, and the district of Bedlingtonshire, which, though situated north of the Tyne, remained a portion of the county of Durham, till the year 1844, when it was united to Northumberland by the acts 7 & 8 Vic. c. 61. Cutheard died in 915, when TILRED succeeded to the bishopric, which he held till his demise in 928, when WIGRED became bishop. He possessed the see for sixteen years, and was succeeded by UCHTRED; at whose death, in 947, SEXHELM was raised to the episcopal throne. He had for his successor ALDRED, who enjoyed the see till 968, when ELFSIG became its bishop. The latter was succeeded by ALDUNE, the ninth and last bishop of Chester-le-Street. This prelate was raised to the episcopal dignity at a very critical period, for Northumberland was again plundered by the Danes, the city and castle of Bambrough were burned; and Aldune and his ecclesiastics determining to escape the storm by flight, deserted Chester-le-Street, and retired with the holy relics to the monastery of Ripon, which became their resting place for a few months, until the Danes had departed, when they set out on their return to their forsaken church. On their way they were intercepted by some invisible power at Wardenlaw, and it was only on the third day after a solemn fast and supplication, that St. Cuthbert, in a vision to a monk named Eadmer, commanded that their course should be directed towards Dunholme, the present Durham, where his church was in future to find a secure establishment. When the monks pitched their tent on the summit of the hill at Durham, there were a few cottages on its sides occupied by rustics employed in reducing its romantic neighbourhood into a state of cultivation. A temporary resting place for the remains of St. Cuthbert was the first object of the bishop and clergy; and Simeon of Durham informs us, that a small church made of the branches of trees, was the first to receive the treasure. A small stone structure was erected shortly afterwards for the same temporary purpose; and in the meantime were laid the foundations of a cathedral.

BISHOPS OF DURHAM. — Aldune now became the first bishop of Durham, where he died in 1018, after an episcopacy of twenty-eight years. During the time he held the see, he received the following donations for the augmentation of the bishopric: viz., Darlington, with its appendages, together with the lands in Coniscliffe, Cockerton, Houghton, Normanby, and Seaton.

The see was vacant for three years after Aldune's death, and EDMUND, a secular priest of noble birth, was promoted to the bishopric by accident. Casually entering the church whilst the chapter were hesitating in the choice of a successor to Aldune, he carelessly exclaimed, "why then cannot you make me bishop?" The inadvertent expression surprised the assembly, but recollecting that Edmund was a man of strict piety and virtue, they agreed in his election. Being convinced of their sincerity he reluctantly accepted the mitre, and was consecrated in the following year, 1020, by Wulstan, Archbishop of York, at Winchester. This prelate greatly augmented the possessions of the see, and during his episcopacy we find Canute, the Dane, making a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Cuthbert, as an atonement for the crimes of his countrymen. He died in 1041, and was succeeded by EADRED, a secular priest, who only held the bishopric one year.

EGELRIC, a monk of Peterborough, was the next bishop; and on his elevation to the see of Durham, he commenced the construction of several religious edifices. While removing the foundation of the old wooden church of Chester-le-Street, which he had intended to re-build with stone, he discovered a large treasure, which, appropriating to his own use, he transmitted to the Abbey of Peterborough, and soon afterwards retired thither himself. Being charged by the clergy of the church of Durham with embezzling the treasures of the bishopric, he was sent for to London, where he died in confinement.

EGELWIN, the brother of Egelric, was inducted to the bishopric on the removal of the last bishop, and during his prelacy, the clergy of Durham, anxious to elude the vengeance of the Conqueror, who marched a powerful army to the north, in order to revenge the massacre of the Norman soldiery which had taken place in the city of Durham, fled, taking with them the body of St. Cuthbert, and the other holy relics, with which they retired to Lindisfarne, where they remained till peace was established. Egelwin resigned the see in 1072, after an episcopacy of fifteen years.

WALCHER, a noble native of Lorraine, succeeded to the bishopric, after it had been vacant about a year. This prelate was distinguished by sanctity and learning, and received from the Conqueror the dignity of Earl of Northumberland, and is supposed to have been the first bishop who exercised the palatine jurisdiction in the county of Durham, where he extended his authority, not only to his own demesnes, but likewise to the manors of all other men. During his episcopacy, Aldwin, a Mercian monk, with two associates, determined to visit the ruined kingdom of Northumbria, the ancient home of piety and learning. The wanderers first settled at Monkchester, now Newcastle; but Walcher, bishop of Durham, persuaded the distinguished strangers to remove under his jurisdiction, and assigned the sacred spot of Jarrow for a residence, the whole of which is represented at this time as being in ruins, but the new possessors contrived to place a rude roof of logs and straw thatch upon the naked walls, and raise for themselves a few huts under the shelter of the building. Here their exemplary austerity, abstinence, patience, and self-denial, attracted a vast influx of persons of all ranks; and the delighted bishop gave them in frank possession several manors in the county. Waltheof, Earl of Northumberland, gave them also the church at Tynemouth, with all its lands and possessions, together with the body of St. Oswin. The house of Jarrow being thus so amply endowed, Aldwin re-built the church, and the monastery was soon populous enough to throw off several colonies; and whilst Reinfrid migrated to Whitby, Aldwin himself moved northwards, and settled amongst the ruins of Melrose. Walcher, though himself a pious, learned, and good man, was unfortunate in the choice of his ministers; and, through their cruelty and oppression, he brought upon himself that storm of faction, which ended in the catastrophe of Gateshead, where he fell a victim to popular rage, on the 14th May, 1080. *

WILLIAM DE CARILEPH was nominated Bishop of Durham, in 1080, and was consecrated at Gloucester on the 3rd January, 1082, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the presence of the king and the assembled prelates of the realm. His talents and learning acquired him the confidence of his sovereign, and the office of chief justice of England; and his influence was exerted in restoring peace and rest to the distracted district over which he presided. On the accession of Rufus, Carileph was included in the list of Norman nobles who declared for Robert, the eldest son of the Conqueror. On the suppression of the insurrection the bishop fled into Normandy, but was restored to his see in 1091. During his episcopacy the secular clergy were ejected from the Cathedral Church of Durham, and their places were filled by Benedictine monks from the monasteries of Wearmouth and Jarrow. In 1093, the bishop began to erect the present stately cathedral, and about this period the church of Durham received the abbey and lands of Coldingham; from Edgar, king of Scotland. The same monarch also presented the town of Berwick to Bishop Carileph; but it was afterwards resumed by the Scottish monarch. Bishop Carileph died at Windsor, in January 1096, and the see remained vacant nearly four years.

In 1099, RALPH FLAMBAARD was appointed bishop, and though of lowly origin, his genius, ready wit, and eloquence raised him to the episcopal throne. During his prelacy the erection of the cathedral proceeded, and before his death he had the satisfaction of seeing the nave, with its aisles, finished up to the roof. In 1112, he founded the hospital of St. Giles, of Kepier, Durham, "for his own good estate, and for the redemption of the souls of his first patrons, King William who conquered England, and Maud his queen; and for the soul of that other King William who raised him to the bishopric; of King Henry, who confirmed him in it, and of all Christians who have given or shall give alms to the church of St. Cuthbert." He also built the city wall betwixt the castle and the cathedral at Durham, erected Framwellgate Bridge, and, in 1121, erected Norham Castle. He died in 1128, and by his last testament, ordered all the money due to him to be given to the poor.

GILFRID RUFUS, chancellor of England, was consecrated bishop of Durham on the 6th August 1133; the see having been vacant for five years. The ceremony was performed at York by Archbishop Thurstan. This prelate does not appear to have taken any active part in the troubles which happened during his episcopacy, though he preserved a strict adherence to the interests of King Stephen, by whose authority he secured the liberties of his palatinate, and obtained a grant for the establishment of a mint at Durham. That interesting and almost unique fabric, the Chapter-house, was built during the time of Bishop Rufus. He held the see till 1140, when he died, and the bishopric was usurped by a priest named William Cumin, in whom Bishop Gilfrid had placed great confidence, and by whom that prelate had been attended on his death-bed. Cumin was supported in his usurpation by that monarch and the Empress Matilda, with the assurance that the Convent of Durham would suffer no injury under his authority. Every effort, however, to induce the prior and archdeacon to proceed to his election proved ineffectual. In the third year after the death of Gilfrid, in spite of the precautions of Cumin, some of the monks escaped to York, and armed with the authority of the Roman pontiff, there made choice of William de Sancta Barbara, their dean, who received consecration at Winchester. He immediately afterwards proceeded towards Durham, in the hopes of Cumin's submission, but was obliged by the forces of the latter to seek refuge in the Church of St. Giles, near Kepier, from whence he with difficulty escaped. After much violence and tumult, the contending parties agreed upon a suspension of hostilities, till a messenger could be sent to the Holy See for instructions, during which time Cumin was to hold possession of Durham Castle, with one-third of the revenue of the lands between the Tyne and Tees, and everything else within the bishopric was surrendered to the bishop elect. But the usurper soon violated the terms of this truce, and his soldiers, commanded by his nephew, made an unsuccessful attack upon the bishop and his retinue at Jarrow. The bishop deeming himself insecure on the south of the Tyne, retired privately to Lindisfarne; and after Cumin and his followers had committed numerous depredations in the diocese, he returned to Durham, accompanied by the Archbishop of York, and the Bishop of Carlisle. But what was his surprise, when, on entering the city, he found his haughty adversary awaiting his arrival in the garb and attitude of a penitent. Prostrate at the feet of the prelate, the sanguinary Cumin testified the deepest contrition for his offences, promised restitution to every one according to his power, and, influenced by whatever motives of penitence or necessity, surrendered without reserve or stipulation the whole of his power and possessions, committing himself and his followers to the entire discretion of the prelate, who imposed on his humbled opponent no other than ecclesiastical penance. On taking possession of his see, the first care of the bishop was to restore the ruined churches and public buildings of his bishopric, and to alleviate the distresses his people had suffered in the late civil broils. Being intent on works of charity, he is said to have inspired all who knew him with love and veneration, and after his death in 1152, his memory was long cherished by posterity.

HUGH DE PUDSEY, bishop of Winchester, and nephew of King Stephen, was translated to Durham in 1153. He afterwards received the earldoms of Northumberland and Sadberge, and was appointed Chief Justiciary of England and governor of Windsor Castle and the adjacent forests. These honours and offices he subsequently lost. In 1164 he granted to the burgesses of Gateshead liberty of forestage, and the same liberties and burgages which the burgesses of Newcastle enjoyed from theirs. He also incorporated the borough of Sunderland about the same period, and shortly afterwards re-built the borough of Elvet. The Boldon Book was compiled by his orders about the year 1183. It comprises a survey of all the lands of the see, held in demesne or by tenants in villianage, taking no notice of tenants in capite by knight's service. Besides this work we find that Bishop Pudsey made several additions to the cathedral, and granted foundation charters to the burgesses of Durham, and Finchale Priory. He also re-built the Castle of Durham, together with the church at Darlington, and many other magnificent edifices. He died at Howden, in March 1194.

PHILIP DE POICTOU, a native of Aquitaine, one of the king's privy councillors and favourites, was elected Bishop of Durham, in 1195, after the see had been vacant for nearly two years. He was consecrated at Rome by Pope Celestine, and the most prominent part of his character was his violent persecution of the monks. He placed the monastery in a state of siege, forbade the importation of provisions, blocked up the passage to the abbey mill, demolished the common furnace or oven in Elvet, destroyed the fish-weir at Finchale, and killed the cattle in Bear Park. He even surrounded the church with soldiers, applied fire and smoke to the doors and windows, and dragged the prior and clergy from the altar during the celebration of the holy mysteries on the festival of St. Cuthbert. Dying whilst under sentence of excommunication, in consequence of his supporting King John in his resistance to the see of Rome, he was buried without the precincts of the cathedral, A.D. 1207.

RICHARD DE MARISCO, chancellor of England, was nominated to the see of Durham, which had been vacant nine years, in 1217, and was consecrated on the 24th June, 1218. He imitated his predecessor in persecuting the monks; and his prodigality left the see encumbered with a debt of £11,000. He died at Peterborough, in 1226.

RICHARD POOR, bishop of Salisbury, the next bishop, was translated to the see in May, 1228, and enthroned on the 4th September following. He terminated the disputes which had existed between the monks and his two predecessors, by a solemn act of convention in 1231, and liquidated the debt with which Richard de Marisco had encumbered the revenues of the church. He died in 1237; and the see remained vacant for four years.

NICHOLAS DE FARNHAM was chosen bishop in 1241, and was consecrated at Gloucester on Trinity Sunday by the Archbishop of York, in the presence of the sovereign and a splendid court. He was enthroned at Durham on the ensuing festival of St. Cuthbert; but voluntarily resigned his bishopric in 1249, and died at his manor of Stockton in 1257.

WALTER DE KIRKHAM, dean of York, the next bishop, was elected in 1249, shortly after the resignation of Nicholas de Farnham. History is almost silent with regard to this prelate; he died at Howden in 1260.

ROBERT STICHILL, prior of Finchale, succeeded Bishop Kirkham, in 1260, and was consecrated at Southwell, by the Archbishop of York, on the 13th February, 1261. He founded Greatham Hospital, and was present at the council of Lyons, returning from whence, he died at the Castle of Abypeyllis in 1274, having lived in the greatest concord with the monks, and joined them in their religious exercises. This prelate was bred a monastic at Durham, and during his noviceship incurred, for some youthful levity, the shame of a public penance. He had even resolved to apostatise from the religious life, and was actually endeavouring to make his escape, when he was arrested by a miraculous voice or impression, which occasioned an entire change in his character, and laid the foundation of his future fortune.

ROBERT DE INSULA, prior of Finchale, was elected bishop in September, 1274, and consecrated at York in the October following. This prelate was of humble birth, and on his elevation to the episcopal dignity did not forget his lowly origin. The following characteristic anecdote is preserved by Grey-stanes:—"The bishop was once at Norham, and the Lord Scremerston sent him a present of some country ale. The bishop had long been disused to such humble beverage, yet, from respect to the donor, and to the good report of the liquor, he tasted a cup of it. 'See,' said he, 'the force of custom; you all know my origin, and that neither from my parents nor my country I can derive any taste for wine, and yet now my country liquor is rendered utterly distasteful to me.' To his mother he gave a train of male and female servants, and an honourable establishment. Once when he went to see her, 'and how fares my sweet mother?' said he. 'Never worse,' quoth she. 'And what ails thee, or troubles thee?—hast thou not men and women, and attendants sufficient?' 'Yea,' quoth she, 'and more than enough; I say to one, go, and he runs; to another, come hither, fellow, and the varlet falls down on his knee; and in short all things go on so abominably smooth, that my heart is bursting for something to spite me, and pick a quarrel withal.'" This prelate occasionally resided at the Castle of Middleham, where he died in 1283, having previously given the church of that place to Finchale for the augmentation of four monks.

ANTHONY BECK, archdeacon of Durham, was elected bishop, July 9th, 1283, and was consecrated by the Archbishop of York, on the 9th January following. This prelate's life was spent in the court and in the camp, and he bore a prominent part in the important transactions which marked the reign of Edward I. In 1307, he obtained from Edward II. a grant of the regal dignity of the Isle of Man. He had previously received from Rome the patriarchate of Jerusalem, and he now enjoyed the accumulated dignities of bishop, count palatine, patriarch, and king. Under this bishop the palatine power "reached the high meridian of its greatness," and the court of Durham exhibited all the appendages of royalty. Surrounded by his officers of state, or marching at the head of his troops, in peace or in war, he appeared as the military chief of a powerful and independent franchise. Nobles addressed the palatine sovereign kneeling, and, instead of menial servants, knights waited in his presence chamber, and at his table, bareheaded and standing. He founded the Colleges of Chester and Lanchester, erected towers at Gainford and Coniscliffe, and added to the buildings of Auckland and Barnard Castles. He died on the 3rd March, 1310, at his manor-house of Eltham, and was the first prelate of Durham who was buried within the cathedral.

RICHARD KELLOW, a monk of Durham, was the next bishop. He was unanimously elected bishop on the 31st March, 1311, and consecrated at York on the 30th May following. This prelate carried with him to the palatine throne the piety and humility of the cloister, and maintained a cordial and uninterrupted intercourse with his former brethren, selecting from them his seneschal, his chancellor, and confessor. He observed the strictest impartiality in the exercise of his authority, and never spared an offender on account of his rank. Without assuming the pomp or splendour of his predecessor, Bishop Kellow engaged the chief vassals of the palatinate in his service by honourable retainers; and he knew how to avail himself of their services in suppressing mutiny and disorder with prompt though unostentatious vigour. He died universally lamented in 1316; and if he fell short of his predecessors in works of public liberality, the calamitous period of his episcopacy affords a sufficient reason.

LOUIS BRAUMONT, a descendant of the royal blood of France, and kinsman of the Queen of England, was elevated to the chair of St. Cuthbert in 1318, and consecrated at Winchester on the 26th March of the same year. By the ancient writers, this prelate is described as ignorant, vain, and petulant; and his conduct towards the convent, to whose liberality he was deeply indebted, is stated to have been marked by the most capricious exercise of power, and by the most childish expressions of enmity. His private expenses were enormous; his public works were confined to the building of a spacious hall and kitchen, and a chapel at his manor of Middleham. He died suddenly, on the 28th September, 1333, and was interred, with great funeral pomp, near the high altar of his cathedral.

RICHARD DE BURY was consecrated bishop of Durham in December 1333. This prelate, after studying at Oxford, became a monk in the Convent of Durham, and was shortly afterwards selected to be preceptor to Edward, Prince of Wales. On the accession of his pupil to the throne of England, his road to honour and wealth was opened; he became, in rapid succession, cofferer, treasurer of the wardrobe, archdeacon of Northampton, prebendary of Lincoln, Sarum, and Lichfield; and lastly, keeper of the privy seal; and whilst in possession of the latter office was twice ambassador at Rome. He became dean of Wells in 1322, and during his second embassy to Rome was promoted to the see of Durham. On the day of his installation at Durham, he gave a splendid feast to the royal and noble persons who attended the ceremony. The King and Queen of England, the King of Scotland, two archbishops, seven bishops, five earls, and all the northern nobility, were entertained with magnificent hospitality. In the following year, he became lord chancellor, and in 1336, treasurer of England; and continued till death to hold his many honours and enjoy the unabated confidence of his sovereign. But his high offices did not engross the whole of his attention, for his memory has come down to our own times as one of the earliest and most munificent patrons of literature and learning. His charities knew no bounds; his gates were ever open to the poor and needy; besides the fragments of his table, four quarters of wheat were distributed to them weekly, and those who came too late were relieved by a small sum of money. Every time that the bishop travelled from Durham to Newcastle he gave twelve marks in charity, between Durham and Stockton eight marks, between Durham and Auckland five marks, and from Durham to Middleham a hundred shillings. But the noblest instance of his generosity was the extensive public library which he founded at Oxford, for the use of the students of Durham, now Trinity College. Having employed himself some years in works of charity and munificence, he died at his manor house of Auckland, on the 14th April, 1345, and was interred in the west angle of the cathedral on the 21st of the same month.

THOMAS HATEFIELD, the king's secretary, and keeper of the privy seal, was consecrated bishop of Durham on the 9th July, 1345, and enthroned on Christmas-day the same year. Under his firm and vigorous administration the see of Durham lost nothing of its ancient dignity and splendour. Like Bishop Bury, he maintained a princely hospitality, and dispensed daily and extensive charity. Generous, open, and sincere, he was just and beneficent to his subjects, and to his dependents liberal and indulgent. The Cathedral of Durham is indebted to the prelacy of Bishop Hatfield for some of its fairest ornaments. He re-built or repaired many edifices belonging to the see, and also erected a sumptuous palace in the Strand, London, for the residence of himself and his successors, whilst attending parliament. Bishop Hatfield died at his manor of Alford near London, on the 8th May, 1381. His body, attended by the Bishop of Hereford and a numerous train, was brought to Durham and interred in the tomb, on the south side of the choir, which he had prepared during his lifetime.

JOHN FORDHAM was elected bishop of Durham in 1381; he was prebendary of York and Lincoln, secretary to the king, and soon afterwards lord treasurer. He was an active minister during the minority of Richard II., and is said to have been one of those evil counsellors who inflamed the passions and precipitated the ruin of that unfortunate monarch. In 1388, he was deprived of the see of Durham, but was permitted to retire to that of Ely.

WALTER SKIRLAWE, the next bishop, was translated from Bath and Wells, on the removal of Bishop Fordham, and is described by the historians of the period as a pious and humble prelate, who was renowned for his works of charity and mercy. He was a native of Skirlaugh, in the parish of Swine, in Holderness, where he erected a handsome Gothic church. He built and repaired many public edifices in his diocese, and the bridges at Shincliffe, Yarm, and Auckland, owe their origin to his munificence. He began the cloisters at Durham Cathedral, and, leaving the work unfinished, gave by his will £400 for its completion. After wearing the mitre of Durham in peace and honour for seventeen years, Bishop Skirlawe died, full of years and good works, on the 24th March, 1405.

THOMAS LANGLEY, dean of York, and lord chancellor of England, was elected bishop of Durham in 1406, when, it is said, he resigned the great seal, and was consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 8th August, the same year. In June 1411, he received the cardinal's hat from Pope John XXII., and, in 1414, was sent as ambassador to France. In 1417, he again accepted the chancellorship, which he retained till the death of Henry V., when he resigned ; but resumed the office, at the request of the parliament, in 1423, and continued to discharge its duties till 1425, when he finally retired from office, and directed his attention to the affairs of his palatinate. Cardinal Langley's age was spent in honourable retirement within his diocese, and his public works were numerous and munificent. He built the whole of the old gaol in the city of Durham, and founded two schools on Palace Green, the one for grammar and the other for plain song. Cardinal Langley died in 1437, having held the see for thirty-one years, and was buried in the Galilee.

RICHARD NEVILLE, the next bishop of this ancient see, was translated from Salisbury, on the 27th January, 1437 ; received the temporalities, April 8th, 1438 ; and was enthroned at Durham on the 11th of the same month. He was the son of Ralph, Earl of Westmorland, brother of Richard, Earl of Salisbury ; and, by his mother, Joan of Lancaster, sister of Henry IV., he was nearly related to the reigning sovereign ; and his family claimed alliance with all the ancient nobility and gentry of the north. His life seems to have passed in dignified retirement and tranquillity ; the only public business in which we find him mentioned being the negotiation of truces with Scotland ; and the city of Durham was, in his time, frequently the place appointed for the deliberations of the English and Scottish commissioners. He built the Exchequer, on the Palace Green, where the Neville's arms and crest still remain above the doorway. He died on the 8th July, 1457, and was interred in the south aisle of the Cathedral.

LAURENCE BOOTH, chaplain to Queen Margaret, was raised to the see of Durham by a papal bull, bearing date the 15th September, 1457. This prelate incurred the displeasure of Edward IV. by supporting the interests of Queen Margaret, in consequence of which the king seized the temporalities of the see in 1462, and retained them till the year 1464. In 1473, he was appointed chancellor of England, and three years afterwards, on the death of Archbishop Neville, he was translated to the metropolitan see of York. Bishop Booth was the first prelate of Durham who was removed to the archbishopric.

WILLIAM DUDLEY, dean of Windsor, was elected bishop of Durham the 26th September, 1476, and did homage and was invested with the temporalities on the 14th October following. During the episcopacy of this prelate, three commissions of array were issued for calling out the armed force of the palatinate ; one of these is directed to the Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III., as lieutenant of the north. Bishop Dudley died in London, in November 1483, and was interred in Westminster Abbey.

JOHN SHERWOOD, S.T.P., archdeacon of Richmond, a learned divine and civilian, was the next bishop. Leland describes him as "a learned man ; and, from similitude of studies, an intimate friend of Roch, the Carthusian monk ; both courting the muses, and being good poets." He died at Rome on the 12th January, 1493.

RICHARD FOX, bishop of Bath and Wells, was translated to the bishopric of Durham in 1494. He was one of the Englishmen who, at Paris, bound themselves by oath to assist Henry, Earl of Richmond, to dethrone Richard III. ; and, whilst bishop of Bath, he was one of the sponsors for Prince Henry, afterwards Henry VIII. From the see of Rome he had the title of apostolical delegate in the realm of Scotland ; he was also secretary of state ; and, from the time of his promotion to the see of Durham, the whole management of the north, and of the Scottish border, was committed to his charge. He was translated to the see of Winchester on the 6th October, 1501.

WILLIAM SEVER succeeded Bishop Fox in October 1502. He is said to have been the son of a sieve-maker, and a native of Shincliffe, near Durham. After being successively warden of Merton College, provost of Eton, chancellor of the diocese of Oxford, abbot of St. Mary's at York, and bishop of Carlisle, he was translated to Durham, the temporalities of which had been entrusted to his management after the translation of his predecessor. Bishop Sever died in 1505, and was buried in the Abbey of St. Mary at York, the see remaining vacant for two years, during which time the crown supplied all the principal officers of the palatinate, and enjoyed the revenues of the bishopric.

CHRISTOPHER BAINBRIGG, the next bishop, was elected in 1507; but, in the following year, he was translated to the see of York, of which he had previously been dean. This prelate was a native of the village of Hilton, near Appleby, in Westmorland, and was educated at Queen's College, Oxford.

THOMAS RUTHALL, dean of Salisbury, was nominated to the see of Durham on the 28th April, 1509. This bishop was a member of the privy council to Henry VII. and Henry VIII., and held the office of secretary of state under the latter monarch. On account of his singular wisdom, Chambre informs us, he was constantly retained at court, so that he had no time to attend to the interests of his bishopric. The immense riches which this prelate had accumulated were the ultimate cause of his ruin. By order of Henry VIII., he compiled an account of the lands and revenues of the crown throughout England; at the same time he drew up a statement of his own riches. The two volumes were, it is said, bound exactly alike in vellum, and Ruthall; by mistake, delivered into the hand of Wolsey the inventory of his own private fortunes, instead of a survey of the royal revenues. The cardinal instantly discovered the mistake, but carried the book to the king, observing, that though he would be disappointed in meeting with the information he expected, he need be under no difficulty where to apply for the assistance which his necessities required. It does not appear that Henry took any advantage of the knowledge; but the grief of the bishop was so great, when informed of this discovery, that he was seized with a mortal illness, and died in London on the 4th February, 1522. Bishop Ruthall repaired the third part of Tyne Bridge on the south, and began to build the great dining hall at Auckland, but did not live to complete it.

CARDINAL THOMAS WOLSEY was elected to the see of Durham, on his resignation of the bishopric of Bath and Wells, in February 1522. He received the investiture of the temporalities on the 30th April, 1523, and continued to hold, with the bishopric of Durham, the archiepiscopal see of York. Wolsey held this diocese for about six years, during which time he never once visited it. In 1528, he resigned Durham, and was translated to Winchester.

CUTHBERT TUNSTALL, bishop of London, was translated to the see of Durham in 1530, when the bishopric had been vacated by Wolsey about a year. In 1534, when Henry VIII. assumed the title of supreme head of the English Church, Tunstall hesitated, argued, and submitted; and, soon afterwards, publicly defended the royal supremacy from the pulpit. By some writers it is said there was only one blot on his character, viz., "his being seduced and drawn in by the king to assert, that his marriage with Catherine of Spain might and ought to be dissolved, and to write a book, wherein he endeavours to prove it." In 1535, he acted as one of the commissioners for valuing all ecclesiastical benefices, and settling the first fruits and tenths on the crown. By the act 27 Henry VIII., the bishop was deprived of nearly all the ancient honours and peculiar privileges which had been lavished, during six centuries, by kings and princes, on the see of Durham. To these changes Bishop Tunstall submitted in silence, and enjoyed, during the remainder of Henry's reign, a considerable degree of personal influence and favour. On the accession of Edward VI., the cautious yet open conduct of Bishop Tunstall seems, for a time, to have saved him from ruin; he had been dismissed from the council in 1548, but suffered no further molestation during the first years of the young king's reign. The ambitious views, however, of the daring and profligate Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, impelled him to hasten the downfall of the unoffending prelate. He was deprived by a court of lawyers and ecclesiastics, and his bishopric was not only suppressed, but out of it two others were formed, in such a manner that a large portion of the revenues and lands were reserved to the government. The death of Edward defeated the projects and ambition of Dudley; and, on the accession of Mary, the eldest daughter of Henry VIII., Tunstall was released from the Tower and reinstated in his bishopric of Durham, which was at once re-established. In 1554, we find Bishop Tunstall employed by Queen Mary to make new statutes for the government of collegiate churches; and during the whole of Mary's reign, we do not discover that any one suffered for religious opinions throughout the whole diocese; hence we may conclude, that the old religion was more prevalent here than in some other parts of England. When Elizabeth came to the throne, in 1558, her first care was to re-establish the Protestant religion, and hopes were entertained by many that Bishop Tunstall would not refuse taking the oath of supremacy. Without, however, expressing any hostile feeling to the queen, he declined taking the oath, and was, in consequence, deprived of his bishopric. He died on the 18th November, 1559, in the 85th year of his age.

JAMES PILKINGTON, the first Protestant bishop of Durham, was elected on the 26th December, 1560. This prelate was the third son of Richard Pilkington, of Rivington, in Lancashire, and, having imbibed the principles of the reformers, was a voluntary exile from his native land during the reign of Mary. He returned on the accession of Elizabeth, under whose auspices he was appointed bishop of this see, and had confirmed to him by patent, under the great seal, all the old charters relative to the palatinate of Durham. He visited his Cathedral in 1561 and in 1567. On the breaking out of the rebellion under the Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, Bishop Pilkington went into the south with his wife and children. With regard to the latter, Fuller says, "I have heard that Queen Elizabeth, being informed that Dr. Pilkington, bishop of Durham, had given £10,000 in marriage with his daughter, and being offended that a prelate's daughter should equal a princess, in future took away £1,000 a year from that bishopric, and assigned it for the better maintenance of the garrison at Berwick." Bishop Pilkington died at Auckland on the 23rd January, 1575.

RICHARD BARNES was translated to the bishopric of Durham, from Carlisle, in April 1577. He was a native of Bold, near Warrington, in Lancashire, and is said to have been learned, affable, and generous; though, according to the contemporary historians, he "meervailously exasperated" his people, by his persecution of those who clung to the ancient faith, and by countenancing the most rapacious acts in his ecclesiastical court, where John Barnes, his brother, presided as chancellor, and conducted himself with the greatest corruption and viciousness. After an episcopacy of eleven years, Bishop Barnes died at Auckland, where he chiefly resided, on the 27th August, 1587.

MATTHEW HUTTON, dean of York, the next bishop, was elected on the 9th January, 1589. According to the most generally received accounts, he was descended from a family seated at Priest Hutton, in Lancashire. In 1546, he became a member of the University of Cambridge, and, in 1562, he was selected as one of the preachers at Whitehall, by Archbishop Parker. Hutton's character was now established as one of the soundest scholars and most eloquent preachers of the age; and it appears to have been at the particular request of Lord Burleigh, that he was promoted to the bishopric of Durham. After an episcopate of five years, he was removed, in 1594, to the metropolitan see of York. He died the 18th October, 1605, in the 80th year of his age.

TOBIAS MATTHEW, dean of Durham, succeeded to the bishopric in March 1595. He was one of the commissioners appointed by Queen Elizabeth to treat with Scotland, and redress grievances on the borders. He was universally allowed, even by his adversaries, to be one of the most able controversialists, as well as one of the most eloquent preachers, of his age; and, in private life, he was much beloved for his steady friendship, his liberal bounty, and the cheerful and unaffected freedom of his conversation. On the 26th July, 1606, he was translated to York, where he remained till his demise in 1628.

WILLIAM JAMES, the next bishop, was elected to the see of Durham on the 5th August, 1606. He was consecrated on the 17th September, had restitution of the temporalities on the 16th, and was enthroned by proxy the same day. This prelate was elected master of University College, Oxford, in 1572; in 1584, he was promoted to the deanery of Christ's Church; and, in 1596, was removed to that of Durham. He was also archdeacon of Coventry in 1577, and chaplain to Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. During the last year of his episcopacy, he had the honour of entertaining King James at Durham, on his progress to Scotland. This prelate died in his 75th year, on the 11th May, 1617, and was buried near the entrance of the choir in Durham Cathedral.

RICHARD NEILE, bishop of London, was translated to Durham on the 13th November, 1617. He has been justly stigmatised as one of those unprincipled courtiers who flattered King James's vanity at the expense both of truth and honesty. Waller, the poet, calling to see King James on the day after parliament had been dissolved, and finding the Bishops of Durham and Winchester standing behind the monarch's chair, overheard a remarkable conversation, in which the king said—"My lords, cannot I take the money of my subjects when I want it, without all this formality in parliament?" To this the Bishop of Durham readily answered, "God forbid, sire, but you should; you are the breath of our nostrils." James then turned to Winchester, saying, "Well, my lord, what say you?" The bishop replied, "Sire, I have no skill to judge of parliamentary cases." The king answered, "No put offs, my lord; answer me presently." "Then, sire," said Winchester, "I think it lawful for you to take my brother Neile's money, for he offers it." In 1627, Bishop Neile was translated to Winchester, and, in 1631, he was promoted to the archbishopric of York.

GEORGE MONTEIGNE, S.T.P., bishop of London, was translated to Durham on the 3rd March, 1627. This prelate, who was of humble parentage, and born at Cawood in Yorkshire, only wore the mitre of Durham three months, being again removed to the archbishopric of York on the 16th June. He died on the 6th November, in the same year.

JOHN HOWSON, S.T.P., who was translated to Durham, from Oxford, on the 28th September, 1628, held the see till his death, in February 1631. The short period during which he sat at Durham presents no remarkable features.

THOMAS MORTON, S.T.P., bishop of Lichfield, was translated to the see of Durham on the 2nd July, 1632, and filled the high and opulent station for more than twenty years, with remarkable moderation, justice, equity, and charity. On the advance of the Scotch army, in August 1640, Bishop Morton fled to London, where he was soon after maltreated by the mob while on his way to the House of Lords. Bishop Morton and eleven other bishops were committed to the Tower, on a charge of high treason, in December 1641; but, on the same day, the Bishops of Durham and Coventry were excepted from the order on account of their age and infirmities, and were transferred to the custody of the usher of the House of Commons. After remaining a month in custody, without being called on for any defence, they were suffered to retire to their own houses. Bishop Morton never again saw his diocese. He continued to reside in perfect privacy till the beginning of 1645, when, on some new pretence, he was dragged from his retirement, and again committed to the custody of the serjeant-at-arms. He was kept prisoner six months, and on the 10th May, 1646, when the whole of the revenues of his see were taken from him by parliament, he had £800 per annum voted to him for life; but whilst he was able to subsist without, he never applied for it; and when his necessities required an application, he found the vote to be totally ineffectual, as it was not stated from whence or by whom the money was to be paid. Subsequently, either at the importunity of old Sir Henry Vane, or some other of the bishop's friends, the sum of £1,000 was ordered to be paid to the bishop's use, who, with that sum, paid all his debts, and purchased an annuity of £200 per annum, which was regularly paid till the bishop's death, on the 22nd September, 1659, in the 95th year of his age. After twenty years of the most dreadful anarchy and confusion, and twelve years' total subversion of the constitution, the affairs of England assumed a brighter aspect, by the restoration of Charles II.; and the see of Durham, which had for a long period been suppressed, was re-established with all its former dignities and possessions.

JOHN COSIN, S.T.P., dean of Peterborough, who had been severely persecuted during the Commonwealth, was nominated bishop, by Charles II., in November 1660. Among the many liberal and high-minded prelates who have held the see of Durham, the name of Cosin stands eminently distinguished for munificence and public spirit. His first care was to reform the abuses that had crept into the churches of the diocese during the period of the Commonwealth; and, by his generous and sympathising temper, and courteous deportment, he was soon universally respected and esteemed. He reared almost from the ground the noble palace of Auckland, which now exists on the site of the old castle. To this he added the chapel, with all its splendid collection of books, plate, ornaments, &c. He placed the Castle of Durham in complete repair, and restored the episcopal residence in Darlington from a state of entire dilapidation. At Durham he also rebuilt and augmented the endowment of Bishop Langley's hospital and schools, and erected the bishop's library. In 1664, he was chiefly instrumental in procuring the rebuilding of the Guild Hall, or Town Hall, at Durham, as well as in repairing the courts of justice, the Exchequer, and the Court of Chancery. He died on the 15th January, 1671.

THE HON. NATHANIEL CREWE, the next bishop, was translated from the see of Oxford to that of Durham in October 1674, and was enthroned on the 10th November following. Bishop Crewe, or as he is more frequently termed, from his subsequent accession to the family title, Lord Crewe, was the fifth son of John, first Lord Crewe, of Stene, in Northamptonshire. This prelate, in 1676, was one of the privy council of Charles II., and, on the accession of James II., was still in great favour in court, being then made dean of the Chapel Royal. After the revolution of 1688, Bishop Crewe was excepted, by name, out of the general pardon granted by William and Mary, and, in February 1689, fled to Holland. He returned to London in July, and having made his peace, he took the oaths to William and Mary at Guildhall. He afterwards remained in obscurity for some time, and was deprived of his lord lieutenancy of Durham, which he had held under James II. By the death of his two brothers, in 1691, he became Baron Crewe of Stene, and was, of course, summoned to parliament both as baron and bishop, being the first instance in England of such a union of a temporal and spiritual peerage. On the accession of Queen Anne, Lord Crewe again enjoyed some gleams of royal favour; he again solicited the restoration of his lord lieutenancy, but did not obtain it till the year 1712. From the accession of George I., Bishop Crewe's life was spent in comparative retirement. In 1715, the bishop's brother-in-law, John Forster, Esq., M.P. for Northumberland, general of the English part of the rebel army, forfeited his estates, of which Bambrough Castle was the principal seat. Lord Crewe purchased the whole of the family possessions, then valued at £1,314 per annum, from the government commissioners, and, by his last will, settled the whole of the present and future revenues on charitable uses. Under this will, and under the great increase of rental in the Forster estates, the princely establishment of Bambrough has arisen, where the trustees of the benevolent bishop have fitted up apartments for the reception of shipwrecked mariners; and a constant patrol is kept, every stormy night, along this dangerous coast for the space of eight miles, by which means numerous lives have been preserved which must have otherwise perished. A list of signals are made use of at Bambrough Castle, in case vessels are perceived in distress, driven on the beach in fogs, &c. The liberal bequest of this humane prelate is not confined to shipwrecked mariners alone, but extends to the diffusion of knowledge and happiness among the labouring and indigent classes of the neighbourhood. Children are taught gratis, and amply supplied with books. Under the same charity, provisions are sold to the labouring poor at reduced prices. An infirmary is also kept there at the expense of the charity; an experienced surgeon attends, and gives medicine and advice, gratis, to the poor. Bishop Crewe, after holding the see of Durham forty-seven years, died on the 18th September, 1722.

WILLIAM TALBOT, S.T.P., bishop of Salisbury, was translated to the see of Durham, in October, 1721. In the same year he was made governor of the Charter House; and was afterwards appointed Lord-Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county palatine of Durham. This prelate is stated to have been so extravagant that the ample revenues of his bishopric were not adequate to his expenditure. He died in London, October 10th, 1730.

HENRY CHANDLER, S.T.P., the next bishop, was translated from Lichfield, in November, 1730. History is almost silent with regard to this prelate, but we are informed that he was a learned divine, who never sold any of his patent offices, though he was offered large sums of money for them. He held the see of Durham twenty years, and died in London, on the 20th of July, 1750.

JOSEPH BUTLER, bishop of Bristol, succeeded to the see of Durham in September, 1750, and was enthroned by proxy on the 9th of the following November. During the short time which Bishop Butler held this see, he conciliated all hearts; and in advanced years, and on the episcopal throne, he retained the same genuine modesty and native sweetness of disposition which had distinguished him in youth and retirement. His constitution, originally delicate, was at the time of his removal to Durham, evidently sinking under the attacks of disease; and he expired at Bath, within the second year of his translation, on the 16th June, 1752.

RICHARD TREVOR, S.T.P., bishop of St. David's, succeeded Bishop Butler, and was enthroned at Durham on the 29th December, 1752. This bishop held the see for nineteen years, during which time he resided alternately at Durham or Auckland; and by his contemporaries is described as a sincere friend, a generous patron, and a splendid and munificent prelate. He died in London, after a long and painful illness, on the 9th June, 1771.

JOHN EGERTON, D.C.L., the next bishop, was translated from Lichfield to Durham, on the 8th July, 1771. He made his public entry in the diocese, on the 3rd of the following September, and soon became deservedly popular with all ranks; nor is it too much to say, that of the many noble and generous prelates who have worn the mitre of Durham, few have ever exercised the palatine privileges with more liberal discretion, or passed through the high office with less blame or envy, than Bishop Egerton. After presiding over this see seventeen years, he died in London on the 18th January, 1787, and was privately interred in St. James's Chapel.

THOMAS THURLOW, D.D., bishop of Lincoln, was translated to the see of Durham, in 1787. This prelate was the second son of the Rev. Thomas Thurlow, of Ashfield, in Suffolk; fellow of Magdalen College, in Oxford; and Rector of Stanhope, in the county of Durham, 1771. In 1778, he was promoted to the Mastership of the Temple, and to the Deanery of Rochester, in 1777. Two years afterwards he was consecrated Bishop of Lincoln; and held with the bishopric the Deanery of St. Paul's. He only enjoyed the see of Durham during four years, for he died in London, May 27th, 1791.

THE HON. SHUTE BARRINGTON, D.D., bishop of Salisbury, succeeded Bishop Thurlow, in June, 1791, and made his public entry into the diocese on the 5th of the following August. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, and was for some years fellow of Merton College. In 1761, he was made canon of Christ's Church, Oxford, and shortly afterwards residentiary of St. Paul's. In 1769, he became Bishop of Landaff, holding that see till 1783, when he was translated to Salisbury, and, in 1791, he was removed to the opulent see of Durham. In his episcopal character, Bishop Barrington was a strict observer of discipline amongst his clergy, and made it his constant business to seek out such worthy and able men as were best entitled to preferment. His private beneficence was most princely, and it is said that £100,000 would not exceed the amount of his benefactions. In 1809, he was involved in a law-suit respecting the rents of some lead-mines belonging to the see, the leases of which had expired for several years, without being renewed; and the case being decided in the bishop's favour, who thereby recovered nearly £80,000, he appropriated the whole to the establishment of schools in his diocese, and the formation of a fund for poor clergymen and their widows. He made a similar application of the proceeds which accrued to him on the division of Framwellgate and Brasside moors and Wilton Gilbert common. When he had attained the fiftieth year of his prelacy, the clergy of his diocese erected at the cost of £2,300, a large charity school at Newcastle, and distinguished it by the name of Jubilee, in commemoration of the event. (See the history and description of Newcastle at a subsequent page.) He died, at his house in Cavendish-square, London, after an illness of six weeks, on the 25th March, 1826, in the 98rd year of his age.

WILLIAM VAN MILDERT, D.D., was translated from the see of Landaff to that of Durham, in 1826, and was installed on the 21st July of the same year. This prelate was the grandson of Abraham Van Mildert, of Amsterdam, and was born in London in the year 1765. He received his education at Merchant Tailors' School, and at Queen's College, Oxford, where he took the degree of D.D. in 1813. He afterwards became curate of Witham, in Essex, and in April, 1812, was elected to the preachingship of Lincoln's Inn. In September, 1813, he was appointed Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford; in March, 1819, he was made Bishop of Landaff; and became Dean of St. Paul's in the following year. He then resigned his professorship at Oxford; and in March, 1826, on the death of Bishop Barrington, he was translated to the episcopal chair of Durham. As a theological writer, Dr. Van Mildert holds a distinguished position; and his "Boyle's Lectures" are an excellent performance, while his "Life of Waterland" is a model for compositions of that kind. The two volumes of sermons preached at Lincoln's Inn, and published in 1831, are perhaps more generally known than the rest of the bishop's works, and many of them are as fine specimens of sermons for a learned audience, as the English language can supply. To his unbounded charity, public and private, every corner of his diocese can bear its testimony. The university established in Durham was chiefly formed by his munificent support. Princely almost as was his income, his lordship died, comparatively speaking, a poor man; and provision for his widow arose chiefly from her beneficial interest in a life policy, to be realised by his lordship's demise. He died in his seventieth year, at Auckland Castle, on the 21st February, 1836; and his remains were interred in a vault, prepared in the nave of the Cathedral Church of Durham. Dr. Van Mildert was the last count palatine; since his demise, the palatine rights and privileges have been vested in the sovereign.

EDWARD MALTBY, D.D., the present bishop, was consecrated Bishop of Chichester, in 1831, and translated to the see of Durham, in 1836. His lordship is visitor of Durham University; a senator of the London University; F.R.S., and F.S.A.; and has published an edition of Morell's "Lexicon Græco-Prosodiacum," "Sermons," &c. The annual value of the see is £8,000. Residences—Upper Portland Place, London; Auckland Castle, Durham.

The ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the diocese of Durham comprehends the whole of the counties of Durham and Northumberland, and until recently, included also the parishes of Alston, in Cumberland, and that of Craike and the peculiars of Allertonshire and Howdenshire, in Yorkshire. The diocese includes the archdeaconries of Durham, Northumberland, and Lindisfarne. That of Durham is divided into the deaneries of Chester, Darlington, Easington, and Stockton; that of Northumberland, into the deaneries of Bellingham, Corbridge, Hexham, and Newcastle; and that of Lindisfarne, into the deaneries of Alnwick, Bambrough, Morpeth, Norham, and Rothbury. The bishop appoints to the archdeaconries, and alternately with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, to certain canonries in the Cathedral. There are in the archdeaconry of Durham 128 benefices, and in each of those of Northumberland and Landisfarne, fifty-four, making a total of 236. Of these, seventy-one are in the patronage of the bishop, besides other eight, which are under the alternate appointment of the crown and the bishop. The archdeacons of Durham and Northumberland each present to one living; and the dean and chapter to forty-four. Thirteen are in the patronage of the crown. Several of the incumbents present to their dependent curacies; and other advowsons are held by lay-patrons.

There have been seventy-nine bishops of this diocese since its first establishment in 634, when the see was fixed at Lindisfarne, whence it was removed, in the year 882, to Chester-le-Street, and subsequently, in 995, to Durham, where it has since remained. The subjoined lists contain the names of the bishops of Lindisfarne, Chester-le-Street, and Durham, in numerical order, with the dates when each of them entered upon the see, shewing also the periods when the episcopal throne was vacant:—

BISHOPS OF LINDISFARNE, FROM 634 TO 882, A.D.—1 Aidan, 634; 2 Finan, 651; 3 Colman, 661; 4 Tuda, 664 (vacant fourteen years); 5 Eata, 678; 6 Cuthbert, 685; 7 Eadbert, 688; 8 Eadfrid, 698; 9 Ethelwold, 721; 10 Cynewold, 740; 11 Highald, 781; 12 Egbert, 803; 13 Heathered, 821; 14 Egfrid, 830; 15 Eanbert, 845; 16 Eardulf, 854 (removed to Chester-le-Street).

BISHOPS OF CHESTER-LE-STREET, FROM 882 TO 990, A.D.—1 Eardulph, 882; 2 Cuthard, 900; 3 Tilred, 915; 4 Wifred, 928; 5 Uchtred, 944; 6 Sexhelm, 947; 7 Aldred, 947; 8 Elfeig, 968; 9 Aldune, 990.

BISHOPS OF DURHAM, FROM 990 TO 1856, A.D.—1 Aldune, removed from Chester, 995; 2 Eadmund, 1020; 3 Eadred, 1041; 4 Egelric, 1042; 5 Egelwin, 1056; 6 Walcher, 1072; 7 William de Carileph, 1080; 8 Ralph Flambard, 1099; 9 Gilfrid Rufus, 1133. Shute Barrington, 1791; 55 William Van Mildert, 1826; 56 Edward Maltby, 1830.

THE PRIORY.—On the establishment of the church at Durham, it was served by secular priests, who are said to have been under the government of a provost; but during the episcopacy of Bishop Carileph, Benedictine monks were introduced, in whose favour a charter was granted by the bishop, and confirmed by Pope Gregory VII., whereby it was ordained, that “the future priors of the church of Durham should possess the liberties, dignities, and honours of abbots, with the abbot’s seat in the choir of the church; and hold all their lands, churches, and possessions in their own hands and free disposition, so that the revenues thereof might be increased as much as possible, exempted from royal customs.” A diploma was also obtained from the king, in 1084, to maintain and support the charter of the bishop, empowering the removal of the seculars from the Cathedral Church, and translating to it monks from Jarrow and Wearmouth monasteries. By this instrument it was ordained, that “all priors of that monastery should possess the same liberties, customs, dignities, and honours as abbots, to hold the left-hand seat in the choir, have full power of appointing and removing the officers of the church, similar to the authority of a dean; having the first place and voice after the bishop; when in chapter the first voice in all elections to the see; and whatever dignities and honours the dean of York held, inferior to the archbishop, but superior to the archdeacon, the prior of Durham should equally hold, in inferiority to his prelate, but in superiority of the archdeacon." By the same deed, the king also confirmed whatever the bishop had granted to his convent, and declared the protection of the monastery and its possessions then enjoyed, as well as those it might afterwards acquire, "with sac and soc, tol and team, and infangeontheof, privileges of courts, and wreck of sea." And he also ordained that the convent, and their people, should be exempt from all outgoings, exactions, rents, tolls, and all other royal customs. This deed was signed and attested by all the bishops and peers of the realm. The bishop also gave to the monastery full jurisdiction over all their churches, and acquitted them of the authority of their prelate and archdeacon, "save only touching the cure of souls;" and, in 1094, he by a further decree ordained, that the priors should for ever thereafter be archdeacons of the whole diocese of Durham, vicars-general, and officials. The monks having been established in the place of the secular clergy, were endowed with the parishes and townships of Rennington, the two Pittingtons, Hesselton, Dalton, Merrington, Shincliffe, Elvet, Willington, and Wallsend, together with the churches of Lindisfarne, the adjacent villages of Fenham, Norham, and Skirworth, with a number of churches in Yorkshire; and other donations were added by the king, amongst which is land in Keverston and Gretham. The following is a list of the priors of Durham from the foundation of the monastery to its dissolution in the reign of Henry VIII., with the date of their election:—

INSTITUTION OF THE DEAN AND CHAPTER.—While the convent was under the government of Prior Whitehead, the dissolution of religious houses was commenced in England, and the convent of Durham shared the common fate, being surrendered to the king on the 31st December, 1540, at which time its revenues amounted to £1,366 10s. 5d., according to Dugdale, or £1,615 14s. according to Speed. On the 12th May, 1541, the king granted his foundation charter to this church, instituting therein a dean, and twelve prebendaries, constituting them a body corporate, by the style and title of "The Dean and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Mary, the Virgin," empowering them under that denomination to do all legal acts, and plead, and be impleaded. He granted them all the site of the monastery, and the ancient rights, liberties, and privileges thereof; and as Willis informs us, having converted the priory into a college of seculars, he "assigned his new dean and prebendaries their respective apartments out of the old monastery, within the precincts of which the bishop, dean, and prebendaries, and other members, have very good houses, the best of any cathedral in England, according with the dignity of the prebends, which are more richly endowed than any other in kingdom, owing to the members allotting themselves, at first, their respective dividends or shares out of the chapter lands, and not leasing them in common." The statutes by which the Church of Durham is now regulated were prepared by Nicholas Heath, archbishop of York; Edmund Bonner, bishop of London; Cuthbert Tunstall, bishop of Durham; Thomas Thirlby, bishop of Ely; and William Armistead, chaplain to their majesties King Philip and Queen Mary. These statutes were confirmed under the great seal in the years 1583-84. The following is a list of the deans who have presided here since the institution of the dean and chapter to the present time with the year in which each was inducted:—

DEANS OF DURHAM.—Hugh Whitehead, 1541; Robert Horn, 1551; Thomas Watson, 1553; Thomas Robertson, 1558; Robert Horn, 1559; Ralph Skynner, 1560; William Whittingham, 1568; Thomas Wilson, 1580; Tobias Matthew, 1583; William James, 1596; Adam Newton, 1606; Richard Hunt, 1620; Walter Balcanquall, 1634; Christopher Porter, 1645; William Fuller, 1645; John Barwick, 1659; John Sudbury, 1661; Denis Granville, 1684; Thomas Comber, 1691; Hon. ## EMINENT MEN.

Many of the Worthies of Durham have been already mentioned; and amongst the others who were born and flourished here, we find the following:—

COUNT BORUWLASKI, the celebrated Polish dwarf, a native of the province of Pokucia, in Polish Russia, was in early life patronised by the Countess Humiecka, a Polish lady, and after having visited with her various countries of Europe, he remained some years in Paris, which place he quitted, prior to the French revolution, and came over to England in 1782, when, having been seen by some of the prebendaries of Durham, he was induced to take up his abode in that city, they agreeing to allow him a handsome income, which he enjoyed up to his death. The count's person, though of diminutive formation, was of the completest symmetry, his height being short of thirty-six inches. It is rather remarkable that he had brothers and sisters some of them above six feet. He died at his residence, Bank Cottage, September 5th, 1837, in the 99th year of his age.

MAJOR CHIPCHASE was the son of the late Thomas Chipchase, Esq., the elder, of the city of Durham. Having entered the army at an early period, he took part in the siege and capture of the ports of Salamanca, where he rendered important services, and was severely wounded. He died at the barracks, Windsor, on October 21st, 1848, aged sixty-two years.

ROBERT HEGG, the author of the "Golden Legend of St. Cuthbert," was born in the city of Durham, in 1599. At the age of fifteen he was sent to Oxford, and admitted a scholar of Corpus Christi College, 7th November, 1614. On the 27th December, 1624, being then M.A., he was admitted probationer fellow of his college, which honour he did not long survive; for, on the 11th June, 1629, having scarcely attained his thirtieth year, he died suddenly of apoplexy, and was buried in the chapel of his college. Four editions of the Legend have appeared at different times. The research displayed by Hegg on all subjects connected with early ecclesiastical history, and with the origin of the city of Durham, has caused his book to be much valued.

GEORGE STEPHEN KEMBLE, Esq., was the son of Mr. Roger Kemble, and brother of John and Charles Kemble, and of Mrs. Siddons, all of great theatrical celebrity. His mother too was an actress; and it is remarkable, that she played the part of Anna Bullen on the very night that Stephen Kemble was born, which was just at the time when, as queen, she was supposed in the play, to have given birth to the Princess Elizabeth. He was born at Kingstown, in the county of Hereford, May 3rd, 1758; was put apprentice to Mr. Gibbs, surgeon at Coventry; but preferring the stage, after a course of practice in England, Scotland, and Ireland, he appeared at Covent Garden, September 24th, 1783. In November following he married Miss Satchell, a favourite actress of the same theatre. Leaving Covent Garden in the following year, after performing some time at the Haymarket, Mr. Kemble became a manager himself; and conducted successively, the theatres of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Liverpool, Newcastle, and several others, with great success. He was afterwards acting manager of Drury Lane theatre. To a mind well stored with the beauties of our dramatic authors, and possessed of a rich fund of entertaining anecdotes, Mr. Kemble united a kind and social disposition. On the stage, he was chiefly remarkable for playing Sir John Falstaff, it is said, without stuffing. The last time he appeared on the stage was for the benefit of a part of his family, on May 20th, 1822, when he performed Sir Christopher Curry, in Inkle and Yarico. He was then apparently in his usual state of health, but in a few days afterwards he was attacked by inflammation in the bowels, which terminated his mortal existence on the 5th June following, at the Grove, near Durham. Mr. Kemble, who was a very corpulent man, had retired for some years before from the laborious profession of an actor. In many characters he was confessedly unrivalled; and it is no small commendation, that he was considered by the late Mr. Sheridan to be the best declaimer he had ever heard on or off the stage. He was also possessed of considerable literary talents, having written various addresses, songs, &c. &c., which appeared from time to time in different journals. Mr. Kemble published, "Odes, Lyrical Ballads, and Poems," 8vo. 1809, with a portrait. His remains were interred, June 11th, in the Chapel of the Nine Altars, on the north side of the shrine of St. Cuthbert.

MISS JANE PORTER, a talented and distinguished novelist, was born in Durham, in 1776. She subsequently resided in Edinburgh, London, Ditton-on-the-Thames, and afterwards at Esher, in the same locality. This lady gave early indications of that mental superiority which has rendered her name so distinguished; and the appearance of her first and most popular work, "Thaddeus of Warsaw," in 1803, caused her to be ranked as one of the first novelists of the day. The success which attended this work was unprecedented; it was translated into many of the continental languages; the authoress was elected a lady canoness of the Teutonic Order of St. Joachim; and a relative of Kociusko sent her a gold ring containing a portrait of the Polish hero. Her next work was the "Scottish Chiefs," which was followed by "The Pastor's Fireside," "Duke Christian of Luneburgh," "Tales round a Winter Hearth," and "The Field of Forty Footsteps;" in the composition of the two latter she was assisted by her sister, Maria. Miss Porter was also a contributor to various periodicals. On the death of her mother, in 1831, and within a twelve month after, of her sister Maria, Miss Porter became, as she affectingly says, a wanderer, paying lengthened visits to sundry old friends. In 1842 she accompanied her brother, Sir R. K. Porter, to St. Petersburg, when, on the eve of their return to their native country, he was suddenly carried off by apoplexy. From this period Miss Porter resided with her elder brother, Dr. W. O. Porter, at Bristol, where she died on the 24th May, 1850, in the seventy-fourth year of her age.

ANNA MARIA PORTER, the highly-gifted sister of Miss Jane Porter, was, like her, a native of Durham, and commenced her career as an authoress, when not more than thirteen years of age, by the publication of a cleverly written volume, in 1793, entitled "Artless Tales." This was succeeded by "Walsh Colville," "Octavia," "The Lakes [of Killarney]," "A Sailor's Friendship and a Soldier's Love," "The Hungarian Brothers," "Don Sebastian, or the House of Braganza," "The Recluse of Norway," "The Village of Mariendorpt," "The Fast of St. Magdalen," "Ballads, Romances, and other poems," and "The Barony." She died at the residence of her friend, Mrs. Colonel Booth, Montpelier, near Bristol, on the 21st June, 1832.

Sir ROBERT KER PORTER was born at Durham, in the year 1780, and was descended maternally from two families long connected with the county of Northumberland. In early life he manifested considerable ability in drawing; and although having a strong preference for military life, it was deemed proper to cultivate his talent as an artist, and about the year 1790, he became a student of the Royal Academy, under the auspices of Mr. West. There the rapid success which attended his labours did great credit to his industry and talents. In 1793 he commenced his picture of Moses and Aaron, for the communion table of Shoreditch Church; and in 1794 he presented an altar-piece to the Roman Catholic Chapel at Portsea, representing Christ suppressing the storm; and in 1798 he gave to St. John's College, Cambridge, the altar-piece of St. John Preaching in the Wilderness. At only twenty-two years of age he began his large picture of the Storming of Seringapatam, which was succeeded by two other pictures of the same magnitude—one, the Siege of Acre, and the other, the Battle of Agincourt, which latter was presented to the city of London. In 1808 he was appointed captain in the Westminster Militia; in 1804 he was invited to Russia, and appointed historical painter to the emperor. During his residence at St. Petersburg he gained the affections of the Princess Mary, daughter of Prince Theodore de Sherbatoff, and was about to marry her, when ministerial differences compelled him to leave Russia; in the year 1811, however, the marriage was solemnised. Sir Robert accompanied Sir John Moore into Spain, and shared in the hardships and perils of the campaign which ended in the Battle of Corunna. In 1807 he was created a knight of St. Joachim of Wurtemberg, and on his return to England, in 1813, he received the honour of knighthood from the Prince Regent. From 1817 to 1820 he was engaged in travelling in the east, and during this period he was created a knight of the Lion and Sun of Persia. In the diplomatic and military service of the state he had distinguished himself, having served in both capacities in Russia, in the Peninsula, various parts of the Continent, in Persia, and in South America. He was author of travels in Russia and Sweden, in Persia, Babylonia, &c.; and likewise of an account of the Campaigns in Spain and Portugal, the campaign of 1812 in Russia, &c. In the year 1832 he was created a knight commander of the Hanoverian Order by William IV. He died at St. Petersburg, of apoplexy, on May 3rd, 1842, aged sixty-two years.

Miss ELIZABETH SPENCE, the only child of Dr. Spence, and grand-daughter of the celebrated Dr. Fordyce, was a native of Durham; but becoming an orphan at an early age, she resided in London with her relatives, where she became the friend and associate of many of the leading literary characters of the day. Miss Spence wrote several works, among which we find "Summer Excursions through parts of England and Wales," "Letters from the North Highlands," "Tales of Welsh Society and Scenery," "The Curate and his Daughter," &c. She died at Chelsea, July 27th, 1832, in the sixty-fifth year of her age.

BELMONT DISTRICT PARISH.

This parish, containing about four-fifths of the old parish of St. Giles, in the city of Durham, was formed by order in council, in February, 1852, and contains a population of about 4,000 persons. It comprises New Durham, Ravensflat, Ernest Place, Dragon Villa, Teasdale Terrace, Potter's Row, Dodge Hill, Bell's Villa, Broomside, Carville, the High Grange estate, and a coal pit thereon, the Low or Old Grange estate, and a coal pit thereon, Belmont estate and Railway station; and is separated from the remaining portion of St. Giles' parish by Kepier lane, which runs at right angles to the road leading from Durham to Sunderland. The rateable value is £7,589. The landowners in Belmont are the Marchioness of Londonderry; R. L. Pemberton, Esq.; Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; William Standish Standish, Esq.; the University of Durham; Henry Morton, Esq.; Nicholas Wood Esq.; and the Whitwell Coal Company. The enclosure of the moor entailed various other, but small proprietors. All the tithes of Belmont, about £500 a-year, are impropriated or owned by the first five of the above-named proprietors. The Rev. T. Crossman, B.A., is the first incumbent, appointed by Lord Derby, on the part of the queen. Here is a neat and flourishing school, supported by the incumbent, but endowments are required. The school is inconveniently crowded, and more suitable and commodious buildings are much needed. A church is about to be erected, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen; a reading-room and library has just been established, and great improvements will probably be made in this locality. The Marchioness of Londonderry is lay rector, lady of the manor, and the employer of the chief portion of the inhabitants. Belmont shares the charities of St. Oswald's parish.

Belmont Hall is the property of R. L. Pemberton, Esq., of Barnes. The estate is tastefully laid out with trees, and is likely to undergo some favourable changes and improvements. It is at present occupied by James Y. Jamison, Esq. It adjoins the Belmont Railway Station, which is the junction for the city of Durham, and is distant about two miles.

New Durham is a colliery village in this parish, situated at the head of Gilesgate, on the Sherburn road, and contains about 700 inhabitants. It is supplied with water by the Durham Water Company. Here is a Methodist New Connexion Chapel, a small stone building, erected in 1838.

Ravensflatt adjoins Gilesgate Moor on the south, and is parcel of the lands which were assigned to the deanery of Durham, but now in possession of the warden, masters, and scholars of Durham University.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, situated on Gilesgate Moor, is a substantial stone building, erected by subscription in 1852, at a cost of £250. It is attended by the Durham ministers. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, Carville, is a stone edifice, erected in 1839, and attended by the circuit ministers. The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, commonly called Grange Chapel, and situated at Broomside, is a plain stone building, erected in 1835, at a cost of £150, and rebuilt in 1840, at an expense of £110. It will seat about 250 persons, and is attended by the Durham ministers.

The Maiden's Bower.—On a flat plot of ground between the roads leading to Sunderland on the one hand, and to Sherburn Hospital on the other, a little before their junction, was a raised square platform, anciently called the Maiden's Bower. It was formerly ornamented with a fine cross, which Cockburn, of Ormiston, lord of Kepier, allowed to be removed to Durham Market-Place. Some writers suppose that this platform was the ground-work of the old cross, while others think it was the site of a watch-tower or signal-post, connected with the station at Maiden Castle. Tradition states that the monks of Durham here elevated St. Cuthbert's holy corporal cloth on a spear point during the battle of Neville's Cross.—(For Directory of this parish see City of Durham).

BISHOP MIDDLEHAM PARISH.

This parish, formerly in the north-eastern division of Stockton ward, is bounded on the north by Kelloe, on the north-west by Croxdale chapelry district, on the west by Merrington, on the south-west by Aycliffe, on the south by Sedgfield, and on the east by Sedgfield and Trimdon. It comprises the townships of Bishop Middleham, Cornforth, Thrislington, Mainsforth, and Garmondsway Moor, an extra-parochial place, whose united area is 5,791 statute acres. The population in 1851 was 1,719 souls.

BISHOP MIDDLEHAM is a township and village in the parish of the same name, comprising an area of 2,023 acres, and its annual value is £2,151 8s. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was, 381; in 1811, 391; in 1821, 404; 1831, 387; in 1841, 511; and in 1851, 446 souls. There were at the latter period ninety-eight inhabited, and eight uninhabited houses. The manor of Middleham was the principal residence of the bishops of Durham from the time of the Conquest till the latter part of the fourteenth century. It is mentioned, however, in 1146, as the property of Osbert, nephew of Bishop Flambard, but occurs, both before and after that time, only in the possession of the bishops themselves; and we find many of their charters dated from "the manor of Middleham." In Bishop Pudsey's time, there were, in Middleham and Cornforth, twenty-six villains, seven cottagers, four bordarii, and other tenants, rendering various rents, payments in kind, and services in work. The manor, which includes Sedgfield and Cornforth, still belongs to the see of Durham. The principal land owners are the Hon. G. F. Hamilton Russell, Mrs. Surtees, Miss Hallihead, and Mr. George Wheatley.

The Village of Bishop Middleham is irregularly built on the sides of two declivities and in the valley between them, and is about eight miles south-east from Durham, and two miles from the Ferryhill Station, on the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway. The village contains four public houses, a cornmill, and a few tradesmen's shops. It has a very primitive appearance; several of the dwellinghouses and cottages, with their antique sun-dial in front, bearing marks of great age. The village feast is held annually on Michaelmasday. A halmote court is held once a-year, alternately with Cornforth and Sedgfield. Of the once noble Castle of Middleham few vestiges now remain.

The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, stands upon the hill south of the village, and is supposed to have been erected by Bishop Beck. It is a venerable structure, in the early English style, and consists of nave, chancel, and aisles, with a western bell turret. It was formerly in a very dilapidated state; but by the liberality of Mrs. Surtees, of Mainsforth, widow of the historian of Durham, its restoration has been effected at a cost of upwards of £800. Memorial glass has been placed in some of the windows; and the ancient font, a fine early English font of Frosterly marble, has been removed from an adjacent garden where it had become a "picturesque moss-covered ornament," (?) to its proper place in the church. In the chancel is an elegant monument to the memory of Robert Surtees, Esq., F.S.A., of Mainsforth. It is carved in Roche Abbey stone, from a design presented to Mrs. Surtees by Mr. Blore. The church of Middleham was given to Durham Priory by Osbert, nephew of Bishop Flambard, in 1146, but it was soon afterwards annexed to the Priory of Finchale, by Bishop Robert de Insula, and so continued till the Dissolution. The living, a vicarage in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £4 19s. 2d., is in the patronage of the crown. The vicar is generally entitled to small tithes; excepting that a modus of 6s. 8d. is paid for the hay-tithe of Thrislington, 18s. 4d. for that of Cornforth, and 3s. 4d. for Jackson's Close, in Bishop Middleham. The glebe consists of about 53½ acres. The parish register commences in 1559. Rev. Thomas Henry Yorke, M.A., incumbent.

Charities.—Lady Elizabeth Freville, by will, July 1st, 1680, directed her executors to purchase in the names of eight trustees, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, of the yearly value of £20, or a perpetuity of the same value, to be disposed of by the said trustees in the following manner, viz.—£12 thereof for the yearly binding out of apprentices three poor children from the parishes of Sedgfield and Bishop Middleham; and she directed that out of the remaining £8—2s. should be given yearly to each of sixty of the poorest people within the parish of Sedgfield, and twenty of the poorest people in the parish of Bishop Middleham. She also declared that if the lands purchased should be improved to a greater yearly value than £20, such increase should be bestowed amongst the residue of the poor of the said parishes proportionably. Soon after her death the trustees purchased a copyhold estate in Bishop Middleham, known by the name of the Poor Carrs, and containing upwards of eighty-six acres. The property is let by auction every three years to the highest bidders; and has hitherto been generally let to eight tenants, at rents amounting to above £130 per annum. The rents are received by the trustees; and after payment of sundry small expenses, the sum of £12 is set apart for the apprentices; and the clear residue is divided into four parts, three of which are appropriated to the parish of Sedgfield, and one to that of Bishop Middleham. Pellow's Leazes.—In September, 1742, Anthony Lee, in consideration of £25 4s., assigned to trustees, for the use of the poor of this parish, this parcel of land, in the parish of St. Giles, Durham, containing about an acre. It is now let at a yearly rent of £10, one moiety of which is distributed with Lady Freville's Charity, and the other in a similar manner about Easter. The Hope.—This land, containing one acre, is enclosed with two acres more, allotted to the parish clerk, in 1698; and the whole is let for £8 per annum. Two-fifths of this rent are received and distributed by the churchwardens in the same manner as the rent of Pellow's Leazes. Quit Rents.—The yearly sum of 10s. 6d. is paid by G. R. H. Russell, Esq., of Brancepeth Castle, for two pieces of ground, which were enclosed from the waste many years ago by George Spearman, Esq., upon condition of his paying the above sum for the poor of the township of Bishop Middleham. It is distributed to the poor of this township at Easter, with their share of the two preceding charities. School.—About 1770, a school was built on the waste, and a small piece of ground enclosed as a garden for the master, by subscription. A surplus of £40 remained, which was placed in the hands of the late Robert Surtees, Esq., of Mainsforth, and the interest upon which is paid by Mrs. Surtees. Elizabeth Ambler, by will, dated June 30th, 1828, gave £300 stock in the new four-per-cents to Robert Surtees, Esq., in trust, to pay the whole of the dividends thereon to the master of the above school, towards the instruction of as many of the children of poor parents in reading and writing as the amount would afford, at the usual terms of instruction in the said school. Mr. Surtees having sold out £30 stock to pay the legacy duty, the remaining £270 was held by him in trust for the charity; and Mrs. Surtees pays £10 per annum to the school-master in respect of it. She also contributes £10 per annum on her own account to the school.

Biography.—Robert Oswald, a native of Bishop Middleham, was born in April 1729, and, entering the army at an early age, became a sergeant of Grenadiers in the 58th Regiment of Foot, which was sent to join the army in Nova Scotia, where several severe engagements took place. Having served in Canada under General Wolfe, his regiment was sent to Havannah, and subsequently to Gibraltar. He was shortly afterwards discharged, in consequence of wounds which he had received at various periods, and was one of the three survivors who had originally left England in the grenadier company of the 58th. Some of the vicissitudes which he had undergone were committed by him to paper, and were afterwards printed verbatim et literatim. On one occasion, he says, the French being driven into a town, the British "laid seag to them for 13 weeks night and day Candulating upon them with Cannian and Bumshill." On his discharge from the army, the aged veteran spent the remainder of his days in the quietude of his native village, where he died in September 1822, aged 92 years.

Dr. Samuel Ward was born in this village, and received his education at Cambridge. In 1609, he was appointed master of Sidney Sussex College, and afterwards became archdeacon of Taunton, prebend of Ampleford (York), rector of Much-Munden, Hertfordshire, and held the office of Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity about twenty years. In 1618 he assisted at the Synod of Dort. He died in September 1643.

CORNFORTH is a township and village, comprising 1,689 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 324; in 1811, 327; in 1821, 330; in 1831, 353; in 1841, 700; and in 1851, 1,040. This increase of population is owing to the opening of collieries, particularly in the adjoining township of Coxhoe. The annual value is £2,646 13s. 10d. In Hatfield's survey we find mention made of twelve niefs of the lord, in Cornforth, who had the privilege of erecting a booth at St. Cuthbert's fairs, and contributed the payments and services usual at the period. Richard de Kellaw and Robert Usher were free tenants, and their possessions were afterwards united in the Shaw family. At more recent periods, property was held here by the Hutchinsons, Haswells, and Garthornes,—the two latter of whom are still considerable proprietors. The Bishop of Durham claims the manorial rights and privileges. The township is intersected by three railways, viz., the York, Newcastle, and Berwick; the Clarence; and the Hartlepool Junction; and comprises two corn-mills, a brick and tile manufactory, and a pottery.

The Village of Cornforth, which is irregularly built around a green of several acres in extent, is situated about six miles east of Durham, and two miles from the Ferryhill railway station, and is supposed to derive its name from the Corn Ford to the bishop's manor mill on the beck. Here is a neat school for boys, erected by subscription in 1835, and a girls' school, erected, at the sole charge of Mrs. Surtees, in 1852. They are supported by subscription. Some years ago, divine service was performed every Sunday in the boys' school, but it is now done only on Friday evenings, when the curate of Bishop Middleham attends for that purpose.

MAINSFORTH is a township and hamlet, comprising 627 acres, and its annual value is £492 11s. The population in 1801 was 55; in 1811, 40; in 1821, 44; in 1831, 39; in 1841, 42; and in 1851, 59 souls. From the Boldon Book, we find that Robert de Maynesford held all the lands here in free service, except twenty-six oxgangs, which belonged to the bishop, who obtained them from escheats and by purchase. In Hatfield's Survey, it is stated that the free rent of the vill was 30s. 8d.; and mention is made of William Hancelap, Thomas Smyth, Thomas Walworth, Hugh de Westwyk, and others, as free tenants. We shortly afterwards find the Herdwys the chief proprietors, from whom it descended to Anthony Hebborne, and was forfeited by him in 1569. It was subsequently held by several families, and came at length by purchase into the possession of the Surtees family; the present proprietors are Mrs. Ann Surtees and Captain Robert Smart.

The Hamlet of Mainsforth occupies an open and airy situation, three miles north west of Sedgely, and at about an equal distance between Bishop Middleham and Ferryhill railway station. In its vicinity are what are said to be the remains of a Danish encampment occupied by Gormundus; but Hutchinson controverts this opinion. It is known by the designation of Nable or Marble Hill, and rises to a height of thirty-two feet above the plain below, and seventy-six feet above the Skerne. Its summit is now covered with trees.

Mainsforth House, the property of Mrs. Surtees, widow of the late Robert Surtees, Esq., F.S.A., author of "The History and Antiquities of the County Palatine of Durham," is a good specimen of an English mansion, in which comfort and elegance are happily united.

Biography.—Robert Surtees, Esq., M.A. and F.S.A., was born in the South Bailey, Durham, April 1st, 1779, and received the rudiments of his education at Houghton-le-Spring, under the superintendence of Mr. Fleming. He was afterwards removed to Measden, in Kent, and placed under the care of Dr. Bristow, to be prepared for college. In the October of 1796 he entered as a commoner at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he obtained a high reputation for Greek scholarship; and at the end of his academic course, became a student at the Middle Temple, and read in the chambers of a conveyancer. His father dying before he was called to the bar, Mr. Surtees retired to Mainsforth, and on the 28rd January, 1807, five years after his father's death, he married Anne, daughter of Ralph Robinson, Esq., of Middle Herrington, in the county of Durham. After this important step, Mr. Surtees appears to have settled with greater perseverance to the composition of his history, which he had already commenced, and for completing which he was fitted by a rare combination of qualities. He was a great and rapid reader, often gathering the matter of a page at a glance. It may be mentioned as an instance of the tenacity of his memory, that, when he was one day calling on Bishop Barrington, his lordship asked him if when he had leisure, he would make out the pedigree of some party who happened then to be a subject of interest or curiosity to his host; "Oh," answered Mr. Surtees, "if you will give me a pen and ink I will write it down for you now," and then, without referring to any authorities, at once drew out the pedigree with genealogical accuracy and minuteness. The first volume of his history of Durham was published in 1816, the second in 1820, the third in 1823, and the fourth posthumously, in 1840. Of this work Dr. Robert Southey has said, "No magazine is more miscellaneous in its contents than a book like this before us, which though strictly methodical in its structure, is nevertheless, and of necessity, a farrago in folio. It is to be liked the better, therefore, as King Henry's eldest son in the ballad was, for the heterogeneous legitimacy of his features; especially when, as in the present case, the farrago is brought together by one who is endowed, not only with the erudition and the perseverance required for such an undertaking, but also with such talent and genius as seldom condescend so to be employed; and with a playfulness of characteristic humour which every now and then breaks out like a gleam of sunshine, to cheer his patient labours and excite the reader to a smile when least expected to be so surprised." Before bidding adieu to the history of Durham we may remark that the biographical sketches evince the kindness of the author's disposition, and the pedigrees and descents of property his laborious research, while the notes disclose the luxuriance of his own imagination, together with an extensive cultivation of the polite literature of ancient and modern times. In 1830, Mr. Surtees' health gave symptoms of breaking up; he went on, evidently feeling himself sinking, however, until the January of 1834, on the 27th of which month he returned to Mainsforth from Hendon, near Sunderland, where he had been on a visit. He was suffering apparently from a bad cold, and spoke despondingly of his feelings to Mrs. Surtees, when she received him on his return. After a few days of suffering, symptoms of internal inflammation showed themselves, which medicine was unable to subdue; and this amiable and gifted man expired on the 11th February, 1834, leaving the fourth and last volume of his elaborate work to be published by his friend, George Taylor, of Witton-le-Wear. He was buried, amidst the tears of the surrounding poor, on the 15th February, in the churchyard of Bishop Middleham.

THRISLINGTON township comprises 592 acres, and its annual value is £452 6s. 8d. It is situated on the brink of a hill on the east side of the Little Skerne, about four miles north-west of Sedgfield, and consists of one farm, with five cottages. The population in 1801 was, —; in 1811, 14; in 1821, 14; in 1831, 15; in 1841, 24; and in 1851, 45 souls. In 1262, it was the property of a family that bore the local name, from whom it passed to the Fulthorpes, who, in 1613, disposed of the manor to the Shaws, and it was subsequently transferred to the Robinsons, of Rokeby, who conveyed it to Mr. Hopper, of Durham. It is now possessed by the Rev. Robert Hopper Williamson. In 1822, several human skeletons were discovered in this township, beneath some limestone flags, about half a yard below the surface of the ground, and each protected by rows of round stones at the sides. Some iron lance heads were also found. As the graves were not dug east and west, although disposed so regularly as to forbid the supposition of the parties having fallen in battle, it was conjectured that this had been the family burial place of some early Saxon owner of the soil, before the conversion of his tribe to Christianity.

Thrislington Hall, a substantial stone building, the property of the Rev. Robert H. Williamson above mentioned, is occupied by Mr. Joseph Atkinson.

Directory.—Joseph Atkinson, farmer, Thrislington Hall.

GARMONDSWAY MOOR is an extra-parochial place, embracing an area of 1,040 statute acres, and its annual value is £895. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was, 28; in 1811, 41; in 1821, 35; in 1831, 43; in 1841, 157; and in 1851, 129 souls. In Boldon Book, Garmondsway is stated to have contained nine oxgangs, of which five were in cultivation and four lying waste. Bishop Pudsey endowed Sherburn Hospital with these lands, which still belong to that establishment. It is said that when King Canute performed his pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Cuthbert, he took the route of the via Garmundi, the road or way of Gormundus, the Dane, from whom the township is said to have derived its name.

BRANCEPETH PARISH.

This extensive parish, which was formerly included in the north-western division of Darlington Ward, is bounded on the north by Lanchester and the chapelry of Esh; on the west by Wilton-le-Wear; on the south-west by the chapelry of Crook; on the south and south-east by Croxdale, Merrington, Whitworth, and St. Andrew's Auckland, and on the east by St. Oswald's in the suburbs of Durham. It comprises the townships of Brancepeth, Brandon, and Byshottles, Helmington Row, Stockley, Tudhoe, and Willington, whose united area amounts to 17,011 acres. Its population in 1851 was 3,586 souls. The parish is generally hilly; the sides sloping to the south being fertile and well cultivated, while several of the northern declivities are covered with heather. Great improvements have been effected in this parish under the auspices of the Russell family, by whom extensive tracts have been covered with thriving plantations. The Bishop Auckland branch of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway will traverse this parish, entering it from the west and passing through the townships of Willington, Brancepeth, and Brandon. Brancepeth, of which "Brawn's-path" is considered to be the etymon, is said to have derived its name from a brawn of immense size, which, in ancient times, laid waste the surrounding country.

"He feared not y<sup>e</sup> loute with hys staffe, Ne yet for y<sup>e</sup> Knyghte in hys mayle;
He cared no more for y<sup>e</sup> monk with his boke
Than y<sup>e</sup> fyendis in depe Croix Dale.

Then oute spake Hodge y<sup>t</sup> wyghte soe bolde,
Y<sup>t</sup> wous on Ferie hye,
And he hathe sworne by Seynet Cudberte hys rode

And he hath dygged a depe, depe pitte,
And strewed it with braunches so grene;"

And into this pitfall was the brawn decoyed, and met with an inglorious death from the hand of the puissant Hodge of Ferry, whose mighty prowess was acknowledged by the joyful acclamations of the country people.

BRANCEPETH is a township and village, giving name to the parish in which it is situated, and comprises an area of 4,515 acres. The annual value is £4,046 5s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, 367; in 1811, 455; in 1821, 539; in 1831, 329; in 1841, 352; and in 1851, 370 souls. The estate of Holywell in this township, was held of the Nevilles, in Bishop Hatfield's time, by John Randolph, whose three daughters married William de Elmeden, William Hee, and John Fossour. Thomas Elmeden exchanged his lands in this parish for others in Elmeden, with John de Neville; and they continued in the family of the latter till the attainder. The township of Brancepeth is the property of the Hon. G. F. H. Russell, of Brancepeth Castle, who is also the proprietor of the mines and minerals. Messrs. Straker and Love have extensive collieries here.

The Village of Brancepeth is pleasantly situated four-and-three-quarter miles south-west-by-west from Durham, and has a very picturesque appearance. Near the park gates is a temperance hotel, formerly an inn, in one of whose rooms the crest of the noble family of Neville, the bull's head, is a conspicuous object.

The Church, dedicated to St. Brandon, abbot of Clonfert, in Ireland, is situated south of the village within the park gates, and near the castle. It is a cruciform structure with a lofty western tower, and exhibits several varieties of the Gothic style, from the early English to the perpendicular. The interior decorations are beautiful; the chancel being wainscotted and stalled with oak, richly finished with tabernacle work, and covered by a fine diamond-panelled roof, ornamented with cherubim, shields, and sentences from scripture. Many members of the Neville family were interred here, and there are in the church several tombs, monuments, and inscriptions in remembrance of them. One of the external features distinguishing Brancepeth church, is the sanctus bell turret, an appendage rarely found at the present day. There were formerly two chantries in this church, one dedicated to St. John, and the other to Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the latter of which was founded by Ralph Lord Neville, and Isabel his wife, in 1488, and endowed with £10 a year. They suffered the same fate as the other religious establishments of this country at the time of the Reformation. The burial ground attached to this church having become too small for the requirements of the parishioners, an adjoining plot of ground was consecrated for that purpose, on the 4th October, 1853. The benefice is a rectory in the deanery of Darlington, valued in the Liber Regis at £80 10s. 5d.; and by Hutchinson at £600. The rector is entitled to all tithes; and the gross income is stated at £970, with permanent payments of £159, leaving a net sum of £811, out of which £135 is paid to a curate. Patron, R. D. Shafto, Esq., M.P. Rev. Arthur D. Shafto, rector. The parish register commences in 1599.

The Rectory is a neat modern building, looking over an extensive meadow in front, around which there is a beautiful gravel walk, half a mile in extent, overhung with sycamores, &c.

Brancepeth Castle, the magnificent residence of Frederick John James Hamilton Russell, is situated a little to the south-west of the village of Brancepeth, where it was originally erected by the ancient family of the Bulmers, who were lords of the soil here for many generations until the death of Bertram, the last male representative of the line, when his only daughter, Emma, married Geoffrey Neville, grandson of Gilbert de Neville, who came into England with the Conqueror. With her he received as a dowry the castles and lordships of Sherriff Hutton and Brancepeth. They had issue a son, Henry, and a daughter, Isabella. Henry having joined the barons who resisted the encroachments of the tyrant John, in the seventeenth year of his reign, gave 100 marks to regain the royal favour, and as a security for his loyalty, engaged to forfeit all his possessions, and delivered two hostages, together with this castle to be held at the king's pleasure. He died without issue in 1227, when his estates devolved upon his sister Isabel, who was espoused by Robert Fitz-Meldred, lord of Raby, by whom she had a son Geoffrey, who, in honour of his mother, assumed the surname of Neville. From him sprang that branch, whose principal seat was for many ages at Raby, and whose descendants were Earls of Westmoreland.* In a succeeding generation, the family wealth and honours were again swelled by marriage with Mary of Middleham, the sole heiress of the great Baron Ralph Fitzribald, lord of Middleham. Her grandson, the Peacock of the North,—

He, who in bold prosperity,
Of colours manifold and bright,
Walked round, affronting the day-light—

WORDSWORTH.

appears to have not only been proudly showy, but fiercely bold, for he attacked and slew, on Elvet Bridge, in Durham, Richard Fitz-Marmaduke, as he was riding to open the county courts, as the bishop's seneschal. "He is one of the first," observes William Howitt, "that comes into notice as doing battle on the Marches with the Douglas; for, leading a disorderly band to plunder the Scottish borders, he was met by James Earl of Douglas, and by him slain, at Bewyck Park, in Northumberland. His younger brother, Ralph Neville, who succeeded him, was that Lord Neville who was one of the leaders at the battle of Neville's Cross. He was one of the most distinguished barons of the reign of Edward III. He was appointed by Edward III. a commissioner to settle articles between Edward of England and Edward Baliol; and, next year, was, with Henry Percy, joint warden of the East and Middle Marches. In the same year he was governor of Bambrough Castle, and in the eleventh year of Edward III. again a commissioner in Scotland. In the next year, he lent the king all the money arising from the sale of wool on his manor of Flax Fleet, in Yorkshire. In the following year, still a warden of the Middle Marches, he was in the Scottish war with Edward, and named in commission to treat with David Bruce, titular of Scotland, for a final peace. In the seventeenth year of that reign, he was one of the commission to treat with Philip of Valois. In the twenty-fourth year of Edward, he was commissioned to treat with the Scottish nobles at York; and in the next year at Hexham; warden of the March with Lord Percy in the twenty-sixth; and the next year, a commissioner at Newcastle, to treat for the release of David, king of Scotland. In the twenty-seventh, governor of Berwick, and warden of the Marches from that time to the thirty-fifth of Edward. In thirty-three, he attended the king into France, and about three leagues from Paris placed himself in ambush with Lord Mowbray and other knights, where, after a sharp skirmish, the French were defeated. After these many and great offices and trusts, the victor of Neville's Cross was buried with honours never before conceded to a layman, in the nave of Durham Cathedral, where the mutilated altar-tomb and effigies of himself and lady still exist, betwixt the pillars of the southern aisle.

"The house of Neville had now, through their vast wealth, vigour of character, and favour of the monarch, advanced to the highest power and dignity. There were no names in the north that could compete with the three great ones of Percy, Clifford, and Neville. John Lord Neville, the son of this Ralph Lord Neville, trod in his father's steps. Was in many offices of high trust, as warden of the East Marches, governor of Bambrough, high-admiral of England, lieutenant of Aquitaine, and seneschal of Bordeaux. He is said to have been the builder of the splendid pile of Raby. He attended Richard II. on his expedition into Scotland, with 200 men at arms, and 800 archers. He died at Newcastle in 1388, and lies buried by his father in the nave of Durham Cathedral. His successor was created Earl of Westmoreland by Richard II.; whom, however, he soon deserted, together with Henry, first Earl of Northumberland, and assisted to place Henry of Lancaster on the throne. Henry IV. showered honours on the house of Neville; and on the death of his first wife, Margaret, the daughter of Hugh, Earl of Stafford, the Earl of Westmoreland married the king's half sister, Joan, the legitimatised daughter of John of Gaunt. Thus become brother-in-law to his monarch, created Earl of Richmond and Earl-Marshal for life, with vast estates and equal influence, there seemed no higher state of worldly honour, except monarchy itself, to which he could aspire. He repelled two insurrections against his sovereign, and shared in the glory of the victory of Agincourt, under Henry V. But the prosperity and greatness of the first Earl of Westmoreland did not end here. He had by his two wives, no less than twenty-two children; and became, not only the founder of three great lines by the children of his second wife, the king's sister, but connected his family by the marriages of sons and daughters with all the most celebrated nobility of the kingdom, as Dacre, Scrope, Umfraville, Fauconberg, York, Buckingham, Norfolk, Northumberland, &c. His eldest son by Joan of Lancaster, became Earl of Salisbury, and father of the Earl of Warwick and Salisbury, the famous king-maker Warwick—

Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings.

The splendour and power of this short but mighty line, not only the historian, but Shakspeare, has made us too well acquainted with to render it necessary to do more than allude to it. In the victorious career of Henry V. in France, Warwick and Salisbury, and others of the Nevilles, bore a distinguished part. When Henry VI., in marrying Margaret of Anjou, gave up to her father Reignier, King of Naples, &c., Anjou and Maine, Warwick exclaims—

Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both—
Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer;
And are the cities, that I got with wounds,
Delivered up again with peaceful words?

"In the bloody wars of the Roses he truly set up and pulled down at pleasure; he allied his family with the princes of the blood, and heirs to the throne; and his second daughter, Anne, became, as wife of Richard III., Queen of England. But a fate, as fearful as it had been splendid, swept him and all his away. He and his brother, John Neville, Marquis of Montacute, both fell in the battle of Barnett; his father was beheaded, after the battle at Wakefield; his brother, Sir Thomas Neville, was slain there too. His daughter, Isabel, married the Duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV., and whom Edward put to death in 1477, while their two children both fell by the hand of the executioner; Edward Plantagenet, Earl of Warwick, the last male heir of Plantagenet, beheaded on Tower Hill in the reign of Henry VII. 1499, and Margaret Plantagenet, Countess of Salisbury, also beheaded on Tower Hill, in the reign of Henry VIII. Such was the fatal splendour of the Warwick line of descendants of the great Earl of Westmoreland. His third son, by Joan of Lancaster, George Lord Latimer, transmitted a longer descent, and from his fourth son, by the same royal lady, Edward Neville, Lord Abergavenny, the present nobleman of that name, is lineally descended.

"The elder line maintained their character and dignity as Earls of Westmoreland till the reign of Elizabeth, when the sixth and last earl unfortunately engaged in the celebrated rising of the north, with the Earl of Northumberland;—the destruction of himself, and his house was the consequence. The vast confiscations which followed the suppression of the rebellion, produced a more extensive change in the landed property, within the bishopric, than any preceding revolution since the Norman era. The princely house of Neville was overwhelmed in utter and irretrievable ruin with all its adherents; and the immense forfeitures, the castles of Raby and Brancepeth, with all their train of dependant manors, were vested in the crown. Amongst the neighbouring families whose lives or estates were sacrificed on this melancholy occasion, were those of Swinburn of Cresswell, Tempest of Homeside, other branches of the Nevilles; Claxton of Old Park, Hebborne of Hardwicke, Lambert of Owton, Conyers of Layton, Smith of Nunstainton, Trollop of Thornley, Conyers of Coatham-Conyers, Blackiston, Swinnowe of Durham, Fenwick of South Shields, Claxton of Burnhall, Selwyn of Croxdale, Fenwicke of Brinkburn, Armorer of Belford, Collingwood of Abberwick, Collingwood of Etall, Horsley of Acklington, and many others."

Such were the events that swept away this great and ancient house, and dispersed their widely stretching and various estates into many families. Brancepeth was sold by the crown in the reign of Charles I. to Lady Middleton, Abraham Crosselis, and John Jones, who, in 1636, conveyed it to Ralph Cole, of Newcastle, in trust for his son Nicholas, afterwards Sir

Nicholas Cole, whose son Sir Ralph Cole, in consideration of £16,000, with an annuity of £500 secured to him for life, and £200 to his wife for her life if she survived him, in 1701, conveyed the castle and estates to Sir Henry Bellasyse, who died in 1719, leaving an only son William, upon whose demise, in 1769, the estates devolved upon his daughter, and by her were devised, in 1774, to Earl Fauconberg, who sold them to John Tempest, Esq., having previously advertised the estate, setting forth that it contained 4,000 acres, all of freehold tenure, and that the yearly rental was then £2,134 8s. 4d. It was subsequently purchased by William Russell, Esq., in whose family it remained till January 1850, when, by the death of William Russell, Esq., M.P., without male issue, the estate devolved upon his only sister, Emma Maria, who married in 1828, Gustavus Frederick John James Hamilton, only son of Gustavus, present Viscount Boyne,* and had issue a son and heir Gustavus Russell, born May 28th, 1830; and a daughter, born 1834, but died the day after her birth. This gentleman and his wife assumed, by royal license, in 1850, the name of Russell after that of Hamilton, and the arms of Russell quarterly.

The Old Castle of Brancepeth is said to have been the earliest castellated building in the county, as its foundation is ascribed to the Bulmers, who possessed the estate prior to the Norman Conquest. It is stated to have been strongly fortified and defended by towers, and a moat; but it was nearly all taken down by Matthew Russell, Esq., and the present edifice, which is equal in magnitude and grandeur to any structure in the north, erected on its site. That portion of the old building which was suffered to remain entire, contains several fine apartments, and the Baron's Hall, which is lighted at the sides by stained glass windows, and at the west end by a richly painted window, in three beautiful compartments, representing three distinct views of the battle of Neville's Cross. The other windows contain full length figures of the first Earl of Westmoreland and his countess, and of the Black Prince and Joan Beaufort. These windows were erected in 1821, by Mr. Collins, of London. In this hall there is a fine collection of ancient arms and armour. The other apartments are of a very noble description, and furnished in the most elegant manner. The entrance hall is fitted up with large cushioned oaken seats, whose arms terminate in large well carved boars' heads, in allusion to the local legend of the brawn. Here stands a suit of armour, richly inlaid with gold, said to be the one worn by King David Bruce, at the battle of Neville's Cross. Considerable improvements have been made in the gardens and pleasure grounds, &c.; and the park, which is well stocked with fine deer, was some years ago enlarged, by the addition of upwards of 100 acres of land. In conclusion, we may say in the words of a recent writer, "this noble castle now combines the massive grandeur of the feudal baron with the splendour and luxury of modern refinement."

Brancepeth Colliery, which is worked by Messrs. Straker and Love, is situated south-west of the village; and the pit-houses are in the township of Willington. Large quantities of coke are manufactured here. The produce of this pit, which is shipped at West Hartlepool, is known in the market by the designation "Brancepeth Wallsend."

* This family is a branch of that of Abercorn; Lord Claud Hamilton, created Baron Paisley in 1835, being the common ancestor of both. The first Viscount Boyne distinguished himself in the armies of William III., for whom he raised six regiments, two of which are now known as the Inniskillings. His services were especially remarkable at the battle of the Boyne, and at the siege of Londonderry. He was rewarded with a gift of forfeited lands, and made brigadier-general by that monarch; lieutenant-general by Queen Anne; and raised to the Irish peerage by George I.

Charities.—Hercules Brabant, by will, April 22nd, 1612, gave a yearly rent of 20s. out of his lands at Redworth, to the parish of Brancepeth, besides a like sum to each of the parishes of Staindrop and Heighington, to be distributed to twenty of the most aged and impotent poor people of the parish. This sum, after deducting 1s. for land-tax, is received from the tenant of lands at Redworth, belonging to Robert Surtees, Esq. The churchwarden of Tudhoe also receives 1s. for his trouble, and the residue is divided amongst the poor of the townships of Brancepeth, Brandon, Tudhoe, and Willington. Anna Dobbinson, by will, January 21st, 1662, bequeathed the interest of £66 18s. to the poor of this parish. In 1745, the principal was laid out in the purchase of land in the township of Willington, now let for about £9 per annum. In 1823, the parishioners converted an old cottage on this land into a school-house, the master of which pays a yearly rent of £1 per annum. These sums are annually distributed, in certain proportions, amongst the townships of Willington, Helmington, Crook and Billy Row, Brancepeth, Brandon, Stockley, and Tudhoe.—Henry Grice, of London, left certain property in Hamsterley, the rent of which was to be applied in the purchase of bread, to be distributed to eight poor inhabitants of Brancepeth and four of Stockley, in the parish church every Sunday after divine service. Twenty-four loaves are given away every alternate Sunday to poor persons, in accordance with the expressed intentions of the donor.—Henry Wilson, in 1746, bequeathed £20 for the use of the poor of Tudhoe. Interest is annually paid for this sum, and is devoted to the education of two poor boys of that township.

BRANDON AND BYSHOTTLES give name to a township in this parish, comprising an area of 6,726 statute acres, and of which the annual value is £4,614 11s. The population in 1801 was 522; in 1811, 435; in 1821, 609; in 1831, 478; in 1841, 467; and in 1851, 525 souls. The principal land-owner is the Hon. G. F. H. Russell, to whom also belong the mines and minerals. The township contains two corn mills, a paper mill, and a bleaching mill, besides collieries, which produce coal of excellent quality. Above twenty years ago, the landsale colliery, at Brandon, was worked by what is called a whim-gin; and, instead of the general mode of raising the coal by horses, a bull was employed for the purpose, and seems to have answered extremely well for the quantity required at that time in the district. The pit is at present carried on for landsale by Mrs. Shaw. Since the commencement of the formation of the Bishop Auckland branch of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway, the Hon. G. F. H. Russell has let to Messrs. Straker and Love between 6,000 and 7,000 acres of coal for seassale; and to Messrs. Pease and Co., between 4,000 and 5,000 acres in the western part of his estates. Brandon Colliery and Pit-house Colliery, in this township, are worked by Mr. John Shaw.

The Village of East Brandon is situated on an eminence, three-and-a-half miles west-south-west of Durham. It is irregularly built, and contains a school, four public-houses, and several tradesmen's shops. On the summit of Brandon Hill there is a curious tumulus, of an oblong form, 120 paces in circumference at the base, and about twenty-four feet in perpendicular height; but whether it was erected for a beacon, or covers the remains of some distinguished hero, has not been ascertained, for it has never been opened, and is now covered with a thick plantation of fir. Burnegill, which occupies the south-east angle of the township, anciently gave name to a resident family, and, after the attainder of the Nevilles, became the property of the Hedworths. It is now possessed by the Russells. Hairholm, at the northern extremity of the township, is said to have served as a refuge to some of the murderers of St. Thomas of Canterbury, who fled thither, and afterwards erected a chapel to his memory. Littleburn, an ancient seat of the Calverleys, and, in modern times, of the Doubledays and Reeds, became, some years ago, the residence of W. A. Cunningham, Esq., and is now held by the Hon. G. F. H. Russell.

Biography.—Thomas Tredgold, author of "The Steam Engine," was born at Brandon, but the date has not been ascertained. He was apprenticed to a carpenter in his native village, and worked for five years at his trade, in Scotland, as a journeyman. He afterwards removed to London, where he obtained employment in the office of an architect,—a situation which he held for ten years. During this period, he applied himself to study, and afterwards became celebrated as a writer on science. The following are his principal works:—"Elementary Principles of Carpentry," 1820; "A Practical Essay on the Strength of Cast Iron," 1823; "Principles of Warming and Ventilating Public Buildings," 1824; "A Practical Treatise on Railroads and Carriages," 1825; "Remarks on Steam Navigation," 1825; and his last and most important work, "The Steam Engine," 1827-8. He was also the author of several valuable papers in the Encyclopædia Britannica. He died in the year 1834.

HELMINGTON ROW, a township and village, formerly the property of the Birdons, but now possessed by the Hon. G. F. H. Russell, Henry Spencer, Esq.,

Mr. Thomas Greenwell, Messrs. Straker and Love, George Wilkinson, John Whitfield, and others, contains 1,244 acres, and its annual value is £2,368 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, 121; in 1811, 120; in 1821, 154; in 1831, 97; in 1841, 435; and in 1851, 1,182. This is attributed to the opening of new coal mines. Charles Lyon, Esq., is owner of the mines and minerals of the common, while the other landowners claim those of their own property.

The Village of Helmington Row, which has almost disappeared, was situated about four-and-a-half miles north by west from Bishop Auckland; but several rows of pit-houses have been erected for the workpeople employed in the extensive collieries of Messrs. Straker and Love. The coals, from these pits, are conveyed by the West Durham Railway to the shipping place at Middlesbrough and West Hartlepool.

Mount Pleasant, White Bottom, and Ratton Row, are new and populous villages in this township. The latter joins the village of Crook, at the stream which forms the boundary between this township and that of Crook. Near to it is a beautiful Catholic church, in the second pointed style of Gothic architecture, dedicated to our Blessed Lady Immaculate and St. Cuthbert. The foundation stone was laid on the 8th September, 1853, by the Catholic Bishop of Hexham, and it was opened on the 25th October, 1854. It is situated on the rising ground to the east of the village, and will accommodate about 800 persons. The interior decorations are in keeping with the style of the church. The high altar which is carved in Caen stone, is surmounted with a beautiful stained-glass window of five lights, containing full-length representations of the Blessed Virgin, St. John the Evangelist, St. Luke, St. Augustine, and St. Bernard. The total estimated cost of erection, including schools and presbytery, amounted to about £3,000, which has been raised by individual donations and voluntary subscriptions. Rev. Seton Rooke is the present priest.

STOCKLEY, a township, containing 1,342 acres, is situated about five-and-a-half miles west-south-west of Durham, near the source of the rivulet to which it gives name. Its annual value is £878. In 1801, it contained 89 inhabitants; in 1811, 62; in 1821, 108; in 1831, 57; in 1841, 53; and in 1851, 44. Part of the royalty of Wooley, in this township, belongs to John L. Smith, Esq., of Flass. Stockley appears to have always constituted a portion of the chief manor of Brancepeth. The principal proprietors are the Hon. G. F. H. Russell and Dr. Fenwick. A colliery has been recently opened here, by the owners of Whitworth and Merrington Collieries.

Directory.—The farmers are George Kirton, James Parkinson and Brothers, and George Pattinson.

TUDHOE, anciently Tudhowe, is a township and village, the principal proprietor of which is Marmaduke C. Salvin, Esq. The area of the township is 1,699 acres, and its annual value £1,493 12s. 10d. Its population in 1801 was, 219; in 1811, 292; in 1821, 298; in 1831, 237; in 1841, 327; and in 1851, 400 souls. The Tudhoe Iron Works, situated at the southern extremity of the township, are the property of the Weardale Iron Company, who intend to carry on the works on a very extensive scale, having purchased 120 acres of land for that purpose. The company are erecting houses with considerable expedition, and when the works are complete it is expected they will afford employment to about 1,500 persons.

The Village of Tudhoe, so remarkable for its salubrity, is situated near the source of a brook, one mile south of the Wear, and five miles south-south-west from Durham. It contains several respectable residences, a wholesale wine and spirit establishment, three public houses, the usual tradesmen's shops, and a police station. The Tudhoe District Agricultural Society, established in 1851, has for its objects, to hold meetings for competition in ploughing, hedge-cutting, and draining, at which prizes are awarded to successful competitors; to give premiums for the best-managed farms, to agricultural labourers for bringing up their families without parochial relief, and to those servants who have remained longest in their situations; also to hold shows of horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, poultry, farm produce, farm implements, &c., at which prizes are likewise awarded. Monthly meetings are held in the committee rooms, Tudhoe, for the discussion of subjects connected with agriculture. The Tudhoe Floral and Horticultural Society has its stated shows, and is carried on with great spirit. Both institutions are patronised by many of the neighbouring nobility and gentry. Here is a very good school, which was established several years ago by the principal inhabitants of the township. It is supported by the Rev. E. D. Shafto, M. C. Salvin, Esq., the Weardale Iron Company, and the township. It is well attended, and efficiently conducted by Mr. John Lister.

WILLINGTON, a township and village in this parish, comprises an area of 1,485 acres, and its annual value is £1,732 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, 169; in 1811, 185; in 1821, 221; in 1831, 216; in 1841, 258; and in 1851, it had attained to 965 souls. In the time of Cutheard, the second bishop of Chester-le-Street, this township was given to St. Cuthbert, by one Barnard, a monk, on his admission to the Convent of Durham. The family of Bowes had possession here, which afterwards became united to those of the Nevilles; but, by recent purchases, the last of which is from the Greenwells, the whole, except an estate belonging to Ralph John Fenwick, Esq., is now the property of the Russells, and others. The township includes eight farmsteads, and a large brick and tile manufactory. Willington, otherwise Sunnybrow Colliery, is worked by Messrs. Joseph and John Straker and Joseph Love. There is also a colliery at Page Bank, the royalty of which belongs to Dr. Fenwick of Durham; it is carried on by Messrs. Attwood and Co.

The Village of Willington is situated on the north side of the Wear, and on the line of the great Roman Road, four miles north of Bishop Auckland. It comprises several public-houses and tradesmen's shops, with a number of dwelling-houses and cottages, the latter of which are chiefly situated at the western end of the village, and are inhabited by the workmen employed at the collieries. Here is a chapel belonging to the Methodist New Connexion, erected in 1845. There is also a school, which was opened in October 1851, and will accommodate upwards of 100 children. It is a neat and convenient building, erected by subscription, from designs by Mr. Stratton, on a site given by the Hon. Mrs. Hamilton Russell. In September 1854, the village was visited by the cholera, and 25 of its inhabitants fell victims to the pestilence.

CATHEDRAL AND CASTLE PRECINCTS.—EXTRA PAROCHIAL.

The precincts of the Cathedral and Castle are extra-parochial, not being included in any of the parishes into which the city of Durham is divided. The Castle and Cathedral have been already fully described at pages 131. 159, as well as the public buildings on the Palace Green, and the residences in the College of the various members of the Cathedral establishment.

CROOK PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

Crook parochial chapelry is bounded on the north by the parish of Lanchester, on the north-west by Wolsingham parish, on the south-west and south by the parish of St. Andrew Auckland, on the south-east by the township of Willington, and on the north-east by the townships of Stockley and Brandon. It was formerly a township in Brancepeth parish, but by an order in council, bearing date January 18th, 1846, it was constituted a parochial chapelry. The area of the chapelry is 4,008 acres, and its annual value £6,899 10s. The population in 1801 was, 193; in 1811, 176; in 1821, 228; in 1831, 300; in 1841, 588; and in 1851, the chapelry contained 3,946 inhabitants. This great increase of population is attributed to the opening of new coal mines. The township of Crook and Billy Row was formerly a member of the manor of Brancepeth. By an act of parliament, passed in 1764, the common attached to this township, and containing upwards of 1,500 acres, was divided amongst those persons who had the right of common, in proportion to their rental. Provision was at the same time made for the preservation of the manorial rights to the lord of the manor, and of the royalties to Farrer Wren, Esq. The principal proprietors at present are the Russells of Brancepeth; R. D. Shafto, Esq., M.P. of Whitworth; George H. Wilkinson, Esq.; Ralph Walters, Esq.; and others. A large portion of the township is occupied by "Pease's West Collieries," which produce excellent coking coal, known in the market as "Pease's West." There are numerous coke ovens, and many others are in course of erection. The coals and coke are transmitted by the Stockton and Darlington Railway, which here consists of four lines of rail, to the various depôts on the line, and to the drops at Middlesborough: some are also sent by Darlington to the York and North Midland lines, for the interior of the country. The Messrs. Pease have also established an extensive fire-brick manufactory, in which steam power has been introduced to expedite the operations. The township is intersected by the Crook branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, which has a station at the village.

The Village of Crook is situated five-and-a-half miles north-north-west of Bishop Auckland, and ten miles south-west-by-west of Durham, a portion of it extending into the township of Helmington Row, in the parish of Brancepeth. It was formerly of little importance, but of late years it has risen rapidly, in consequence of the extensive collieries of Messrs. Bolckow and Vaughan, and J. Pease, Esq., in the immediate neighbourhood, and now contains twelve inns, several public-houses and beer-shops, with the mechanics' and tradesmen's shops necessary for the supply of a numerous and industrious population. A police station, with a lock-up attached, was erected in 1853.

The Church, situated near the eastern extremity of the central area of the village, is a neat Gothic structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with a bell turret at the western gable, and was erected in 1840-3. It is dedicated to St. Catharine, and will accommodate upwards of 400 persons. The living is endowed with an ecclesiastical grant of £60 per annum, and the tithes, which, in 1850, were valued at £68, but have now declined to about £65 per annum. There is no glebe house, though an offer of a grant of £300 has been made for that purpose, without having as yet been responded to. Patron, R. D. Shafto, Esq., M.P. The Rev. W. Sandford is incumbent.

Here are two chapels belonging respectively to the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. The latter is a fine commodious edifice; erected by subscription in 1847, and possesses sittings for about 400 persons. Attached to it are day and Sunday-schools, which are well attended. A new Catholic church has been recently opened in the adjoining township of Helmington Row.

The Parochial School, a neat and convenient building, was erected a few years ago by subscription, to which Messrs. Pease and Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan, and Co., liberally contributed. It is generally well attended, and is under the superintendence of a master and mistress. The Roman Catholics and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, have day and Sunday schools attached to their respective places of worship, and there are also private schools.

The Crook Mechanics' Institute was founded in 1848, and the present building was erected in 1851, at a cost of upwards of £200. It possesses the usual appliances of similar institutions, classes, lectures, and a library, the latter containing between 500 and 600 volumes.

The Hamlet of Billy Row is situated about a mile north from Crook. A new school house is now in course of erection here, the foundation stone having been laid, on July 2nd, of the present year, 1855, by Joseph Pease, Esq.

Woodyfield Collieries, the royalty of which belongs to George H. Wilkinson, Esq., are on the west of the village, and are carried on by Messrs. Bolckow, Vaughan, and Co. Whitelee and Old Roddymoore Collieries are the property of Ralph Walters, Esq.

Charities.—For charities see Brancepeth parish.

CONVEYANCE, per the Stockton and Darlington Railway, from the Railway Station at Crook.—Robert Kipling, station master.

CROXDALE CHAPELRY DISTRICT.

This district, comprising the townships of Hett and Sunderland Bridge, formerly belonging to the parishes of Merrington, and St. Oswald respectively, with a small portion of the townships of Elvet and Ferryhill, was formed by an order in council, bearing date June 10th, 1843. It is bounded on the north by the river Wear, on the north-west and west by Brancepeth parish, on the south by the road which divides the townships of Hett and Ferryhill, in the parish of Merrington, and on the south-east and east by the parishes of Kelloe and Bishop Middleham. The population of this district in 1851, was 438 souls. Croxdale, Butterby, and Southern Closes, are in Shincliffe constabulary, where they pay queen's taxes and county rates, but join with Sunderland Bridge in payment of poor and church rates.

HETT, a township and village formerly included in the parish of Merrington, was attached to that of Croxdale, in June, 1843. The township comprises an area of 1,256 acres, and its annual value is £1,021 11s. 8d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, 157; in 1811, 178; in 1821, 238; in 1831, 227; in 1841, 234; and in 1851, 234 souls. Hett was anciently held of the convent of Durham by a family bearing the local name, which failed in male issue during the episcopacy of Bishop Skirlaw. The greater portion of the land is still held under the dean and chapter by leasehold tenure; but the Salvins, Lord Boyne, and others, have freeholds here. There is a paper-mill at Thinford Beck, a good freestone quarry at Broom Hill, and a colliery at the south end of the village.

The Village of Hett is pleasantly situated about four miles south of Durham, and possesses a green of some acres in extent.

SUNDERLAND BRIDGE is a township and village containing 1,376 acres, and its annual value is £1,727. 3s. 7d. The population of the township in 1801 was, 250; in 1811, 224; in 1821, 204; in 1831, 288; in 1841, 262; and in 1851, 204 souls. The manor of Sunderland-by-the-Bridge belonged to William de Kilkenny in 1321, and a moiety of it afterwards passed to the Nevilles, and from them to the Hotouns; it is at present possessed by the Salvins of Croxdale. The Salvins of this township are descended from Anthony, eighth son of Gerard Salvin, of Croxdale, who died in 1663.

The Village of Sunderland Bridge occupies a pleasant situation on the ridge of a steep hill, between the river Wear and the Croxdale water, about three-and-a-quarter miles south by west of Durham; and contains two public houses and a few tradesmen's shops. There is a commodious school on the south side of the churchyard. A skirmish took place near this village on the morning of the day of the battle of Neville's Cross, between the English troops and the Scots under Douglas; the latter of whom having been foraging at Ferry-on-the-hill, fell in with the main force of the advancing English, and fled fighting and retreating till he lost 500 of his best men near this place. The Wear is here crossed by a handsome bridge of four arches.

The Church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a handsome structure in the Norman style, consisting of nave, chancel, and western tower, and is situated at the western extremity of the village of Sunderland Bridge. In aid of the erection of the church, a grant of £50 was obtained from "The Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels," and also a grant of £50 from "The Durham Diocesan Church Building Society." The church contains 182 sittings, of which number 142 are free, and the remainder appropriated. The living is a perpetual curacy, a peculiar belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham. It is not in charge nor certified, consequently pays no first-fruits or tenths. The parish register commences in 1690. The dean and chapter have endowed Croxdale Chapelry with a portion of Burn Hall tithes, annual value, £80; fee simple, £2,400; grant towards building and parsonage, £100; tithes of Hall, annual value, £114 5s.; fee simple, £3,427 10s. Rev. Henry Chaytor, incumbent.

Butterby, or as it was formerly written, Beutrove, an ancient manor formerly included in St. Oswald's parish, but attached to this district on its formation in 1848, is pleasantly situated on a sequestered peninsula formed by the Wear, about two miles south of Durham. It was, soon after the Conquest, in the possession of a Norman family, name D'Audre; but we find it, in 1240, possessed by the Lumleys, from whom it passed by purchase to Christopher Chayton, Esq., in 1566. It was afterwards the property of the Doubledays, from whom it was transferred to the Wards of Sedgfield, with the exception of one moiety of the salt springs and salt mines, which were reserved to John Doubleday and his heirs. It has since become the property of the Salvins of Croxdale, with the exception of the mines just named, which belong to Mr. Thomas Doubleday, of Newcastle. The site of the manor house occupies a low and retired situation, near the banks of the Wear, and is encompassed by a moat, which has been drained, and is now a wet ditch overgrown with rank vegetation. In cleansing the moat some years ago a stone trough, containing a coat of mail and other armour, was discovered; and, in an adjoining field, in which an ancient hospital dedicated to St. Leonard, is supposed to have stood, many stone coffins and other antiquities have been dug up. There were formerly several springs at Butterby, but owing to the opening out of collieries in the neighbourhood, they have now entirely disappeared.

Croxdale.—We find that this manor was granted to Walter de Robiry in 1299. It was afterwards the property of John de Denum, who granted it for life to Richard de Routhbury, by the service of a rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. It afterwards was held by the Whattons and Tirwhits, and in the beginning of the fifteenth century came into the hands of the Salvins, with whom it has since remained.

Croxdale Hall, the seat of Gerard Salvin, Esq., is a spacious mansion, occupying an elevated situation on the banks of the river Wear, and commands a fine prospect towards the south-west; the pleasure grounds, with the adjacent woods and plantations, are laid out with great taste. Round their western extremity flows a small rivulet, whose chanel is a romantic dell, so deep and narrow that the sun's rays are excluded nearly throughout the year; and this circumstance, in ancient times, gave rise to the idea that it was the abode of evil spirits, which probably gained credit from its being the resort of robbers and other lawless persons. To banish the infernal inhabitants a cross was erected; and Croixdale became the name of the adjacent lands. The Roman Catholic chapel attached to the hall, was erected by the late William Thomas Salvin, Esq., and consists of nave and chancel, with a gallery in the west end. The windows are of stained glass, and in the chancel there is a handsome marble tablet in memory of the founder. The chapel, which will accommodate about 200 persons, is much too small for the congregation. The Catholic School is held in what was formerly the parochial chapel of the district, but being in a somewhat dilapidated state from its great age, and being too small for the congregation, it was determined to erect a new one on an enlarged scale, and in a more convenient situation. This was finally effected by an exchange of land between Gerard Salvin, Esq., and the dean and chapter of Durham. On the completion of this exchange, the old chapel became the property of Gerard Salvin, Esq., since which time, it has been devoted to its present use. It is an humble primitive-looking building, consisting of a nave and chancel, divided by a heavy circular arch. The priest, the Rev. John Smith, resides at the Old Hall, which is pleasantly situated east of the village.

Biography.—The Rev. Hugh Salvin was born in June, 1778, and being intended for the medical profession was placed at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.B., in 1795. Owing, however, to an extreme sensitiveness, which he felt would prove a hindrance to the discharge of his professional duties, he abandoned medicine, and, turning his mind to divinity, he subsequently entered into holy orders. About the year 1808, he became curate of Gateshead, which position he occupied for many years. In 1824, he was appointed chaplain to H.M.S. Cambridge, which vessel was stationed off the coast of Chili and Peru during the struggle between Spain and her South American colonies. After his return to England, he printed, at Newcastle, in 1829, his very intelligent and interesting "Journal written on board H.M.S. Cambridge, from January, 1824, to May, 1827." He subsequently visited the shores of Italy and Greece, and in 1841, the governors of Greenwich Hospital presented him with the vicarage of Alston, in the county of Cumberland, and diocese of Durham. He effected much good in this parish, where he soon acquired the esteem of the inhabitants. Bishop Maltby, some time before Mr. Salvin's death, proposed to make him an honorary canon of Durham; but in consequence of age and increasing infirmities this offer was declined. He died suddenly, September 28th, 1852, in the eightieth year of his age.

ESH PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by Witton Gilbert, on the west by the parish of Lanchester, on the south by that of Brancepeth, and on the east by St. Oswald's parish. This chapelry is dependent upon the parish of Lanchester, and includes an area of 3,016 acres. The annual value is £2,171 15s. Population in 1801, 276; in 1811, 383; in 1821, 470; in 1831, 486; in 1841, 518; and in 1851, 642 souls. Esh anciently gave name to a resident family who possessed lands here for many generations, but the male line becoming extinct in the reign of Henry VIII., the estate passed by marriage to the Nortons and Smythes, with the latter of whom it still remains; Sir Edward Joseph Smythe, Bart., of Acton-Burnall, in the county of Salop, being the present proprietor. There are two landsale collieries in this township.

The Village of Esh is situated about five miles west-north-west of Durham, and commands an extensive view to the north and west over a wide, well cultivated valley. The central area of the village contains a stone cross, bearing the inscription "I.H.S." and the date, "1687."

The Church is a small structure dedicated to St. Michael, and, having been completely re-edified a few years ago, is now in a good state of preservation. It consists of a nave and chancel, with a south transept, and contains some beautiful specimens of stained glass. That in the east window representing the Offering of Isaac, the Presentation in the Temple, and Christ Blessing the Children. The side lights of the chancel contain representations of the Crucifixion and Ascension. The church will accommodate about 150 persons. The benefice is a curacy not in charge, of the certified value of £6 13s. 4d., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. The register of this chapelry commences in 1799. At the dissolution, a small pension was reserved for this living, which has since received augmentations from Lord Crewe's trustees and Queen Anne's bounty. In 1835, it was stated to be worth £85 per annum; and the dean and chapter have since added Underside Farm, value £40; from other sources, the annual value is increased to £190. The prebend of Esh was part of the dissolved collegiate church of Lanchester; and the tithes of corn and hay were granted by the crown to Edmund Dodding, and Miles Downing, gents. These tithes have passed through various hands to the Smythes, who have again disposed of several portions of them. Rev. Temple Chevallier, incumbent.

The Parsonage, a handsome structure, erected in 1852, is on the declivity of a lofty hill, and commands an extensive prospect of the surrounding country.

A School-house and a dwelling for the teachers, were erected in 1836; and towards its support the Diocesan Society contributes £20 per annum, the Bishop of Durham £10, and the Ven. Archdeacon Thorpe £1. The salary of the teachers is fixed at £60 per annum; and the children pay 2s. 6d. per quarter; but as the whole income is insufficient to meet the expenses, the deficiency is made up by the incumbent, who also supplies books for the children. John Lambert, teacher.

St. Michael's Catholic Church is situated near the village, upon a site given by the late Sir Edward Smythe, Bart., and will accommodate about 300 persons, Very Rev. William Canon Thompson, priest.

St. Michael's Catholic Schools, situated near the parish church, were erected in 1851, and are capable of containing 126 children. Sir Edward Smythe, Bart., gives £20 per annum towards the support of the schools. Matthew Fewell and Martha Fewell, teachers.

Esh Hall, formerly a seat of the Smythes, is now much dilapidated, and occupied as a farm house. Flass Hall, the seat and property of John Leadbitter Smith, Esq., occupies a low and sequestered situation near the Dearness, and was formerly possessed by the Brasses, Johnsons, and Halls. Hamsteel was annexed to this chapelry in 1833, having previously belonged to the parish of Lanchester. Blackburn was anciently the estate of the Carlises, and was transferred by marriage to the Thirkelds in 1488, from whom it passed to the Wranghams in the reign of Elizabeth.

Ushaw is a village in this township, situated about three-quarters of a mile from Esh, and chiefly remarkable as being the seat of the splendid Roman Catholic College of St. Cuthbert. Middlewood, or Ushaw Moor, containing about 600 acres, was enclosed and divided, in accordance with the provisions of the act 2 George III. 1760. A hamlet, called Hill Top, of recent erection, is principally occupied by tradesmen employed by the students of the college.

The College of St. Cuthbert dates its origin from the year 1794, when a few English Catholic students, who had been driven from Douay by the excesses of the French revolution, assembled under the presidency of the Rev. Thomas Eyre, at Crook Hall, in the parish of Lanchester. Previous to this time, the Catholics of England were compelled to seek on the continent an education which was denied them at home, except they gave up their religion; and the greater number were accustomed to study at Douay, in French Flanders, where a college had been founded by Cardinal Allen, in 1568. It was the first college in the world that was founded in strict accordance with the decrees of the Council of Trent; and of the numerous priests which it sent to England, no less than 160 perished on the scaffold under the old penal laws, besides others without number who died either in prison or exiles from their native country. The College of Douay being seized by the army of the French Republic, in 1793, the professors and students, with the exception of a few who had made their escape, were arrested and conveyed to the fortress of Dourlen in Picardy. The number seized amounted to forty-five; but of these, nineteen managed to escape, and arrived safely in England, where they resumed their academic studies as above related. On the liberation of the remaining twenty-six, after the fall of Robespierre, they joined their companions at Crook Hall; but the number of students rapidly increasing, Dr. Gibson, the Catholic bishop of the district, conceived the design of founding a college on a larger scale; and, with the assistance of the Catholic clergy and laity, he was enabled to purchase a small estate at Ushaw, containing 300 acres, and here was erected the present college, which was commenced in 1804, but was not completed till 1819. The community, however, had taken possession in 1808.

The College occupies an eminence, overlooking the valley containing the village of Wilton-Gilbert and the ruins of Beaufort, and commands an extensive prospect of the surrounding country. It is a large quadrangular building of stone, measuring 180 feet in length from east to west, and 230 feet from north to south. The south front is flanked on the west by a beautiful church, and on the east by a fine library, in a corresponding style of architecture, and giving to the front elevation a length of about 470 feet. The buildings of the College enclose an extensive court, around which is a spacious cloister, forming a suitable promenade during wet weather. The walls and pillars are ornamented with numerous paintings, &c. The College will accommodate upwards of 170 students, besides professors. The refectory, or dining-room, is a fine apartment, sixty-one feet in length by thirty-seven in breadth, and contains portraits of several of the founders, presidents, patrons of the College, and other distinguished persons. The exhibition hall, where the academical examinations, &c., take place, is a large and highly decorated apartment, with a roof of oaken frame-work of the most superb character; the pillars, beams, and pendants being finely carved. There is a spacious gallery for spectators. The library is entered from the south-east angle of the cloisters, by a noble staircase, and is a large and lofty room, elegant in its architectural details, and ornamented with some beautiful windows filled with stained glass. The books, nearly 20,000 in number, are arranged in classes, on shelves attached to projecting partitions, between each of which is a table and seats for the use of the students.

The Church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, was erected in 1844-47, and is one of Pugin's architectural gems. It consists of an ante-chapel, a choir, and sanctuary; its exterior is simple in design, and well suited to the situation which it occupies. There is a bell turret at the north-east angle, seventy feet high; but it is intended to erect a lofty tower and spire, on the north side of the church. The cloisters are entered from the College by a deeply-moulded arched doorway, and continues round the west wall of the great sacristy, and so along the north wall of the choir to the arched entrance on the north side of the ante-chapel, which is fifty-five feet long by twenty wide. The roof of this chapel is enriched with the arms of the benefactors to the chapel, emblazoned in their proper colours. The western window is filled with beautiful stained glass, representing the various incidents in the life of St. Cuthbert. The other windows are also of stained glass, but our limited space precludes us from noticing them more particularly. The Lady Chapel is on the south side of the choir, and possesses a screen, altar, and reredos of Caen stone of the most elaborate workmanship. The vestments for the use of this chapel are of the most costly description. There are two stained glass windows in this chapel, on one of which is depicted the Annunciation, and on the other the Coronation of the Blessed Virgin. Near the altar lies a richly illuminated liber vite, in which the names of benefactors are written. A stone rood-screen separates the ante-chapel from the choir. It is divided into three compartments, and, as is customary in monastic and collegiate churches, contains two altars, dedicated in honour of St. Gregory and St. Bede. On the rood left is a splendid organ, by Bishop, of London, which is divided into two compartments, in order that the view of the west window from the choir may not be obstructed, and also to admit of the erection of the rood in the centre. The choir is upwards of fifty feet in length by twenty-seven in breadth, and is furnished with stalls, &c. The roof is panelled, and covered with gilt monograms and emblems. Two large wrought iron coronæ for lights are suspended from the roof. The choir is lighted by four windows on each side, filled with stained glass, and representing incidents from the Old and New Testaments, with figures of saints, &c. The sanctuary extends twenty feet beyond the choir, and is paved with beautiful encaustic tiles. The ceiling is panelled, and ornamented with the figures of angels bearing scrolls, upon which are inscribed verses from the Gloria in excelsis, and Te Deum. On the south side are the sedilia, a stone credence, and a double saccharium. The great east window fills the entire end of the sanctuary, and is filled with the richest stained glass, which sheds over the choir a beautiful softened and ever-varying light. The subject represented on this magnificent window is the vision described by St. John in the book of Revelations, where he describes "a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and tribes, and tongues, standing before the throne." The figures intended to represent a portion of that great and glorious multitude, comprise the Blessed Virgin, patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, confessors, virgins, holy monks and abbots, popes, cardinals, bishops, kings, queens, abbesses, &c. Beneath this splendid window are the altar and reredos, of Caen stone, beautifully carved with representations of Our Lord's passion. Two curtains of rich brocade are suspended on each side of the high altar, before which hangs a silver lamp of elegant design and workmanship. Near the altar is kept the liber vite, a rich-bound quarto manuscript volume, profusely decorated and illuminated, in which are registered the names of the benefactors to the church. The great sacristy is on the gospel side of the sanctuary, and there is another for the more rare articles of church furniture. Two beautiful chapels have been lately fitted up, and are joined by a cloister to the original structure.

The course of education pursued in the College comprises, in addition to the most careful and unremitting instruction in all matters relating to religion, a thorough tuition in the various branches of arithmetic, grammar, elocution, geography (ancient and modern), physical geography, history (sacred and profane), ecclesiastical history, the Greek and Latin classics, modern languages, archæology, ethnography, music, rhetoric and poetry, geometry and the higher mathematics, chemistry, natural philosophy, metaphysics, and ethics; together with a full course of theology, dogmatic and moral, and of scripture and canon law. The mode of admission is by application to the president; and the pension, exclusive of a few extras, is £50 per annum. President—the Very Rev. Monsignor Charles Newsham, D.D.

FERRYHILL DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, comprising the townships of Chilton and Ferry Hill, was separated from the parish of Merrington, to which they formerly belonged, by an order in council, bearing date 15th July, 1843. It is bounded on the north by portions of the parish of Brancepeth and the chapelry district of Croxdale, on the west by the township and parish of Merrington, on the south by portions of the parishes of Aycliffe and St. Andrew Auckland, and on the east by Bishop Middleham parish. It comprises an area of 4,834 statute acres, and the number of inhabitants in 1851 was, 1,033.

CHILTON is a township containing 2,338 acres, and its annual value is £4,319 15s. The population in 1801 was, 176; in 1811, 711; in 1821, 182; in 1831, 168; in 1841, 189; and in 1851, it had increased to 977 souls. The rent charge in lieu of corn tithes is paid to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of England, and the rent charge in lieu of vicarial tithes is paid to the vicar of Merrington. The tenure of the land is freehold, with the exception of Chilton Grange Farm, and Thrundle, whose united area is about 200 acres.

The Village of Great Chilton, situated about two miles south-east of Ferryhill, was successively the property of the Herons, the Bowes of Dalden, the Blackistons, and the Halls of Newsham. A moiety of the manor was conveyed by the latter family to John Jeffrayson, Esq., and John Morland, Esq., by whom it was transferred to John, Lord Bishop of Durham, who settled it upon his daughter, Dame Mary Gerard, subject to the following charges:—"To the master and fellows of Peter House, Cambridge, £58 per annum; to the master and fellows of Caius and Gonville College, £28 per annum; to the poore and impotent sick in the hospital on the Palace Green, in Durham, £70 per annum; and to the keeper of the Bishop's Library on the Palace Green, twenty marks, or £13 6s 8d. per annum." The estate afterwards passed to the Greenwells and Duuns. The other portion of this village passed from the Blackistons, through the Wildes and Milbankes, to Christopher Mason, Esq., and the Rev. Robert Waugh. The portion of the latter was sold by him to Sir H. V. Tempest, Bart. The estate of Great Chilton is now the property of John D. Lambton, Esq. The village at present consists of a cluster of cottages and an ordinary farm house.

Little Chilton, a colliery village near the Ferryhill railway station, anciently gave name to a knightly family, and tradition says it was the property of the De la Poles. It was subsequently the property of the Emersons, one of whom sold it to Edward Cropley, Esq., in 1619, and it afterwards passed to the Micklethwaites. It now belongs to John E. Dennison, Esq., M.P., of Assington, Nottinghamshire, and Edward Wilkinson, Esq. Little Chilton Farm is occupied by Messrs. Robert and Christopher Wilkinson. Little Chilton Colliery, the royalty of which belongs to John E. Dennison, Esq., M.P., is carried on by a company bearing the local name, and commenced working about 1843. It affords employment to near 400 persons, who reside in the immediate vicinity. The coals are transmitted for shipment at the West Hartlepool Docks, by the West Hartlepool Harbour and Railway Company. The Ferryhill and Little Chilton Colliery Mechanics' Institute was established at the latter place in 1850, principally by Mr. Thomas Barrass, the resident agent. The library contains upwards of 700 volumes in the various departments of literature, which has been accumulated at a cost of upwards of £100. Lectures upon scientific subjects have been from time to time delivered. Chilton Hall, the residence of the late C. Mason, Esq., is at present (1855) unoccupied.

FERRYHILL is a township and village in the parish of the same name, of which the principal proprietors are Mrs. Surtees of Mainsforth, Marmaduke C. Salvin, Esq., of Burn Hall, and the representatives of the late Thomas Arrowsmith, Esq. The area of the township is 2,495 acres, and its annual value £4,801 7s. In 1801, there were 507 inhabitants; in 1811, 507; in 1821, 574; in 1831, 591; in 1841, 850; and in 1851, 958. Ferryhill is a member of the manor of Merrington. In ancient times, the church of Durham had a court house here, as also a chapel dedicated to St. Ebbe and St. Nicholas, and a wood, marsh, swannery, and fish-pond; the latter being situated in the valley of the Skerne towards, Mainsforth. The North Skerne has its source in the marsh which separates Ferryhill Wood from Thrislington. During the formation of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway through this township, a large number of fossil fishes were found imbedded in the limestone rock, near the farmstead called the Swan House, at least seventy feet below the surface of the hill. On a hill near the farmstead of Cleve's Cross, is an old grey stone supposed to be the remains of a cross said to have been erected on the spot where Roger de Fery conquered the brawn of Brancepeth. (See page 229). The township is the property of the Misses Arrowsmith, C. M. Salvin, Esq., George Pickering, Mr. Robert Todd, of Low Spennymoor, Mrs. Wilkinson, of Little Chilton, and others. The mines and minerals belongs to the dean and chapter of Durham and the other freeholders.

The Village of Ferryhill is large and well built, occupying a lofty ridge about six-and-a-half miles south of Durham, and, from its elevated position commands extensive views of the surrounding country. It contains some respectable residences, several inns, the principal of which are the Black Bull and the Red Lion, a brewery, a steam mill, a number of workshops, and the usual houses of business. A portion of the central area is occupied by the village pond.

The Church, dedicated to St. Luke, is an elegant structure in the early English style, erected in 1853, from a design by the late Mr. G. Pickering, of Durham, and consists of nave and chancel, with a neat western turret containing two bells. The arch, over the entrance porch, as well as that between the nave and chancel, is supported by sculptured corvets. The church is well lighted, and seated with open stalls, affording accommodation for nearly 300 persons. The living is in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, who gave towards the purchase of land for the house, &c., £300; grant in augmentation, £100; also Ferry Hill rent charge, &c., annual value £276 2s. 6d. Rev. David Bruce, M.A., is the present incumbent.

The Parsonage, a neat building in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1816, is situated south of the church.

The National School is a spacious stone building, with arched windows divided by stone mullions. The dean and chapter of Durham gave the ground for the school, and the teacher's house and garden; and the erection was carried out by the incumbent of the chapelry, aided by a grant from the Committee of Council on Education.

At the railway station at Rudd's Hill, on the road which there forms the boundary between the townships of Ferry Hill and Chilton, a neat village has sprung up within the last few years. Formerly the only building was an inn, but now there are two substantial rows of cottages—one on each side of the road—and consequently in the townships of Ferry Hill and Chilton, this village bears the name of Ferry Hill Station, and comprises the railway station, from which its name is derived, the post office, three respectable inns, and the cottages above mentioned.

Low Spenny Moor, in the north-western extremity of this township, is rapidly becoming a populous village, in consequence of the extensive iron works that have been recently established in the immediate neighbourhood by the Weardale Iron Company. The erection of houses is constantly going on, and the village already contains several good grocers' and other shops.

Charities.—This chapelry participates in the charities of Merrington parish (which see), and in addition has the following peculiar to itself.—Biewes left £1 per annum for ten poor widows of Ferry Hill township. This sum is paid every year by the tenant of an estate in the township, and is distributed, in accordance with the intentions of the donor, soon after Easter. Elizabeth Buston left £5 to the poor of Ferry Hill, the interest of which, 5s., is paid yearly to the churchwardens, who distribute it along with the other charities. The Rev. Mr. Simons, in 1739, left £3 15s. to the poor of Ferry Hill. It is supposed to have been expended in the purchase of five cottages, now occupied by paupers. The same gentleman also left £3 15s. for the poor of Chilton township. This sum, with £6 5s. derived from other sources, are now in the hands of the representatives of Christopher Mason, Esq., who pay 10s. a-year interest, which is distributed with the Chilton share of the charities.

CONVEYANCE from Ferry Hill Station, at Rudd's Hill, per the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway—William Cowburn, station master.

PITTINGTON PARISH.

This parish was formerly bounded on the north by Houghton-le-Spring, on the west by the parishes of St. Oswald and St. Giles, in the suburbs of Durham, on the south by Kelloe, and on the east by Easington. It included the three constaberies of Pittington, Elemore, and Hetton-on-the-Hill; Shadforth and Ludworth, and Sherburn. By an order in council, bearing date May 8th, 1841, it was ordered that the parish of Pittington be for the future divided into two separate parishes for ecclesiastical purposes; the one part, containing the township of Pittington and the north-western portion of the township of Sherburn, to remain attached to the old church; the other part, comprising the remaining portion of the township of Sherburn and the whole of Shadforth township, to be assigned to the new church of Shadforth, and to be called "St. Cuthbert's District," Shadforth.

The township of Pittington comprises an area of 2,552 acres, and its annual value is £6,096 8s. 4d. The population in 1801 was, 220; in 1811, 277; in 1821, 304; in 1831, 1,632; in 1841, 2,295; and in 1851, 2,530 souls. This great and rapid increase is attributed to the progress of the collieries in the district. This township is said to derive its name from the Pidding Brook, which rises near Moorsley, and flowing southerly, joins Sherburn Water, and falls into the Wear at Old Durham. It abounds with coal and lime; and nearly all the lands are leasehold under the dean and chapter of Durham. Pittington was annexed to the church of Durham by Bishop Carileph, and, after the dissolution, was granted to the Cathedral. The tithes of North Pittington were assigned to the first stall, those of South Pittington to the fourth, and a portion of the manor, including the Prior's Hall, to the tenth. The remainder of the lands were let on leases; the principal portion, the Hallgarth estate, was first granted, in 1559, to Christopher Morland, whose grandson, Sir Henry Anderson, Knt., held it in 1617, and we find that a lease of it was granted in 1626 to Ralph Simpson, gent. During the Commonwealth, the tenants here were induced to buy the reversions, at about eight years' purchase, from the Commissioners of the Long Parliament; but, at the Restoration, the purchases were set aside, and the lessees, who never received any of their money back, were obliged to pay for renewing their leases as before. In 1671, the estate was transferred by marriage from the Simpson family to the Shipperdsons, with whom it has since continued. The principal landowners at present are the dean and chapter of Durham, Edward Shipperdson, Esq., Henry John Baker Baker, Esq., Thomas Greenwell, Esq., the Marchioness of Londonderry, the Earl of Durham, James Monks, Esq., William Pemberton, Esq., and others.

The Village of Low Pittington is situated at the northern extremity of the parish, four miles north by east from Durham, and contains several public-houses and tradesmen's shops. High Pittington stands a little further up the hill, and consists of a public-house, a day school, and an assemblage of pitmen's cottages.

The Church, one of the finest specimens of ancient ecclesiastical architecture in the diocese, is dedicated to St. Laurence, and, from its style, is considered to belong to or about the year 1150. It consists of nave, aisles, and chancel, with a low western tower supported by buttresses, and surmounted with pinnacles. The north aisle is separated from the nave by four circular arches and a pointed one, supported by cylindrical pillars. The circular arches are adorned with double rows of zig-zag ornaments. The corresponding pillars between the nave and south aisle are plain cylindrical ones, supporting pointed arches. The eastern end of the chancel has been rebuilt, by which means the length of the body of the church has been increased. In 1846, several alterations and improvements were effected in this venerable edifice, and during the progress of the work several curious and important architectural discoveries were made, consisting of crosses and monumental stones, which were found broken up and used as common walling stones. Speaking of this ancient structure, Billings observes, "If the small and elegant specimen of Norman banded columns, and their highly-decorated arches, were only part of a once complete church, it must indeed have been most beautiful in character; and we cannot but regret that it should have been shorn of its beauty by any meddling hand. The position of the tower staircase is singular, for instead of occupying the usual place, i. e., one angle of the tower, it projects in an octagonal form from the centre of the north wall. Another peculiarity of Pittington is that it possesses the ancient timber framing of the belfry, in the form of an inverted T. The angular struts supporting the collar beams upon which the bells swing, are roughly formed into a pointed arch." The pedestals of the communion table are ornamented with an imitation of the spiral ornament of the pillars in the church. The font is a neat basin of white marble. At the western end of the church, under the tower, is the mutilated effigy of a mailed knight; the visor closed, the right hand grasping a sword, the plain shield on the left arm covering the breast, and the legs crossed. On the wall within the open space beneath the tower is a plain marble tablet bearing the following inscription:—"In memory of Mary Ann Westrop, who, in the 18th year of her age, on the evening of Sunday, the 8th, of August, 1830 (during the absence of her master and mistress) was cruelly murdered at Hallgarth Mill, in this parish, by a man, her fellow-servant, who was executed for the offence at Durham, on Monday, the 28th of February, 1831." In the churchyard is a stone coffin bearing a Latin inscription in the Saxon character. This church was appropriated to the prior and monks of Durham in 1216, on condition of their appointing a vicar, and giving him a specific endowment. It formerly possessed two chantries, St. Mary's and St. Catherine's, from the latter of which the last incumbent, John Kirkman, had a pension of £4 per annum till 1553. The lands belonging to St. Mary's chantry are annexed to the Hallgarth and Elemore estates. The living, a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Easington, and a peculiar to the dean and chapter of Durham, is valued in the Liber Regis at £14 14s. 2d. It was augmented with £10 a-year from Lord Crewe's trustees, and one-third of the rent of the Island Farm, in Bishop Middleham township, purchased with Queen Anne's Bounty, and containing 152 acres. Four acres of land, of the annual value of £12, have been added by the dean and chapter of Durham. The glebe includes the vicarage, and a garth and garden of about an acre. The manor of Ludworth pays a prescript rent of £3 12s., in lieu of vicarial tithes of all kinds. The total annual income of the living is stated to be £469. The parish register commences in 1574. Rev. John G. Edwards, M.A., vicar.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each places of worship at Pittington.

The Pittington Literary, Scientific, and Reading Institution, established in 1842, holds its meetings in a spacious building at Low Pittington, capable of accommodating about 500 persons, and now possesses a library of 400 volumes on various subjects. Rev. John G. Edwards, president; Mr. Alfred Harrison, treasurer.

The Parish School adjoins the library, and is attended by about 50 children. Higher up the village is another school, endowed by the Marquis of Londonderry, and opened in 1853. The average attendance amounts to 180 children.

Elemore is an estate formerly included in those of Little Haswell and Haswell Grange in Easington parish, and was given with them, by Bishop Pudsey, to the Monastery of Finchale. After the dissolution, the manor of Little Haswell became the property of the Andersons, from whom it was purchased in 1631, by William Hall, of Newcastle, for £4,800. It was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Conyers, and again, in a similar manner, to the Bakers, with whom it still remains, H. J. Baker, Esq. being the present proprietor. Elemore Hall, the family mansion, is beautifully situated in a valley, surrounded by hills, covered with plantations.

Hallgarth is situated about half a mile south of Pittington, and contains the parish church, the vicarage, and the family mansion of the Shipperdsons. It is said to derive its name from the Prior's Hall, built here by Hugh Whitehead, the last prior, and first dean of Durham. The estate contains about 912 acres, twenty-eight of which are freehold; the whole is tithe-free, and in an excellent state of cultivation. Hallgarth Mill occupies a sequestered situation about half a mile west of the church.

Hetton-on-the-Hill, a hamlet to the north-east of Elemore, was anciently united with Hetton-le-Hole; and we find that in the twenty-fifth year of the episcopacy of Bishop Hatfield, William de Dalden died seised of half the manor of Hepdon. It was afterwards held by the family of Bowes, and in more recent times by the Blakistons, Collingwoods, and others. In the last century, it passed to the Bakers of Elemore.

Charity.—Some person, whose name is unknown, gave to the poor of this parish £85, which has long been held by the Shipperdson family. £1 15s., the interest thereof, is carried to the overseers' account, and applied in aid of the poor-rate.

SHADFORTH PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry was formed, as has been seen at page 251, out of the parish of Pittington, and comprises the whole of the township of Shadforth and a portion of the township of Sherburn, and contained, in 1851, a population of 2,856 souls.

SHADFORTH township contains 2,872 acres, and its rateable value is £3,687. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 184; in 1811, 226; in 1821, 228; in 1831, 236; in 1841, 336; and in 1851, 1,348 souls. This township contains eighteen farms, and is included within the bishop's manor of Easington. We find Shadforth mentioned in Boldon Book as a portion of Queringdonshire, and that, with North Sherburn and Cassop, it possessed fifty-one villans and one free tenant. In this township is the estate called Ludworth, of which Walter de Ludworth died seised in 1384. It was afterwards the property of the Holdens, one of whom, Sir Thomas Holden, in 1422, obtained a license to fortify his house there, of which a few ruins still remain. From the Holdens it passed to the Thorntons, Lumleys, and Belasyses, and subsequently to the Carrs of Cocken; and William Standish Standish, Esq., the present representative of the family, is now the proprietor. The other landowners in the township are Thomas Robinson, Esq., Thomas Moon, Esq., William Branson, Esq., Thomas Hopper, Esq., Rev. R. G. L. Blenkinsop, and others.

The Village of Shadforth is situated in a deep valley, through which the Shadforth Beck flows westward to the Wear, about five miles east-south-east from Durham. As it is enclosed by steep hills, much of its old rural character has been preserved, and it forms a striking contrast to the pit villages in the neighbourhood. Here is a small chapel, originally built by the Presbyterians, but now the property of the Methodists.

The Church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is situated on the north side of Shadforth Beck, and was consecrated on the 5th August, 1839. It is a chaste and elegant structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with neat spires at the angles of the nave and chancel, a bell turret at the western gable, and a southern porch. The roof is supported by a timber frame-work, of considerable taste; the communion table is of oak, elegantly carved; and the font is an octagonal basin on a cylindrical pedestal. The pulpit and reading-desk are placed against the pillars supporting the arch at the entrance to the chancel. It contains 505 sittings, and, in consequence of a grant from the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, 850 of that number are free and unappropriated for ever. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, who have endowed it with the tithes of North Pittington and Hetton-on-the-Hill annexed. The annual income is stated at £260: Rev. R. G. L. Blenkinsop, M.A., incumbent. The parsonage house is a handsome and commodious structure situated north of the church.

Ludworth, a village in this township, situated about half-a-mile east of Shadforth, contains a national school, a neat and substantial building, erected in 1849. Ludworth Colliery is worked by T. Wood, Esq., and its produce is shipped at Hartlepool. Ludworth Tower, which stands near a rivulet, at the head of a valley, is constructed of rude masonry, and contains a vaulted dungeon, and an upper chamber, lighted by a few narrow casements. This relic of antiquity is fast mouldering into ruin.

SHERBURN, a township comprising the hamlets of Sherburn Hill and Old Sherburn, contains 1,803 acres, and its rateable value is £4,052. In 1801, the number of inhabitants was, 252; in 1811, 259; in 1821, 285; in 1831, 337; in 1841, 1,946; and in 1851, in that part of the township retained in Pittington parish, there were 855 souls. This township is said to derive its name from the Shire (clear) burn, which formed the northern boundary of Queringdonshire. We find by the Boldon Book, that lands were formerly held at North Sherburn by Ulkill, and that Christian, the plasterer, and others held South Sherburn. In the sixteenth century the family of Pearson held freehold property here. Sherburn subsequently became the property of the Tempests, and Mowbrays. Sherburn Hall and estate were purchased of Thomas Hopper, Esq., in 1827, by John Pemberton, Esq., and is now in the occupancy of Mrs. Pemberton. The lord of the manor is the Bishop of Durham, who is also the principal landowner. This township is intersected by the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway, which has a station here. Here is a stone quarry and extensive collieries.

The Village of Sherburn is situated about three and-a-half miles east by south from Durham, and contains five public houses, five farmsteads, and a few shops.

Sherburn Endowed School is a handsome stone building situated at Old Sherburn. It was erected by Arthur Mowbray, Esq., in 1804, and rebuilt by Mrs. Pemberton in 1848. The schoolmaster is allowed £16 per annum, viz.:—£4 from the Bishop of Durham, £8 from Lord Crewe's Charity, and £4 from Mrs. Pemberton, who also gives £5 per annum towards the Sunday School. For the £16 just mentioned twenty-four children are educated at the nominal charge of one penny per week.

The average number of pupils in attendance is about sixty-five. Thomas B. Brown and Mrs. Ann Brown, teachers.

Sherburn Hill is a large and populous village, in the township of Sherburn, situated about half a mile north-west of Shadforth. It occupies the crest of a lofty hill, and possesses two chapels, belonging respectively to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, several public-houses, and the customary tradesmen's shops. Sherburn Hill Boys' School was erected by Lord Durham, in 1834, and is attended by about eighty boys. John Tait, master. Sherburn Hill Girls' School was erected by the Rev. R. G. L. Blenkinsop, incumbent of Shadforth, in 1845. It is a handsome stone building, and is attended by about eighty girls. Harriet Milne, mistress. Sherburn Reading Society, situated at Old Sherburn, was established in 1850, and now possesses upwards of 200 volumes of standard works in the various departments of literature. It is also supplied with the local and other papers. Rev. E. Hallgarth, president; Edward Bell, secretary and treasurer; Francis Carter, librarian.

SHERBURN HOUSE.—EXTRA-PAROCIAL.

SHERBURN HOUSE OR HOSPITAL gives name to an extra-parochial place, which comprises an area of 730 acres, and its rateable value is £1,776 16s. 8d. Its population in 1801 was, 80; in 1811, 56; in 1821, 67; in 1831, 59; in 1841, 86; and in 1851, 84 souls. The Hospital has usually been considered one of the most interesting and picturesque objects in the county, although modern improvements and alterations have in a great measure detracted from the architectural beauty of the building. It was founded by Hugh Pudsey, bishop of Durham, about the year 1184, for the reception of 65 lepers, with a master and other officers, and dedicated to Christ, the Blessed Virgin Mary, Lazarus, and his sisters Martha and Mary. The hospital was destroyed by the Scots; but was afterwards rebuilt by Thomas de Hessewell, who was master of the institution from 1330 to 1339. The master's house, being in a very dilapidated condition, was taken down in 1833, and a modern mansion erected on its site. Of the ancient buildings, the chapel is the only portion now remaining. The hospital is situated in a sunny vale on the east side of Sherburn Water, about two miles south-east of the city of Durham. The buildings form an oblong quadrangle, and enclose an area of about an acre. The side next the road contains the entrance lodge, and a lofty wall of ancient date extends along the remainder of the front; on the second, or upper side, stands the master's house; the third is occupied by the chapel and the dwellings of the inmates, who also occupy tenements on the fourth side. The chapel occupies the south-east angle of the square, and contains some interesting specimens of Norman and early English architecture. It consists of a nave, chancel, and a west tower. The eastern window is filled with stained glass; and a modern screen separates the nave and chancel. The latter is stalled for the use of the brethren. This wealthy institution continued to be regulated and governed by the statutes formed by its benevolent founder, till the time of Bishop Langley, when the buildings were for some years neglected, and the funds appropriated to private emolument; but this perversion of the charity was loudly complained of, and the bishop issued a commission, dated September 4th, 1429, directed to William Chancellor, his temporal chancellor, and others, "to visit and examine the dilapidations in the hospital erections, and to inquire of the abuses of the charity." Upon the commissioners reporting the miserable condition and poverty of the institution, the bishop applied to Pope Eugenius IV. for redress, and obtained from his holiness a commission to make new rules and ordinances for the better government of the institution. In these regulations it was ordered, that the master shall be in priest's orders, and that he shall keep four chaplains, four clerks, or singing men, and two boys, with thirteen poor persons as chanters. They also direct, that in remembrance of the original foundation, two lepers shall be received into the hospital if they can be found, but to be kept apart from the rest of the brethren. From this last proviso, we may infer, that the leprosy was at that time almost eradicated in England. In the year 1585, an act was passed for the incorporation of this hospital, under the name of "The Master and Brethren of Christ's Hospital, in Sherborne, near Durham, in the county of Durham," with a perpetual succession and common seal. By this act the number of brethren was increased to thirty, to be nominated, with one exception, in favour of the owners of Thornley, by the master, who was to be appointed by the bishop, having no cure or charge of souls elsewhere. From the period of incorporation, till 1819, there had at no time been more than fifteen in-brethren, and sixteen out-brethren; but in that year Bishop Barrington ordered a new wing to be erected, containing fifteen apartments, for the out-brethren, so that the whole might be accommodated within the building. Those who, from having wives, could not comply with the rules of the resident brethren, were to receive £20 a-year for life; but none are in future to be appointed who are not single or widowers. The annual income at the time of the Charity Commissioners' report amounted to £1,894 3s. 5½d.; while the annual expenses were £1,373 4s. Great and important changes are about to be effected in the management of this institution, which will go far to render it more generally useful.

SHINCLIFFE PARISH.

SHINCLIFFE and OLD DURHAM, formerly part of St. Oswald's parish, Durham, were constituted a separate and distinct parish in accordance with the provisions of the act 58th George III., chap. 45; and its boundaries were defined by an order in council, dated July 13th, 1831. The boundary of this parish commences at the bridge over the river Wear, between the city of Durham and the village of Shincliffe, from which it ascends the river southward along the division between the township of Shincliffe and Houghall, including on the west side of the river two fields, belonging to farms in Shincliffe, from the latter of which, called the Island, it crosses the river to the point on the south side, where the township of Shincliffe joins the chapelry of Croxdale, from which it passes eastward along the division, between Shincliffe on one side and the Butterby and Tursdale estates on the other, till arriving at the road from Durham to Sedgely, it crosses that road and proceeds eastward, and then northward along the division between Shincliffe and Whitwell House farms, till arriving at the junction of two small rivulets, it ascends the latter in an eastern direction by the same division to where Whitwell House lands meet those of Sherburn Hospital; then going on from Durham to Hartlepool, it turns northward, and descends to the river Pitting, which it follows westward to the commencement of the boundary between the parishes of St. Oswald and Sherburn, along which it ascends northward to the junction of these two parishes with St. Giles, whence it proceeds along the division between Old Durham and St. Giles Moor, and descends to the river Wear at the north extremity of Old Durham estate, and thence follows the river southward to the bridge of Shincliffe whence it commenced.

THE TOWNSHIP of SHINCLIFFE comprises an area of 1,303 acres, and its annual value (inclusive of Croxdale and Butterby), is £4,924 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was, 244; in 1811, 282; in 1821, 367; in 1831, 802; in 1841, 1,137; and in 1851, 1,175 souls. This township was granted to the church of Durham by Bishop Carleph, and the greater portion of the property is still held under the dean and chapter of Durham. There are two collieries in the parish, one in this township and one at Old Durham.

The Village of Shincliffe is situated on the south side of the Wear, one mile and a half from Durham, and is sheltered on three sides by the rising grounds which skirt the river valley. It contains a brewery and several public-houses; and in its vicinity is a station on the Durham and Sunderland Railway, which proceeds to Houghall and Croxdale. Shincliffe Bridge crosses the river Wear about one mile to the south-east of Durham, on the Stockton road. The old bridge having been condemned by the county surveyor as being too narrow and out of repair, the present structure was commenced in June, 1824, and opened in September, 1826. It consists of two flat elliptic arches, of sixty feet span each, and a causeway arch at the Shincliffe end twenty feet in width. The cost to the county for this undertaking was £7,056 7s. 5d.

The Church, which is an unpretending structure in the early English style, dedicated to St. Mary, was consecrated by the bishop of the diocese on August 5th, 1851. It was erected from the designs of Mr. Gorge Pickering, at a cost of £1,600, and consists of nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a tower at the west end, containing three bells. The dean and chapter have given £50 towards the erection of a spire, in addition to £300 previously contributed to the church; and various sums from private individuals have been promised for the purchase of a peal of bells. The interior decorations are in good taste, the pews are all open, and one-half at least are free and unappropriated. The pulpit, baptismal font, and reading desk, are in harmony with the rest of the building, and the softened light which streams through the stained windows adds much to the impressiveness of the edifice. The subjects represented on these windows are the Baptism, Crucifixion, and Ascension of our Lord, the Presentation of Christ in the Temple, the Return from Egypt, Christ blessing little children, Mary at the feet of Jesus, Moses with the Tables of the Law, and Christ bearing his Cross. The benefice is a vicarage in the deanery of Chester, and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. The original endowment was £5 per annum, augmented with a money payment in lieu of the small tithes of the parish; and to which additions have been made from time to time through the kindness of the patrons. The first and present vicar is the Rev. Isaac Todd, M.A.

The Vicarage is pleasantly situated on the south side of the church.

The National School is a neat stone building, erected by the vicar in 1842, at a cost of £300, and will accommodate about 80 pupils. Edward Henville, master.

Old Durham, situated about three quarters of a mile to the east of Durham, is supposed by Hutchinson to have been occupied by the Saxons prior to the foundation of the present city, while Mr. Cade supposes it to have been a Roman station, and others have concluded, from the name, that there was a town here previous to the erection of the present city. A ford formerly crossed the river to Old Durham, but it is now impassible. "A little verging to the west of Old Durham House," says a recent topographer, "is a level plot of ground, immediately opposite to Maiden Castle Scar, and separated from it only by the course of the river, on which Cade has, says Surtees, with great appearance of probability, fixed the site of a Roman camp. The position is guarded by the Wear on the north, and on the south and west the Sherburn beck answers the purpose of a fosse. On the only dry side, nearest to Old Durham, vestiges of trenches and earthen ramparts may still be traced. Induced by the easy command of water, and by the rich surrounding pasturage, it may be easily conceived that the Romans should fix their camp on this green semi-isle; but at the same time they would scarcely neglect to secure the vantage ground of the high and threatening opposite cliff, and Maiden Castle would bristle thick with lines of defence. This would have been all probable, had merely a guarded ford existed across the river; but very recent discoveries have proved, that one of the most doubtful of Cade's assertions was not hazarded without authority. During a late dry summer the wooden piers of a bridge over the Wear, leading exactly to the station at Old Durham, were not only visible, but those very piers were taken up, consisting of long trunks of trees, squared and bored, and mortised together so as to form a strong foundation for each side of the river. At the same time, from the state of the river, the piers of a bridge of solid masonry were discovered on the north side of the Wear, below Kepier Hospital, confirming, as it would seem, the old tradition, that a great road passed this way across the race ground, and so by Kepier northwards, apart from the later track of Elvet and Framwellgate Bridges, which were only established when the convenience of the Norman castle or the new borough of Elvet demanded them. Of these bridges of Old Durham and Kepier, the earliest monastic historians do not appear to have taken the slightest notice; their origin, therefore, may fairly be referred to a remoter period—to the distant era, in all probability, of the Roman dominion in Britain." Old Durham was formerly possessed by the Booths, from whom it passed to the Cockburnes and Heaths, and afterwards to the Tempests. It was subsequently transferred by marriage to the Londonderry family, who are the present possessors. It is comprised in the barony of Elvet, pays church rates to Shincliffe, poor rate and county rates to the parish of St. Oswald, and queen's taxes to the parish of St. Giles.

ST. GILES' PARISH. *

The parish of St. Giles is bounded on the north by the river Wear, on the west by St. Nicholas' parish, on the south by the Wear and St. Oswald's parish, on the south-east by Pitlington, and on the north-east by Houghton-le-Spring parish. The long suburb of St. Giles, or Gilesgate, joins Claypath in the parish of St. Nicholas, near the summit of the first hill, and, after crossing a small valley, it ascends the second hill, whence it extends along the height to the eastward, and terminates on Gilesgate Moor. This was formerly termed the borough of St. Giles. The lands and burgages are held with very few exceptions, by copy of court roll, and courts were regularly held by the masters of Kepier Hospital before the dissolution of the religious houses, and, since that period, they have been continued by the successive lay owners. On the division of Gilesgate Moor, in 1817, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry received one-sixteenth of the entire moor, in lieu of their manorial rights, but they reserved to themselves the proprietorship of the mines. The population in 1801 was 940; in 1811, 906; in 1821, 1,237; in 1831, 1,277; in 1841, 3,396; in 1851, 5,423 souls.

Kepier Hospital, which gives name to the hamlet by which it is surrounded, is situated on the banks of the Wear, in the parish of St. Giles, about a mile north-east from Durham. It was founded and endowed in 1112, by Bishop Flambard, for a master and twelve brethren; but during the usurpation of Cumyn, it was destroyed by fire. It was afterwards restored by Bishop Pudsey, who also confirmed the endowment of the hospital. At the dissolution of the religious houses its revenues were valued at £186 0s. 10d., and it was then granted by Henry VIII. to Sir William Paget. It was afterwards transferred by purchase to the Heaths, and from them passed to the Coles, the Tempests, the Carrs, and the Musgraves, to whose descendants it still belongs. Of the ancient monastic buildings the only portion now remaining, is the gateway, a strong and not inelegant piece of masonry, having a groined roof, and the keystones highly ornamented with figures and foliage. Portions of the mansion erected subsequently to the dissolution still remain; the carved oak panelling of one of the rooms is still in excellent preservation. The scenery in Kepier Wood is grand and beautiful; in one place, rocks a hundred feet high and crowned with wood, overhang the river, which is here alternately broken into rapid streams and collected into deep pools. At another point a long level plain covered with hazels, broom, wild roses, and other brushwood, inextricably entangled with honeysuckle, presents to our view the banks of the Wear, as they were ages before the monks of Lindisfarne brought Christianity and civilisation to the district.

Chapel and Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen.—The ruined Chapel of St. Mary Magdalen stands on the north side of Gilesgate, and within a short distance of the railway station. This was the chapel of the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen, which stood near it, and included in-brethren and out-brethren, and also sisters. It has not been used for service since the Restoration, though there have been interments in the cemetery.

CHAPELRY OF ST. MARGARET.*

St. Margaret's Chapelry comprises the whole of the suburbs of Durham lying on the west of the river, and a considerable portion of the adjacent country. It is divided into the townships of Crossgate and Framwellgate, the former of which includes South-street, Millburngate, and Allergate; and the latter Sidegate, Crookhall, Aykley Heads, Dryburne, Caterhouse, Haghhouse, Frankland Park and Wood, Frankland Colliery and Houses, Newton Hall, Harbour House, and several other tenements.

CROSSGATE is a township in this parish, and a suburb of the city of Durham. It comprises an area of 454 acres; the number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 1,201; in 1811, 1,011; in 1821, 1,454; in 1831, 1,408; in 1841, 1,712; and in 1851, 2,074 souls. The Durham Union Workhouse is in this township.

Neville's Cross, whose mutilated remains stand on the road leading to Brancepeth, in the chapelry of St. Margaret, about one mile west of Durham, was erected by Ralph, lord Neville, to commemorate a remarkable battle fought there on the 17th October, 1346, in the reign of Edward III., between the English and Scottish armies, called the Battle of Red Hills, or as it has subsequently been termed since the erection of the cross, the Battle of Neville's Cross. David, king of Scotland, whilst Edward III. was pursuing his victorious career in France, assembled one of the most powerful armies which had ever crossed the border, and invaded England by the western marches. The little tower of Liddell was the first to feel the effects of the storm; and the governor, Walter Selby, after a brave defence, was obliged to surrender at discretion, when the Scottish monarch ordered him to be beheaded on the spot. Having burned the Abbey of Lanercost, the Scots pursued their usual route through Cumberland and Tynedale, sacking the Priory of Hexham, but sparing the town, which they reserved as a deposit for their future plunder. The same orders were issued as to Darlington, Durham, and Corbridge. After crossing the Tyne and Derwent, David halted at Ebchester, and the next day encamped, without meeting with serious opposition, at Beaurepaire, three miles west of Durham. The nobles of the north, meanwhile, exerted the remaining resources of the country with vigour and despatch, and before the middle of October, an army of 16,000 men was assembled under the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of Durham, Lincoln, and Carlisle, the Lords Neville and Percy, and the sheriffs of York and Northumberland. David, heedless of the approaching danger, continued at Beaurepaire, indulging in all the peagantry of war, and wasting the country round Durham. On the 16th October the English forces lay in Auckland Park; the next day they moved forward at day-break, and, after gaining the rising grounds, halted at Merrington, when the motions of the Scots on the western hills might be plainly distinguished. The English leaders hesitated whether to advance or to observe the enemy, and expect his attack in so favourable a position; but the marshals and standard bearers moving a little forward, the troops insensibly followed them, and thus they proceeded slowly along to Ferry Hill. Here a strong foraging party of the Scots under Douglas, fell unexpectedly into the midst of the English troops, and were pursued with the loss of 500 men, as far as Sunderland Bridge. The English halted again on the high grounds above the Wear, but the standard bearers went forward, and the army moved slowly on in the order of battle, leaving Durham on the right, to the Red Hills. Douglas, who had escaped the slaughter of his followers, meanwhile reached the Scottish camp, and gave the first intimation of the approach of the English. David had employed the preceding day in drawing out his troops (as if in defiance of opposition), on Durham Moor, in order of battle, with standards flying, and had passed the night in Beaurepaire Park and Wood, without the precaution of a scout or sentinel on the watch. The prudent advice of Douglas, to retreat to the hills and avoid an engagement, was rejected with disdain; and the Scots advancing to meet the attack, the armies joined battle on the Red Hills, a piece of broken and irregular ground rising swiftly from the Wear. The Scots were formed in three divisions, under the king, the Earl of Murray with Sir William Douglas, and the High Steward of Scotland. The English forces were divided into four bodies; Lord Percy led the first, Lord Neville the second, Sir Thomas Rokeby, sheriff of Yorkshire, commanded the third, and a strong body of cavalry under Edward Baliol, formed the reserve. On a little hillock in the depth of Shawwood, called the Maiden's Bower, the prior with his attendants knelt around the holy corporax cloth of St. Cuthbert, which was elevated on the point of a spear, within sight of both armies. The city of Durham lay in dreadful suspense, a prize to the conqueror; and whilst the remaining brethren of the convent poured forth their hymns and prayers from the highest towers of the cathedral,* their eyes wandered anxiously over the field of the approaching combat. The Scots were severely galled as they advanced, by the English archers; and John Graham, impatient at seeing his men fall without the means of resistance, requested of the king a hundred lances to break the archers; his request was denied, and the troops were ordered to keep the line of battle. Actuated at once by courage and indignation, Graham threw himself singly, or with few attendants, amongst the archers, dispersed them on every side, and fought till his horse was struck with a broad arrow, and himself wounded and bleeding, was scarcely able to regain the ranks of his countrymen with life. The high steward immediately led his division to the charge with broad swords and battle-axes; the archers were driven back through the ranks of Lord Percy's division, which they disordered in their retreat, and the Scots pursuing their advantage, threw the whole of the body into confusion. Victory hovered on the side of the invaders, but the day was restored by the courage and decision of Edward Baliol. With a powerful body of cavalry, he made an impetuous charge on the high steward's division, and drove them from the field. King David meanwhile was engaged with equal fortunes against Lord Neville; and Baliol, suffering the high steward to retreat unmolested, threw himself on the flank of the royal troops, which was left uncovered by his flight. The disorder of the Scots became irretrievable, and their third body, under the Earl of Murray, were cut to pieces amongst the enclosures, which prevented their escape. After all was lost, a gallant body of nobles threw themselves around their king, and fought with the courage of despair, till only eighty of their number survived. David, after receiving two arrow wounds, and resisting several attempts to take him captive, was compelled to surrender to John Copeland, a Northumbrian esquire, two of whose teeth he had first dashed out with his steel gauntlet. Besides the king, the Earls of Fife and Monteith, and Sir William Douglas, were made prisoners; the Earls of Murray and Strathern, John and Alan Steward, and a long list of Scottish nobility, were amongst the slain. Of the English leaders, Lord Hastings alone fell. Out of an army of 30,000 Scots and French auxiliaries, fifteen thousand were left dead upon the field, whilst the loss of the English was very trifling. After the battle, the prior and monks, accompanied by Ralph Lord Neville, John his son, Lord Percy, and many other nobles, proceeded to the Cathedral, and joined in a solemn thanksgiving to God and St. Cuthbert for the victory which they had achieved. For Directory of Crossgate township see Durham.

* In commemoration of the event, the organist, singing men, and singing boys of the Cathedral, went annually to the summit of the middle tower, and sang the Te Deum. This was continued until the year 1811, when it was discontinued, but was resumed on the 29th May, 1825.

FRAMWELLGATE township and borough forms the north-western suburb of Durham, and participates in the privileges of the city. It was formerly governed by a bailiff, appointed by the bishop, till the charters of Bishops Pilkington and Mathew incorporated it with the city of Durham, since which time it has been governed by the civic officers. The township comprises an area of 3,467 acres, and its rateable value is £8,739 10s. The landowners are the Hon. F. G. H. Russell; Thomas Toplin, Esq.; James West, Esq.; William Lloyd Wharton, Esq.; Matthew Woodfield, Esq.; Mrs. Richardson, and other freeholders. Its population in 1801 was 1,071; in 1811, 1,190; in 1821, 1,523; in 1831, 1,584; in 1841, 2,323; and in 1851, 3,085 souls. This township contains eighteen farms.

Pity-me and Borough House form a hamlet on the great north road. Durham Moor Houses is a small hamlet, a mile and a half north-west of Durham. Framwellgate Moor gives name to a village, chiefly inhabited by the workmen employed in the neighbouring colliery. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship in this township.

ST. MARY-LE-BOW PARISH.*

This parish includes the North Bailey to the college or abbey gates on the south, with the banks and gardens to the river, and the smaller streets of Queen-street, Dun Cow Lane, and Bow Lane. The Bailey is the residence of the higher and wealthier classes. It was formerly occupied by the houses of military tenants bound to contribute to the defence of the castle, and many of the tenements early acquired distinct names from their owners or other circumstances. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 477; in 1811, 552; in 1821, 448; in 1831, 501; in 1841, 308; and in 1851, 269 souls.

ST. MARY-THE-LESS PARISH.†

St. Mary-the-Less parish includes the South Bailey, from the college gates to the Water Gate. A portion of the old city walls still remains in the gardens of some of the houses at this end of the Bailey. Its population in 1801 was 154; in 1811, 118; in 1821, 157; in 1831, 128; in 1841, 99; and in 1851, 104 souls.

ST. NICHOLAS' PARISH.‡

The parish of St. Nicholas forms the central portion of the city of Durham, including the Market Place, and the streets which branch from it; Silver-street, with part of Framwellgate Bridge; Fleshergate and Sadler-street, to the site of the old gaol gateway; part of Elvet Bridge; Claypath, to the site of the Leaden Cross; the Back Lane, Wanless Lane, the interjacent fields and gardens, and the sands as far as Kepier Gate. It contained in 1801, 1,754 inhabitants; in 1811, 1,958; in 1821, 2,215; in 1831, 2,265; in 1841, 2,757; and in 1851, 3,031.

ST. OSWALD'S PARISH.§

This parish includes the borough and barony of Elvet, and the township of Broom, and formerly comprised seven constaberies, viz.:—1 The borough of Elvet; 2, the barony of Elvet; 3, Shincliffe, which comprised Croxdale and Butterby; 4, Crossgate; 5, Framwellgate; 6, Broom; and 7, Witton Gilbert. The Chapelry of St. Margaret includes the townships of Crossgate and Framwellgate; and Croxdale and Shincliffe have recently been constituted separate parishes under the provisions of the Act 58 Geo. III. c. 45.

ELVET BOROUGH and BARONY constitute the south-eastern suburbs of Durham, where the Race Course, St. Oswald's Church, the County Gaol, &c. are situated. The population in 1801 was 1,827; in 1811, 2,115; in 1821, 2,621; in 1831, 2,910; in 1841, 3,344; and in 1851, 4,207 souls. This township contains 3,800 statute acres.

* † ‡ § See History of City of Durham.

Finchale Priory.—This structure, which is situated about three miles north of Durham, stands upon a sloping meadow of greenest turf, round which the Wear makes one of its noble sweeps; its further bank being high and rocky and hung with noble woods. The water sounding on its way serves only to make you more sensible of the retirement and natural repose of the place. "It is," observes a recent tourist, "one of those truly monastic seclusions where the world seems shut out by walls of beauty and peace, and holiness seems to have marked out the spot for its own from the creation." Historians tell us that it was a place of some consequence in the early British church, a synod being held here in 792, and another in 798. It was not, however, till about 1104 that the hermitage and chapel were erected by St. Godric.* The chapel, built by St. Godric, was dedicated to St. John the Baptist. About the year 1118, the hermitage of Finchale was granted by Bishop Flambard to the monastery of Durham, in free alms, subject to Godric's life, that it might be inhabited by such of their brethren as they should appoint. In 1180, Bishop Pudsey granted a charter for a cell at Finchale, but it does not appear to have been carried into effect till the year 1196, when Henry de Pudsey founded a priory for Benedictines, subordinate to the convent at Durham. It was dissolved in the 26th year of the reign of Henry VIII., when it consisted of a prior and eight monks, and its revenues were estimated at £146 19s. 2d. per annum. It was soon afterwards granted to the dean and chapter of Durham, and remains attached to the prebend of the seventh stall. The church, whose erection is attributed to Henry de Pudsey, was entirely of the early English style, having a north aisle to the nave, and north and south aisles to the choir. The nave may, indeed, be said to have had a south aisle, which was, in fact, the north side of the cloisters. "The church and cloisters of about 1240," says Mr. Fordyce, "are parts of the first edifice; and the various abbey buildings are all of subsequent styles, down to the year 1500, to which period the crypt of the refectory on the south side may be assigned. Generally those buildings may be ascribed to the beginning of the fifteenth century. In the year 1436, the church underwent a most singular alteration, or rather contraction. The whole of the aisles, together with a chapel attached to the east wall of the north transept, were removed; and the outer walls and windows of the church were inserted between the arches of the nave and choir. For proof of this alteration, and in opposition to the early accounts, that it was formerly an open church, having no external limits, it is only necessary to refer to the copings of the roof and broken stones of the walls still visible against the transepts." The priory, when perfect, was similar in arrangement to that of Durham, though of course on a much more limited scale, many minor parts * St. Godric was born at Walpole, in Norfolk, and, after twice performing the pilgrimage to Jerusalem, came to Finchale, where he resided thirty-six years, practising "unheard of austerities." He died in 1170, and was subsequently canonised. He appears to have been a poet, and the following hymn, said to have been his composition, will give some idea of the state of the English language at that period.

"Seinte Marie, clene Virgine,
Moder Jesu Christ Nazarene,
Onfōh, scild, help thin Godric,
Onfangen, bring hale width the in Godes rich

"Seinte Marie, Cristes bour, Meidenes clenhed, Moderes flour,
Dellvere mine sennen, regne in min mod,
Bring me to blisse wit thiselfe God."

"Holy Mary, virgin cleane, mother of Jesus Christ the Nazarene, receive, shield, aid, thy Godric, bring him speedily with thee into God's kingdom. Holy Mary, shode of Christ, maiden's purty, mother's flower, blot out my sins, reign in my mind, bring me to bliss with the only God."

being necessarily omitted. Of the central tower of the church, which was groined and surmounted by a short octagonal spire, nothing now remains but the four circular columns which supported it. Further down the river, a little to the east of the ruins of the priory, is a place supposed to be the area herbida, where St. Godric built casa sua tuguriunculum. It is called St. Godric's Garth, and traces of the old masonry are still visible.

Maiden Castle, supposed by some to have been a Roman station, stood on the summit of the Scaur, which rises on the south side of the Wear, opposite to Old Durham. This fortress was almost inaccessible from the river by reason of the steepness of the cliff, which is almost perpendicular, and about 100 feet in height. The summit of the mount consists of a level area, forty paces wide on the summit of the scaur on the north-east side, and about 160 paces long. This was supported anciently by another castle, called the Peel, erected on the opposite eminence, which is now known by the name of Peel Law.*

Mountjoy.—This is a smooth green conical hill, situated a short distance from Maiden Castle, and is thought by some to have derived its name from having been the spot upon which the monks rested with the body of St. Cuthbert, and saw the wood-crowned heights where they were to rest after their wanderings.

Houghall, the ancient manor-house, erected by Prior Hotoun, and formerly forming part of the prebendal estates of Durham, is situated in Elvet, about one mile south-east of the city, in the parish of St. Oswald. The building has been surrounded by a moat, and otherwise fortified, and is said to have been in the possession of Sir Arthur Hazelrigg and other parliamentary officers during the civil wars, and Oliver Cromwell is said to have been a visitor here. The manor of Houghall forms a part of the lands with which the University of Durham is endowed.

Burn Hall, in the parish of St. Oswald, two miles south-west of Durham, formerly the seat of the Smiths, but now the property of Marmaduke Charles Salvin, Esq., is situated in a secluded spot within the angle formed by the confluence of the rivers Wear and Browney, and is surrounded with beautiful plantations of oak, &c. A handsome modern mansion has of late years been erected on high ground in the park, and forms a striking object from the North Road.

Broom township contains a few scattered tenements, about three miles to the west of Durham. Broom Hall stands further to the north-west, on elevated ground between the Browney and the Deerness; while Aldernage House, now known as Aldin Grange, occupies a low and retired situation on the banks of the Browney. This township comprises an area of 1,029 acres. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 118; in 1811, 123; in 1821, 93; in 1831, 93; in 1841, 108; and in 1851, 123 souls. For Directory of this parish, see city of Durham.

WHITWELL HOUSE.—EXTRA-PAROCHIAL PLACE.

WHITWELL HOUSE, an extra-parochial place, forming part of the parish of Kelloe in Easington Ward, but incorporated with Durham Ward in 1829, comprises an area of 540 statute acres, and its annual value is £1,828. In 1801, it contained 27 inhabitants; in 1811, 17; in 1821, 38; in 1831, 32; in 1841, 173; and in 1851, 160. It adjoins the parish of Shincliffe on the west, and the township of Sherburn on the north, and is held by lease under Sherburn Hospital, in the chapel of which the inhabitants are provided with sittings. Here is an extensive colliery, whose produce is known in the market by the designation of "Whitwell Wallsend," and is shipped at Sunderland, South Shields, and at the South Dock, Hartlepool. This colliery was commenced in May 1836; the "Hutton Seam" was won on the 20th June, 1837, at a depth of 59 fathoms. In 1840, another shaft, of 95 fathoms, was sunk to the same seam, from which and the "Low Main" the coals are worked. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, Whitwell was held by payment of half a mark. Under Hatfield's survey it was held by the masters of Sherburn Hospital. Thomas Bullock occurs as lessee about 1660, from whom it passed to his nephew, Thomas Brass, gent.; and in 1718, it was transferred to the families of Middleton and Teasdale, who appear to have joined; as, in 1806, Middleton Teasdale devised it to his aunt, Jane Bacon, who, in her turn, devised it to the Rev. Henry Wastell. The produce of the estate is toll free in Durham market.

* The name of "Maiden" applied to a castle, is now become indefinite; and it has not been determined whether it implies beautiful, or a fortress which never had been conquered.

Here is a school, which has been erected by the Coal Company, who also gave the coal requisite for warming it. It is under the superintendence of the Rev. E. Prest, M.A., of Sherburn Hospital, and serves as a place of worship on Sundays for the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, the former of whom have the use of it in the mornings, and the latter in the afternoons. Neither of the congregations has a resident minister.

WITTON-GILBERT PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, comprising the townships of Kimblesworth and Witton-Gilbert, is bounded on the north by the parish of Chester-le-Street, and on the north-west and west by that of Lanchester, on the south-west by the chapelry of Esh, on the south by St. Oswald's parish, and on the east by the chapelry of St. Margaret. It contains 3,106 acres of land, and the number of its inhabitants in 1851 was 1,794.

KIMBLESWORTH, a township and hamlet in this chapelry, was anciently a separate rectory, but the church has long been gone to decay, and the benefice united to Witton-Gilbert. The area of the township is 571 acres, and its annual value £484 11s. 8d. Its population in 1801 was 24; in 1811, 42; in 1821, 32; in 1831, 36; in 1841, 33; and 1851, 36 souls. Kimblesworth was formerly the property of the Eure family. We find it possessed by the Tempests in 1569, and it was afterwards held by the families of Bowes, Sandford, and Honeywood, from the latter of whom it passed by purchase to the Lambtons, and is now the property of the Earl of Durham. Findon Hill, a tenement in this parish, is also possessed by the same nobleman. It was formerly the property of the Boweses, from whom it passed to the Harbottles, the Hildyards, and others.

The Hamlet of Kimblesworth is situated about two-and-a-half miles north-by-west of Durham, and in a field to the south the foundations of its ancient church may yet be traced. Mr. George Crofton, farmer, is the principal resident.

WITTON GILBERT, a township and village, in the chapelry of the same name, is the property of the Bishop of Durham, the Earl of Durham, the Dean and Chapter of Durham, the University of Durham, the trustees of the late William Gibbons, Esq., the trustees of the late Robert Darling, Dr. Jenkins, Dr. Thorpe, Captain Ellis, Hodgson Hinde, Esq., and several other freehold proprietors. There are several handsome residences in this township, many of which enjoy the advantages of extensive prospects of great beauty. Witton Gilbert comprises an area of 2,535 statute acres, and its annual value is £4,907. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 369; in 1811, 399; in 1821, 864; in 1831, 417; in 1841, 1,243; and in 1851, 1,758 souls. This increase of population is attributed to the extension of the collieries in the neighbourhood. The name of the township is said to be derived from Gilbert de la Ley, who, during the time of Bishop Pudsey, held Witton and a considerable tract of country to the west. This Gilbert de la Ley was a benefactor to the church of Durham, and founded an hospital here for lepers, the site of which is at present occupied by a farm-house, still containing an ancient pointed window. Lands were subsequently held here by the De Musters and De Latons. In 1801, an act, 41 George III., was passed "for dividing and inclosing certain moors, commons, or waste lands, and two parcels of ground called The Intack or Cow Pasture and Shaw Wood, within the several townships of Framwellgate and Witton Gilbert, and in the several manors of Chester and Lanchester, in the county palatine of Durham; and for extinguishing all rights of common on certain inclosed inter-common lands, within the said townships." This act did not prejudice the right of the Bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor, to the royalties and other manorial rights.

The Village of Witton Gilbert occupies a pleasant situation in a valley on the road from Durham to Lanchester, about three-and-a-half miles north-west from the former place. On the north, it is bounded by an amphitheatre of rising ground, and on the south overlooks the valley of the Browney, which flows in an easterly direction, and divides this parish from the lofty eminence upon which Ushaw stands. It comprises several public-houses and shops, as also a county police station.

The Church, dedicated to St. Michael, is a small neat building, situated a little to the south of the village, and consists of a nave and chancel, separated by an oaken screen. It will accommodate about 300 persons. There is an old pointed window in the chancel, but those in the nave are all modern. A gallery was erected at the west end of the nave in 1742. We must not forget to mention one of our old English customs which is still preserved in this church,—that of hanging up funeral garlands. These mementos of the departed are formed of artificial flowers, fastened to transverse hoops, enclosing white paper slips cut in the form of gloves, and inscribed with the name and age of the deceased. The benefice is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. The gross income of the living was stated, in 1835, at £322 per annum. The dean and chapter have since annexed land producing £4 10s. per annum. The parish register commences in 1571. Rev. Cuthbert J. Carr, M.A., incumbent. The Parsonage occupies a pleasant situation near the church.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village. The Parish School is a neat building, and will accommodate about 60 children.

About three miles north-west from the city of Durham stand the moss-clad ruins of the house and chapel of Beaurepaire, corruptly called Bearpark, the favourite retreat of the priors of Durham. "Situating," says Billings, "on the brow of a short slope, descending to the rivulet's bed, and within hearing of its plashing ripple, it overlooks an alternation of copsewood, wild and cultivated field, of upland knoll and lowly dell, forming a prospect on which the eye may dwell with pleasure; while, amid the solitary stillness of the scene, the imagination may resuscitate some occupant of old, a warrior, a churchman, or a king, whose name memory hath cherished, and written upon the 'book and volume of the brain.'" The only portion of the building now remaining is one of the gable ends, which contains a large and beautiful twelve-light window, and a few fragments of masonry. Beaurepaire was founded by Prior Bartram II., and Prior Hugh enclosed the park, and added to the buildings. Edward III. passed the night here on his return from Scotland in 1327.

Sacriston is a village, chiefly inhabited by the workmen employed in the neighbouring collieries. The Wesleyans and the Primitive Methodists have places of worship here, and there is a school belonging to the Church of England, which is endowed with £18 a year by the dean and chapter, and is used as a chapel of ease to the church. Sacriston and Charlaw Collieries, the former worked by W. H. Bell, and the latter by Richardson and Hunter, ship their produce at Sunderland and Shields. The coal is known in the market as "Acorn Close Wallsend."

Fulforth was anciently held by a family bearing the local name, and was afterwards the property of the Eshes, Hildyards, and Wrays. It is now the property of the Earl of Durham, and a portion of it, with Springwell and Johnson's House, are extra-parochial. Sacriston-heugh and Lingey House are held under the dean and chapter. Witton Hall and State's House are held under the University of Durham, Earl House and Findon Cottage are the property of Captain Ellis, and Witton Gilbert farm is possessed by Mr. W. Bransom. Sniperley Hall is the residence of Henry Stapylton, Esq.

Charities.—Jane Finney, by will, dated November 14th, 1728, gave to trustees a close in Witton, containing about 1½ acre, for the endowment of a school, the master of which should instruct four poor children to read English. The close is now let for £5 15s per annum; and an allotment of between two and three acres, made in right of this close at the time of the enclosure of the common, is let for £5 17s. 6d. per annum. The school is at the east end of the village, and four children are instructed in respect of the income from the charity. Poor's Land.—A small cottage, with about a quarter of an acre of ground, subject to a rent of 1d. to the bishop as lord of the manor, is let at a low rent of £2 a year, which is divided annually by the churchwardens amongst the poor of the parish, in sums varying from 1s. to 4s.

DARLINGTON WARD.

DARLINGTON WARD, the largest of the five wards of the county, comprises the ancient boroughs of Darlington, Auckland, and Barnard Castle, with the market towns of Staindrop, Wolsingham, and Stanhope; and is divided into three divisions, viz., north-west, south-east, and south-west, whose area is 256,968 acres. It is bounded on the north-east and north by Durham Ward, and western extremity of Chester Ward; on the north-west by the county of Northumberland; on the west by Cumberland; on the south-west and south by the Tees, which separates it from Yorkshire; and on the east by Stockton Ward. About one-half of this ward, extending from its eastern boundary, is a fine cultivated district, embellished with a number of handsome villas, richly ornamented with wood and water; but its western portion is a bleak mountainous region, containing those rich veins of lead which have yielded their treasures for centuries. The north-eastern portion of the ward contains an extensive coal-field, which has of late years been worked with considerable success. The principal rivers are the Tees, which forms its southern boundary; the Wear, which winds through it by a circuitous route from east to west; and the Skerne, which crosses its eastern boundary near the village of Preston, and, passing by Darlington, enters the Tees at Croft Bridge. Besides these, there are a number of rivulets and brooks, which intersect the ward in every direction. Sharing in the advantages resulting from modern enterprise, Darlington Ward possesses several public railways; and there can be little doubt that these essential adjuncts of mining, agricultural, and commercial speculation will be still further extended as the resources of the various localities are developed. The annual value of the property assessed to the county rate, in 1853, was £286,334 19s. 2½d.

It has been seen, at page 113, that, under the powers of the 9th Geo. IV. c. 43, the parish of Brancepeth, then including the chapelry of Crook, the townships of Ferryhill and Hett, and the township of Sunderland Bridge, were separated from Darlington Ward, and annexed to the newly-formed ward of Durham. At the same time, the parishes of Sockburn, Dinsdale, and Hurworth, and the townships of Sadberge, Coatham-Mundeville, and Morton Palms, which had previously been parts of Stockton Ward, were transferred to this. In the arrangement of divisions, the parish of Merrington, the chapelry of Whitworth, and the townships of Byer's Green, Coundon Grange, Elton, Middlestone, Westerton, and Windlestone, in Auckland St. Andrew's parish, were transferred from the south-east to the north-west division; and the townships of Summerhouse and Piercebridge, in Gainford parish, from the south-west to the south-east division. Darlington Ward forms one of the deaneries in the diocese and archdeaconry of Durham; but the limits of this ecclesiastical jurisdiction remain as they were previous to the passing of the act 9th George IV.

NORTH-WEST DIVISION.

This is the largest of the three divisions of Darlington Ward, and is about thirty miles in length by ten in breadth. It comprises the parishes of Auckland St. Andrew's, Merrington (part of), Wolsingham, and Stanhope, and the chapelries of Whitworth and St. John Weardale, as originally constituted. Many years ago, however, the four parochial chapelries of St. Helen's Auckland, Escomb, Hamsterley, and Witton-le-Wear, were absconded from the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland; and the extension of the coal trade of the district, the facilities of transmission afforded by the railway system, the introduction of iron manufactures, and the great and rapid increase of population consequent thereupon, have rendered further subdivisions necessary. To meet the wants of the inhabitants, the following chapelries have been founded at various periods, viz., Shildon, Coundon, Byer's Green, and Hunwick, from the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland; Etherley, from part of St. Helen's Auckland; Lynesack, from Hamsterley; St. Bartholomew's Thornley, from Wolsingham parish; and Heathery Cleugh, from that of Stanhope. An ecclesiastical district has been assigned to each of these; and various educational, literary, scientific, and other institutions have been founded for the social and intellectual well-being of the population.

AUCKLAND ST. ANDREW'S PARISH.

This parish, which comprises the townships of St. Andrew's Auckland, Bishop Auckland, Coundon Grange, Pollard's Land, part of Binchester, and part of Newton Cap, is bounded on the north by Byer's Green, on the north-west by Hunwick, on the west by Escomb, on the south-west by St. Helen's Auckland, on the south by Heighington, on the south-east and east by Shildon, and on the north-east by Coundon and Whitworth. The township of Middlestone, not incorporated in any of the newly-formed chapelry districts, but which formerly constituted the north-east extremity of the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, was, in April 1845, annexed to the parish of Merrington. This district abounds in coal and lime; the soil is generally well suited for the production of corn, turnips, &c.; and the scenery is finely diversified by hill and dale, wood and water.

ST. ANDREW'S AUCKLAND, a township in the parish of the same name, comprises 1,186 acres, and its annual value is £4,642 15s. The number of inhabitants, in 1801, was 121; in 1811, 135; in 1821, 119; in 1831, 296; in 1841, 1,367; and in 1851, 1,829 souls. The township is intersected by the Weardale branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway. Here are the Adelaide and Deanery Collieries, the latter locally called "Shildon Bank Colliery," which are worked in connection by Messrs. Joseph Pease and Partners. The coals are transmitted by the Black Boy branch to the Stockton and Darlington Railway, and shipped at Stockton and Middlesborough docks. Their market designations are Adelaide and Deanery Wallsend. There is also another colliery in this township, the Woodhouse Close Colliery, which is the property of Sir Charles Maclean. The principal landowners here are Francis Johnson, Esq.; Lake Seymour, Esq.; Robert Seymour, Esq.; Mrs. Spencer, and Henry Spencer, Esq.

The Village of Auckland St. Andrew, or South Church, as it is sometimes called, is situated on the river Gaunless, which is, at this place, crossed by a stone bridge of one arch, and is one mile south from Bishop Auckland, and eleven south-south-west from Durham. It contains a brewery, a spade and shovel manufactory, several public-houses, a rural police station, and the customary tradesmen's shops. The Gaunless sometimes overflows its banks at this village, and causes considerable damage.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is situated in the village, on the left bank of the Gaunless, and is a large cruciform structure, in the early English style, consisting of nave and aisles, transept, choir and aisles, with a western tower. The south or entrance porch has an elegant groined roof, and had formerly three windows, which are now built up. The interior of the church has a noble appearance; and the stalled seats of the chancel, twenty-eight in number, are in the same style as those of Darlington, and some of them very spirited in design. The church will accommodate about 820 persons; it contains several marble tablets, and two ancient effigies, one of which is the representation of a female cut in stone, supposed to represent a member of the family of Bellasis; and the other is a carved wooden image of a man in armour, traditionally said to be one of the Pollards. Here were formerly two chantries, one dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and the other to St. John the Baptist; the former was valued at £8 12s. 6d., and the latter at £7 16s. The founders of these chantries are unknown. This church was made collegiate by Bishop Carilepho, for the reception of the secular clergy whom he had ejected from Durham; and it subsequently received a munificent endowment from Bishop Beck, who, by his statutes dated 1292, appointed a dean and nine prebendaries. In 1428, Bishop Langley made some alteration in the establishment, for we find, in the Lincoln taxation, that there were twelve portionists or prebendaries at Auckland, whose revenues were then rated at £249 13s. 4d. In the 26th Henry VIII. the deanery was valued at £100 7s. 2d., and the eleven prebends as follows: Auckland and Binchester, £9 6s. 8d.; second prebend of Auckland, £8 13s. 4d.; first prebend of Eldon, £8 13s. 4d.; second prebend of Eldon, £10; third do., £8 13s. 4d.; fourth do., £8 13s. 4d.; Shildon prebend, £4 13s. 4d.; Witton prebend, £4 13s. 4d.; West Auckland prebend, £8; St. Helen's Auckland prebend, —; Hamsterley prebend, £4 6s. 8d.; total annual value, £79 16s. 8d. The church suffered greatly at the dissolution, 1st Edward VI., 1547, when it was left neither rectorial nor vicarial, but became a donative or curacy, with but a small provision, considering the extent, population, and opulence of the parish. The estates, rights, and tithes belonging to the church were disposed of by the crown to various parties. Bishop Pilkington, the first Protestant bishop of Durham, who had obtained the site of the college, a residence for the dean and prebendaries in the vicinity of the Castle, destroyed its bells, made a bowling-green of its quadrangle, and erected a "paire of butts for shooting" in the chapel. During the period of the Commonwealth, the deanery lands were purchased by Sir Arthur Hazelrigg; but, after his attainder, they were granted to Bishop Cosin, who annexed them to the see for ever. Bishop Cosin endowed the living with a moiety of the prebend of Boudgate; and £30 a year is added from Lord Crewe's charities. The gross income amounts to £587 per annum. The living, which is a perpetual curacy with the dependant curacy of St. Ann's, is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham; the landowners of the parish impropiators. The parish register commences in 1558. Rev. George Edward Green, B.A., incumbent.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. The National School is a good stone building, erected, in 1847, by subscription, aided by a grant from the Committee of Council on Education. It will accommodate 150 children, and is at present attended by eighty-nine boys and fifty-three girls; A. J. B. Waldron, teacher. The Adelaide Colliery Infant School, erected and supported by the Adelaide Colliery Company, is attended by about seventy children.

Henknoll, on the west side of the Gaunless, and opposite to the church of St. Andrew, was anciently a manor held of the bishop, and afterwards belonged to the Priory of Durham. It subsequently became the property of the Bellasis family, from whom it was purchased by Lord Fauconberg; and, about twenty years ago, was transferred by sale to the late Luke Seymour, Esq., with whose representatives it still remains.

The Deanery is an estate south of the village of South Church, on the site of the lands held by the dean of Auckland. It is now the property of the representatives of the late Wharton Middleton, Esq.

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP OF BISHOP AUCKLAND.

The township of Bishop Auckland comprises 1,919 statute acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 1,961; in 1811, 1,807; in 1821, 2,180; in 1831, 2,859; in 1841, it had increased to 3,776; and in 1851, to 5,112 souls. This increase of population is chiefly attributed to the opening of collieries. The value of property assessed to the county rate in 1853 was £8,659 8s. The southern part of the township is crossed by the Wear Valley Railway. The entire township, with the exception of Woodhouse Close, is held by copyhold under the Bishop of Durham. About half the land is in grass, and the remainder arable. In the Boldon Book, it is stated, "there were twenty-two villains in North Ackland or Alebat, each of whom held an ox-gang of land, rendering to the lord of the manor two chalders of aver-malt, and of wheat or wheat of statnalt, and the like of meal, or bread, corn, and oats, 18d. of aver pennies, 19d. cornage, one hen and ten eggs, three loads of wood if brought to Ackland, and two-and-a-half if carried to Durham; they wrought two days in each week, from the day of St. Peter ad Vincula, to Martinmas, and from that date one day in each week the rest of the year," besides other services. The whole vill provided a milch cow, the head boroughman and the smith had each an ox-gang of land for their services, and the punder had twelve acres. The tolls of beer (bigg or barley) produced 8s. and the mills, 24 marks. The free tenants are also specified in this record, and amongst them is one Pollard, who then held ten acres and-a-half of land. One of the members of this family, named Dionesia Pollard, died in 1402, seised of a parcel of land called Westfield, held of the bishop in Socage, and another parcel, called Hekes, near to Auckland Park, in socage by rendering a falchion, and another parcel, called the Halgh, held of the Earl of Westmorland. This family became extinct in the 15th year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The families of Bellasis, Holon, Bowes, and Eure, formerly held lands here. At the time of Bishop Hatfield's Survey, the borough was farmed out with the profits of the borough court, burgage fees, tolls, profits of mills, the Crew-farm, and toll of beer in West Auckland, and the common furnace in North Auckland, at the rent of £26 13s. 4d. The fulling-mill produced 46s. 8d., the park £8, with fifty acres of meadow therein, 100s. The principal proprietors are the Bishop of Durham, who is also lord of the manor, Richard Bowser, Esq., Francis Johnson, Esq., Peter Johnson, Esq., John Jackson, Esq., William Trotter, Esq., Thomas Jackson, Esq., Thomas Peacock, Esq., Mr. Nicholas Kilburn, and others.

THE Town of Bishop Auckland is pleasantly situated on the northern side of the township, and occupies a considerable eminence near the confluence of the rivers Wear and Gaunless, about ten-and-a-half miles south-west of the city of Durham, and 252 north-by-west of London. Its population in 1851 was 4,400, of whom 2,183 were males, and 2,217 females; there were at the same period 839 inhabited houses, 18 uninhabited, and 12 in process of erection. The town comprises seven detached portions of the township of Pollard's Lands, containing collectively about 34 acres, and which consist principally of houses and gardens. The palace and grounds of the bishop occupy the north-east side of the town: and adjoining, on the south-west, is the Market Place, a spacious square, surrounded by good houses, containing some of the principal public establishments, &c. of the town. The centre of the Market Place is occupied by an open octagonal building, of polished stone, with an embattled roof, and a cupola rising from the centre. It was erected a few years ago, to afford accommodation for parties bringing poultry, eggs, butter, &c., for sale. On the west of the town, the Wear is crossed by Newton Bridge, which forms a communication with the township of Newton Cap. It was built by Bishop Skirlaw in 1388, and consists of two arches, one of which is circular, with a span of 101 feet, while the other is pointed, of 90 feet span. On one of the stones of the west battlement, near the middle of the north arch, is the following inscription, now almost obliterated:—"EDWARD PALFREY'S LEAP, 1744." This inscription is said to allude to a man of that name, who either fell or leaped from this bridge, and escaped unhurt. During the winter of 1851-2, the floods did considerable damage to the penning under the east arch, which was repaired by the county at a cost of £92.

ST. ANNE'S CHAPEL.—St. Anne's chapelry is of great antiquity, and belonged to the guild instituted in the parish church, which was held in the chapel so late as the time of Edward VI. "The chapel owes its origin," says Mr. Raine, "in all probability, to the gathering together of the people under the walls of the castle. With the date of its foundation I am unacquainted. In 1391, William Forster, John Chalowner, and others, took of the lord a piece of waste ground at the east end of the chapel of St. Anne, fifty feet in breadth, and extending in length from the corner of the burial ground to the bank of the Wear, in order to enlarge the chapel and church-yard aforesaid. A license from Cardinal Langley in 1424 recites, that the inhabitants of North Auckland had built (rebuilt) a chapel in honour of St. Anne, and gives them permission to have in it masses, &c., on holidays; limiting the audience on Sundays to the sick and infirm, and providing against detriment to the mother church. Again in 1452, the chapel was enlarged, the procurators taking of the lord of the manor for that purpose a piece of ground ten ells in breadth and twenty-eight in length, in the Market Place. The chapel was rebuilt, by subscription, in 1781, in the debased style of that period. On the ground-floor was placed the Grammar-school. To the chapel itself was assigned an upper room, and at the west end was an unseemly tower, built by Bishop Barrington, the lower part of which was converted into a Market-house, the former cross having been removed in 1795. These buildings were all removed in 1847, and the present chapel built upon their site from a design by Mr. Salvin. For the chancel arch Mr. Salvin is not answerable, his plan having in this instance been departed from." The new chapel, which consists of nave, chancel, and aisles, with a bell turret at the western end, was opened on the 23rd February, 1848. The internal arrangements are very convenient. There are two beautiful stained glass windows, by Lawson, of Newcastle, in the west end of the chapel. They are emblazoned with the armorial bearings of Bishops Crewe and Barrington, and were erected, in 1848, by the master and adult scholars educated at the Barrington School. The pulpit, a fine specimen of wood carving, is the gift of the architect, Mr. Thompson. The registers of this chapelry are included in those of the parish church. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. George F. Green, B.A.

ST. WILFRED'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH, occupies an elevated situation, at the western extremity of the town, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding neighbourhood. It is in the early English style, and was erected in 1816, at a cost of about £1,000, from designs by Mr. James Gibson, of Newcastle. It will accommodate about 300 persons. The western end of the church is ornamented with a fine stained glass window, containing representations of St. Andrew, St. Wilfred, and St. Helen. Rev. Richard Singleton, priest.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL, situated in Great Gates, near Newgate-street, was erected in 1823, and will seat about 200 persons. Rev. James Smith, minister.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL, a good stone building, situated in Back Bondgate, was erected in 1842, at a cost of £1,500, upon the site of a former chapel. It is calculated to accommodate 1,500 persons.

THE WESLEYAN ASSOCIATION CHAPEL, South Road, is a neat stone edifice, erected in 1844, at an expense of £400, and contains about 350 sittings.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL is situated in William-street, and was built in 1842, previous to which period the congregation met for worship in a room in Fore Bondgate. It possesses sittings for 100 persons.

THE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE, in Newgate-street, was erected in 1840, and will accommodate about 200 persons.

GRAMMAR-SCHOOL.—King James I. by letters patent under the great seal, in 1604, founded at the petition of Anne Swyfte, of the city of Durham, a grammar school at Bishop Auckland, to be called "The Free Grammar School of King James, to have a head master and usher, and twelve governors to manage its revenues. On April 12th, 1605, the said Anne Swyfte granted to the governors an annual rent of £10, out of a grange or tenement called Ellergill, in the parish of Stanhope. Ralph Maddison, proprietor of Ellergill, added another annuity of £6 out of the same premises. In April, 1638, Bishop Morton gave a school house near the chapel of St. Anne, in the Market Place, and the cottages and appurtenances adjoining. A parcel of the waste, called West Mylne Batts, containing eight acres, was granted by the lord of the manor, at a rent of 4s. to Richard Richardson, who conveyed it to the governors. The school was held for many years in the ground-floor of St. Anne's Chapel, and a part of it was used for the transaction of the town's business. Bishop Barrington gave a house and garden on the opposite side of the Market Place, for the use of the master, who receives the above rent-charges, which, with 15s. from Wall's Charity (see Charities), now amount to £42 a year. None of the children of this school are taught free: but all those of the parish, who are able to read, are admitted to instruction on the payment of 7s. 6d. a quarter for reading, writing, and accounts, and 10s. 6d. for the classics. Boys not belonging to the parish are to pay such fees as the master shall think fit. The school house, situated in South Terrace, is a good stone building, erected in 1848, and is attended by 25 boys. Rev. Edward Healey, master.

THE HARRINGTON SCHOOLS.—These institutions are situated on the south side of the Market Place, and their exterior is adorned with the arms of Bishop Barrington, who, in 1809, erected a school house, with apartments for the master and usher, and for a housekeeper, and for a female servant to take care of the furniture, at a cost of about £2,250. From the dividends of the three-per-cent stock left by the bishop for the purposes of education in the county, £436 per annum is appropriated to the school, the annual expenses of which average about £367; the surplus being at the discretion of the trustees of the general charity (see Bishop Barrington's Charities amongst the general charities of the county, page 108). The school is conducted on the Madras system, and is open to all the children of the parish who apply for admission. They are taught reading, writing, and accounts, and are supplied gratuitously with pens, ink, paper, books, and all school requisites. The girls were, about twenty years ago, transferred to the School of Industry, the expense of which is paid from this fund. The school is now under government inspection, and is attended by about 140 boys. James Reed, teacher.

Besides the above, there is the Catholic School in South Terrace, the Infant School, Market Place, the School of Industry, Silver-street, and the Friends' School, Backway. This latter school is endowed with £30 per annum, left by the late Edward Walker, a member of the Society of Friends, and for which several children are taught free. There are also several day and boarding schools, the situation of which, with the names of their teachers, will be found in the Directory.

AUCKLAND CASTLE.—This almost regal structure is situated on the brow of a high ridge near the confluence of the rivers Wear and Gaunless, and commands a most beautiful prospect of the surrounding country. "This," says Howitt, "is a palace indeed! It stands on the hill above the town, which the prelatial residence seems to have created, and makes you feel at once, that in this country not only the merchants, but the prelates are still princes. The palace must be looked upon as a whole, and not with too scrutinising an eye to the character of its architecture, which is of various dates, all modern, and some of it not of the purest character. It is sufficient that it claims to be Gothic. But as a habitation, it is a splendid one—its situation, with hills and green sloping lawns, rocks, woods, and water, is very beautiful. It contains some noble rooms, and some fine paintings, as Jacob and the twelve Patriarchs, by Spagnoletto; the Cornaro Family, by Titian; and others. This lovely site was selected by the bold Bishop Anthony Beck, for a retreat, and here he built a fine castellated manor-house." During the Commonwealth, the castle having been bestowed by the parliament on Sir Arthur Hazelrigg, he demolished nearly all the buildings, and built out of their ruins a magnificent mansion. After the Restoration, Bishop Cosin restored the building, and built the present elegant chapel, which is divided into nave and aisles by two rows of clustered marble pillars, sixteen feet high, and supporting pointed arches. The chapel is lighted by windows in the aisles and clerestory. The floor of the aisles was formerly lower by two steps than the nave; but Bishop Van Mildert, in 1827, raised them to the same level, and thus diminished the effect—the whole of the floor is of chequered marble. On the floor a plain stone with a modest epitaph, records the last resting place of the founder. The park, where the castle is situated, comprises about 800 acres, and its natural beauties have been judiciously improved. The Gaunless flows through it near the castle; and the Coundonburn meanders through its steep banks and brushwood at a greater distance. The park is entered from the Durham road by a handsome lodge and gateway built by Bishop Egerton. Besides the picturesque views of the castle, trees, and lawns, within the bounds of the park, the prospect of the Wear and the well-wooded and highly cultivated country around, undulating in hills and valleys, are so beautiful that one topographer says "Language is too weak, and but few pencils are powerful enough, to delineate the rich scenery of Auckland Park."

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES, &c.—A branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society has been established in Bishop Auckland for many years. William Buxton, Esq., treasurer; William Hepple, Esq., secretary. The Church Union Society has also a branch here; Rev. G. E. Green, secretary. The depôt of the Society for the Promoting Christian Knowledge, is at Mr. Hollis', Market Place; Rev. G. E. Green, secretary and treasurer.

THE INLAND REVENUE OFFICE is at the Talbot Hotel, Market Place. The Rural Police Station is in High Bondgate; William Brown, superintendent.

THE BISHOP AUCKLAND POOR-LAW UNION comprehends thirty-three townships, embracing an area of 59,303 statute acres, and a population, in 1851, of 30,083 souls. The thirty-three townships included in this union have been divided into sub-districts for registration purposes. In Bishop Auckland sub-District:—Bishop Auckland, Binchester, Byers Green, Coundon, Coundon Grange, East Thickley, Eldon, Escomb, Helmington Row, Hunwick and Helmington, Merrington, Middlestone, Midridge, Midridge Grange, Newfield, Newton Cap, Old Park, Pollard's Lands, St. Andrew Auckland, St. Helen Auckland, Shildon, Westerton, Whitworth, and Windlestone. In Hamsterley sub-District:—Barony, Bolam, Crook and Billy Row, Hamsterley, Lynesack and Softley, North Bedburn, South Bedburn, West Auckland, and Witton-le-Wear. The amount collected for the relief of the poor in this union, in 1851, was £8,491 17s. The cost of in-maintenance amounted to £383 14s., and the out-relief to £4,760 2s.

THE UNION WORKHOUSE is at present in Newgate-street, but there is a new one in process of erection at Cockton Hill, which, when finished will accommodate about 300 persons. The estimated cost is about £3,500. The number of inmates in the present workhouse consists of twenty men, nine women, ten boys, and nine girls. Governor—Thomas Reynolds; matron—Ann Reynolds; surgeon—Valentine Hutchinson; clerk—William Trotter, Esq.; relieving officers—George Greenwell, for Bishop Auckland District; John Kirkup, for Hamsterley District. Registrars—Superintendent, William Trotter, Esq.; deputy, John Thornton; marriages, Thomas Dean; births and deaths, Ralph Joplin, Etherley, for Bishop Auckland District; John Kirkup, Lynesack, for Hamsterley District.

RAILWAY STATIONS.—The Bishop Auckland station of the Wear Valley Railway is situated contiguous to the southern extremity of the town. It is lighted with gas, and possesses telegraphic communication with the other portions of the country. The line is fifteen miles long, and leaves the trunk line of the North-Eastern Railway near the Leamside station, to the north of Belmont. It proceeds in a curve to the west, past Belmont, and reaches the Wear at a distance of one and a quarter miles from the main line. The river is crossed by a noble viaduct of nine arches of sixty feet span, built of massive stone-work, and 130 feet above the bed of the river. The beauty of the view from this viaduct is not surpassed by any in this country, if in Europe. We now cross to the left bank of the river, and arrive at the station near the New North Road. The view from the line near this station is one of surpassing beauty, taking in the windings of the Wear, the chief portions of the city and the ancient castle, backed by the lofty towers of our magnificent Cathedral. Proceeding from the station we come to another massive stone structure—termed the "Durham Viaduct"—which crosses the New North Road, the Mill Burn, and other low ground. It consists of eleven arches, sixty feet span, and about 100 feet high. From it on the right the traveller will obtain a view of the County Hospital, and on the left, of the city. From the embankment at the west-end of the viaduct the view of the cathedral, castle, and river, is exceedingly fine—particularly in coming from the west; on emerging from the deep cutting, the prospect bursts upon the vision of the traveller in all its splendour. Leaving the Durham Viaduct we next come to a cutting of great magnitude through the battle-field of Neville's Cross. It is about eighty feet deep, and forms the key, as it were, to the line. The next work of importance is at the river Browney, which is crossed by a very handsome and unique wooden viaduct of six openings of sixty-seven feet, and about sixty-five feet above the river. On the beautiful "half" below the viaduct, tradition says the "monks of old" intended to pitch their dwelling, prior to the erection of the abbey at the perhaps still more beautiful spot—Finchale. Proceeding on our course we pass through a cutting of some magnitude (crowned by a bridge for the road leading to Ushaw College), and emerge upon the river Durness, where we find another large wooden viaduct of eight openings or bays, and above eighty feet high. At the west-end of the structure a large embankment is formed from materials obtained at the Neville's Cross cutting. There is a fine view from the line, of Brancepeth Castle—the princely seat of the Russell family. From this point up to Auckland the line does not present any feature calling for particular remark. This brings us again to the river Wear, which the line crosses at Newton Cap by another large stone viaduct of eleven arches, of sixty feet span and 100 feet high. The view from the line on approaching Auckland is very fine, embracing the windings of the Wear, and the Bishop's Palace and park. The line, after crossing to the right bank of the Wear, passes under Bondgate by a tunnel, and behind the town, to its junction with the Wear Valley Railway. To the difficulties which invariably surround an undertaking of this description may, in this case, be added the great distance which the stones used in building the various viaducts, &c., have had to be conveyed. Those required in the construction of the works in the neighbourhood of Auckland were brought from Witton and Westerton. Those used for building the Belmont, Durham, Browney, and Durness viaducts, and other works in the neighbourhood of this city, were obtained from Pensher, Leam, Claxtons, Benton, and Rudchester (the two latter places in Northumberland). The works are being ably and satisfactorily carried out under T. E. Harrison, Esq., C.E., the engineer-in-chief; the resident engineer is R. Hodgson, Esq., C.E.; and the contractor for the work R. Cail, Esq., of Elvet Villa, near Durham.

LITERARY AND OTHER INSTITUTIONS.—The Bishop Auckland Mechanics' Institution occupies a small and inconvenient room in the Market Place, which has to serve all the purposes of a library, reading, and news-room, and lecture-room. The institution was founded in 1847, and now numbers about 100 members, who pay 4s. a-year, for which trifling sum they have access to a library of upwards of 600 volumes of useful and entertaining books, in the various departments of literature. Classes for instruction in grammar and geography have also been formed, and lectures are generally delivered during the winter months. William Hepple, Esq., president; Matthew Richley, secretary; Edward Hopper, librarian.

THE BISHOP AUCLAND FLORAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY consists of six classes of subscribers. viz:—Honorary members, subscribing 5s. and upwards annually; nurserymen, subscribing 10s.; gentlemen's gardeners, 5s.; amateurs, 5s.; and cottagers, 2s. Its exhibitions are generally held in the beginning of September of each year, when the various prizes are awarded. The society is well supported, and its affairs are conducted by a numerous and respectable committee. The Bishop of Durham is president.

In addition to these the town possesses several Friendly Societies, amongst which we may mention Cummin's Friendly Society, which has been in existence for some years, and is assisted by an annual subscription from the bishop. There are also lodges of Odd-fellows, Foresters, Ancient Shepherds, &c.

BANKS.—The bank of Messrs. Backhouse & Co., of Darlington, has a branch in the Market Place, Bishop Auckland, as has also the National Provincial Bank of England. The Savings Bank is situated in Silver-street, and was founded in 1816. For hours of business, &c., see Directory.

MARKETS, FAIRS, AND HIRINGS.—The market days are Thursday and Saturday, but the former is the regular market day, when large quantities of corn and provisions are brought to the town, and the market is numerously attended by the agricultural, mining, and manufacturing population of the neighbourhood.

The ancient fairs of the town were on Ascension-day, Corpus Christi-day, and the Thursday before the 10th of October. In the year 1825, fairs were established on the last Thursday but one in March and October, for the sale of horses, cattle, and sheep, which are much resorted to, while the three ancient fairs have almost fallen into disuse. Hirings for servants take place on the two Thursdays before May 13th, and on the two before November 19th.

COURTS OF LAW.—Petty sessions are held in the police station, High Bondgate, on the first and third Thursday in each month, when one or more of the following magistrates attend:—Sir William Eden, Bart., R. A. D. Gresley, Esq., F. D. Shafto, Esq., Henry Stobart, Esq., G. P. Wilkinson, Esq., Henry Spencer, Esq., Robert Surtees, Esq., R. L. Surtees, Esq., Samuel Smithson, Esq., and G. T. L. Blenkinsopp, Esq. William Trotter, Esq., clerk. The County Court is held in the police station, once a month. Judge, Henry Stapylton, Esq.; clerks, Messrs. Trotter and Hodgson; bailiff, Mr. John Pigg, Tenter-street.

THE GAS WORKS are situated at the southern extremity of the town near the railway station, and the pipes are laid throughout the streets, with the exception of some of the newer portions of the town. The first gas works in Bishop Auckland were constructed by Mr. West in 1835, but they became the property of a joint-stock company in 1846. The public are supplied with gas at 5s. 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet. The works contain 16 retorts, and one gasometer, but it is in contemplation to have another of a much larger size, as the present one is quite inadequate to supply the increasing demand. Christopher Harris, manager; John Hay, secretary.

CHARITIES.—Besides the Grammar and Barrington Schools, which have been already described, this parish possesses the following charities, viz.:—Amongst his other charities, Nathaniel, Lord Crewe left £20 a-year for teaching, and £30 a-year for clothing 30 poor boys of Auckland. The allowance for clothing, which is superintended by the incumbent of the parish, was doubled by the trustees in 1811. The annuity for teaching boys is paid to the master of the Barrington School.—Edward Walton, a member of the Society of Friends, bequeathed £2,000 for the establishment of schools at Bishop Auckland, Shildon, Sunderland, and Shotton. This sum is now vested in the purchase of £3,000 new four-per-cent. stock; and the income is equally divided amongst the schools. Each of the masters is paid £20 per annum, and £10 is applied in the purchase of books for the children, and in the apprenticing of the pupils. The master of Bishop Auckland School instructs 20 poor children, in reading, writing, and accounts, free of expense. Other children who attend pay for their education. The school is situated near the Friends' Meeting-house, and is under the management of a committee of the Society of Friends.—Bishop Cressin founded Bead-houses for two poor men and women in Bishop Auckland, in which town there are houses and other property belonging to them, which are let for £27 1s. per annum, besides a rent-charge of £4 yearly upon an estate in Allertonshire. The beads-people receive £3 6s. 8d. every three years for cloaks; also £4 annually from Lord Crewe's trustees, and £20 from Bishop Barrington's charities. The Bead-houses have been rebuilt by the present bishop, and each of the inmates receives a gift of 10s. 6d. from him at Christmas.—William Wall, by will, dated September 24th, 1679, bequeathed the following annual rent-charges out of his property in Escomb and Bondgate, viz.:—To the poor of the township of Bondgate in Auckland, 15s.; to the master of the Free School there, 15s.; and to the poor-box, or to the rest of the poor of St. Andrew's Auckland, 15s.; the several sums to be paid at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide. These sums are paid in accordance with the wishes of the donor.—Thomas Pearson, in April 16th, 1713, demised a messuage and farm at Westerton, which he held of the dean and chapter of Durham, to the incumbent of St. Andrew's Auckland, and his successors, in trust for the poor of the parish. The lease has since been renewed from time to time, for 21 years. The income at present is about £60 a-year, which is carried to the same account with the proceeds of the charities mentioned below, amounting to £19, and the money collected at the sacrament. Out of the amount, £2 10s. is paid annually to the parish clerk, in lieu of Easter-dues from the poor persons relieved. From £15 to £25 a-year has been distributed to the poor of Bishop Auckland, in sums varying from 1s. to 3s.; and from £10 to £18 to the overseers of the other townships for distribution. A sum is placed in a bank, to provide for each succeeding renewal of the lease. In the township of Byer's Green there is a cottage and about four-and-a-half acres of land, called Nutty Hag, the rent of which, £10 a-year, is added to the account last mentioned.—Francis Langstaffe, on the 28th June, in the third year of the reign of Queen Ann, gave £200, with interest at four-and-a-half per cent, in trust for the poor of the parish. This sum was lent on mortgage of some premises in Bondgate, held by the Bishop of Durham; and £9 a-year, the interest, is carried to the same account as Pearson's charity.—Apprentice Fund: £2 5s. is received as interest of £50, secured on the property last mentioned, and supposed to have been lent to John Hall in 1761. The sum of £12, stated to have been given by Messrs. Walker and Robinson, is in the Savings Bank of the town, and produces £1 15s. 8d. interest. The amount of these two annual sums is divided by the churchwardens equally among eight or ten poor apprentices, each of whom receives the same for three successive years. There were three other charities in addition to those just given, but they have been for some time lost.

BIOGRAPHY.—John Bird, one of the most celebrated mathematical instrument makers of the last century, was a native of Bishop Auckland. He worked for a short time as an engraver in London, and in 1740, invented an instrument for finding the latitude at sea, which surpassed all those previously used. He subsequently became the intimate friend of Emerson. The year of his death is unknown, and the only memorial preserved of him is a portrait, now in the possession of Mr. Janson, of Bishop Auckland.—Major-General Hodgson was born at Bishop Auckland, July 2nd, 1777, and received the principal portion of his school education at the Durham Grammar School, then under the superintendence of Dr. Britton. He was intended for the legal profession, but following the bent of his mind he entered the military service of the East India Company; and in 1799, at the age of 22, he embarked as a cadet for India, and in May, 1800, became lieutenant in the 10th Regiment of Native Infantry. He subsequently devoted his mind to scientific pursuits; and in 1817, being then captain, he was selected, with Lieutenant Herbert, to conduct a survey of the rivers Ganges and Jumna, and to determine the height and positions of the Himalaya mountains. After enduring great hardships, and overcoming obstacles apparently insurmountable, the survey was completed, and its results have become well known. Four sheets of the atlas of India were made from General Hodgson's trigonometrical surveys, and in the great geographical work of Ritter, his authority is appealed to as definitively fixing the positions which he surveyed. General Hodgson was appointed Revenue Surveyor-General of India in May, 1821, and in 1826 he became Surveyor-General, which office he held till 1827, when he returned to England, and resided for some time in the city of Durham. Having acquired the rank of Major-General, he was appointed, in 1845, to the command of the district of Rohilcund, and died at Umballah, on the 20th March, 1848, aged 71 years.

COUNDON GRANGE township comprises an area of 615 acres, and its annual value is £1,812 11s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 25; in 1811, 23; in 1821, 28; in 1831, 44; in 1841, 313; and in 1851, it had attained to 585 souls. There were also at the latter period 102 inhabited houses, and two uninhabited. The manor of Coundon Grange, in the time of Bishop Hattfield, contained 380 acres. With the exception of a small copyhold portion at the southern extremity, the whole township is leasehold, under the Bishop of Durham, who is also lord of the manor. The principal lessees are Thomas Peacock, Esq., Mr. Mowbray Lookup, and Mr. John Lookup. The Black Boy Branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway extends into this township.

The Hamlet of Coundon Grange is situated about one and a half mile east-south-east of Bishop Auckland, and commands a fine view of the vale of the Wear.

Black Boy, a colliery village in this township, is said to derive its name from a roadside public house, and is chiefly inhabited by the workmen of the neighbouring colliery. Here is a school, supported by the colliery company, and attended by about 160 children of both sexes. Richard Underwood, teacher.

The Black Boy Colliery is worked by Nicholas Wood and Company, and its produce is shipped from Middlesborough Docks and Stockton. This colliery was originally for land sale, and has now two working pits and an engine pit. At the depth of forty-two fathoms is the five-quarter seam, consisting of three feet four inches of good coal, half an inch of land, three feet six inches of coal, eight inches of coarse coal, and one foot six inches of splint; at sixty-nine fathoms the Harvey seam is found, and at forty-five fathoms lower, the Brockwell.

POLLARDS' LANDS township now constitutes the eastern suburbs of the town of Bishop Auckland. It contains 458 acres, and the value of property assessed to the county-rate, in 1853, was £1,214 10s. It contained, in 1801, 82 inhabitants; in 1811, 93; in 1821, 117; in 1831, 138; in 1841, 224; and in 1851, 212. This township is said to have acquired its name from the fact of a champion knight of that name, for slaying a wild boar, having had as much land granted to him by one of the bishops as he could ride round while the grantor dined. In after ages, the legend of the boar seems to have been changed to one of a serpent, as the following speech, made by the principal proprietor in the township, on the first entrance of every bishop, will sufficiently prove:—"My lord, I, in behalf of myself, as well as several others, possessors of the Pollards' Lands, do humbly present your lordship with this falchion, at your first coming here, wherewith, as the tradition goeth, he slew of old a venomous serpent, which did much harm to man and beast, and by performing this service we hold our lands." These lands were long held by the Pollards, who also possessed a portion of Coundon Moor, the Eland, with Birtley, Pollarden or Newfield, Innstalle, Moreflatt, Gawnesflatt, Langfeld, Kyneflatt Chapel, Thornflatt, Quynning Meadow, Edirley, and a number of tenements in Bishop Auckland. This family became extinct in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; and, since that time, the lands have been much divided, and have passed through numerous hands. The present proprietors are the Bishop of Durham, who is also lord of the manor, Richard Bowser, Esq., Thomas Peacock, Esq., William Trotter, Esq., and several others. For Directory see Bishop Auckland.

AUCKLAND ST. HELEN'S PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, which comprises the constaberies of St. Helen's Auckland, West Auckland, Barony and Evenwood, is bounded on the north by the newly-formed chapelry of Etherley, on the west by Hamsterley chapelry, on the south-west by Cockfield, on the south by Ingleton chapelry, on the south-east by Heighington parish, and on the north-east by Shildon chapelry and the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, from the latter of which it was anciently absconded:

BARONY AND EVENWOOD form a township in the chapelry, comprising an area of 5,336 acres, and the value of property assessed for the county-rate, in 1853, was £4,177 10s. 6d. The number of inhabitants, in 1801, was 769; in 1811, 710; in 1821, 785; in 1831, 1,019; in 1841, 1,729; and in 1851, 1,381 souls. At the latter period, it contained 300 inhabited houses, and 68 uninhabited. The Haggerleazes branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway extends for upwards of a mile in this township. Evenwood was one of the places given by King Canute to the church of Durham, at the time of his pilgrimage to St. Cuthbert's shrine. It subsequently became private property; but was again conveyed to the see in the time of Bishop Beck, and, at the end of the thirteenth century, a large park or hunting ground was formed here by the bishops of Durham. The manor was granted by Bishop Beaumont to Lord Ralph de Neville for life in 1331; and, by Hatfield's Survey, we find that Lord Neville held the Colt Park, of the inheritance of John de Evenwood; John de Sadberg held a capital messuage and lands; Hugh Willison held lands and tenements; and Thomas Hansard held the Barony Tofts. In 1808, there was a blomestage, blomary, or iron furnace, in Gordonwood and Evenwood Park, which was then let by Bishop Hatfield, at 16s. per week. By a survey taken in 1646, it appears that the Barony then comprised Evenwood, Killerby, West Auckland, a decayed baronial mansion in a park of 300 acres, a great common called Raley-Fell, and a large colliery called Thorne, where the bishop, in right of his jura regalia, had "all manner of privileges, royalties, franchises, and immunities." The township is still nearly all copyhold under the Bishop of Durham, who receives from it about 4d. an acre. Several detached portions of freehold, and a large tract at the south-western extremity of the township, are the property of John Bowes, Esq., M.P. Raley-Fell, an extensive district in the northern part of the township, was divided into allotments under the authority of an act passed in the 32nd George II. 1759; the royalty still belongs to the bishop.

The Village of Evenwood is pleasantly situated on the summit of a steep bank, which rises on the south side of the Gaunless, five miles south-west from Bishop Auckland. It contains a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, a school, a corn-mill, and several public-houses and tradesmen's shops. There was formerly an old castle here; but its remains were totally demolished in 1826, and its site is now occupied by a farm house. Evenwood Colliery, in this township, is the property of Messrs Armstrong and Co., and gives employment to a considerable number of workmen.

Barony is situated on the north side of the Gaunless, and is connected with Evenwood by a bridge. Oaks, a hamlet about three-quarters of a mile from the village of Evenwood, consists of an assemblage of cottages, and a Methodist chapel; the latter was erected in 1835. Toft Hill is a long straggling village, in that portion of the township known by the name of Barony. Ramshaw is a hamlet, four-and-a-half miles south-south-west from Bishop Auckland.

ST. HELEN'S AUCKLAND, a township and village, in the chapelry of the same name, contains 1,480 acres, the property of Sir George Musgrave, who is also the lord of the manor, Sir William Eden, Bart., the representatives of the late Sir Thomas J. Clavering, Bart., and others. The property was valued for the county rate in 1853 at £3,948 10s. The township contained in 1801, 206 inhabitants; in 1811, 209; in 1821, 220; in 1831, 410; in 1841, 720; and in 1851, 789. The West Auckland Branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway intersects the township. The greater portion of the property here was formerly held by the Dalton family, from whom it passed to the Edens and Williamsons, and subsequently to the Carrs and Milbankes, coming ultimately to the present proprietors.

The Village of St. Helen's Auckland is situated three miles south-south-west of Bishop Auckland, on the road from that place to Barnard Castle. It contains a few tradesmen's shops and public houses, and is principally inhabited by the workmen employed in the neighbouring collieries.

The Church is an ancient Gothic structure, dedicated to St. Helen, and formerly contained a chantry, under the patronage of the Blessed Virgin. It consists of a nave with side aisles and chancel, a low western bell turret, and an entrance porch on the south. The exterior walls have been embattled; but, from successive alterations, have lost much of their original character. This church is still encumbered with what has not been unhappily termed "pew lumber," in the shape of high boxes, with balustraded tops, of about the year 1600. The church will accommodate about 450 persons. In pulling down the south wall some years ago, three skulls, one of them quite entire, were found in the masonry. The parish register commences in 1593. The living, which is a curacy, not in charge, of the certified value of £13 9s. 4d., was, at the suppression of the College of Auckland, to which it belonged, left in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. In 1712 and 1735, this curacy was augmented with lands and tithes, purchased for £400, half of which sum was given by Sir John Eden, Bart., and the rest from Queen Anne's Bounty, but this endowment appears to have been lost. In 1769, Lord Crewe's trustees gave £40 to the incumbent, to repair and enlarge his dwelling-house. This building has been long unfit for residence; but in 1852, a grant of £400 was obtained from the Maltby fund towards the erection of a new one. This is one of the livings entitled to £10 per annum under the will of Lord Crewe. The annual income of the benefice is stated at £220. Incumbent, the Rev. Matthew Chester.

A Primitive Methodist Chapel was erected here in 1853.

Here is a handsome school-house on which is the following inscription:—"ERECTED BY THE OWNERS OF ST. HELEN'S COLLIERY, WITH THE ASSISTANCE OF THE OWNERS OF THE ADJOINING COLLIERIES, ON LAND GENEROUSLY PRESENTED FOR THE PURPOSE BY SIR GEORGE MUSGRAVE, BART., AND SUPPORTED BY VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS. MDCCCXLVI." This school was established for the instruction of the pitmen's children of the neighbourhood, and is efficiently conducted by Mr. William Sutherland.

St. Helen's Auckland Colliery is one of those collieries which were called into existence by the formation of the Stockton and Darlington Railway. It is the property of Sir George Musgrave, Bart., and a portion of the royalty belongs to the representatives of the late Sir Thomas J. Clavering, Bart., and to the Rev. Matthew Chester. It is worked by Joseph Pease, Esq., and partners. The distance of this colliery from the shipping place on the Tees is 26½ miles. The coals were formerly shipped for London, and the various places on the coast; but of late years a considerable quantity have been sent abroad. Coke is extensively manufactured here.

Brusselton, which forms part of the estates of Sir George Musgrave, Bart., is a district situated to the south-east of the village of St. Helen's Auckland. It comprises two farms, occupying a lofty eminence, which was formerly covered with trees, and bore the name of Brusselton Wood.

Woodhouse is situated to the north-east of St. Helen's Auckland, and was anciently held by the Pollards. Here is a colliery, which was sunk about seventeen years ago.

Charities.—Frances Farrow, in 1675, bequeathed to the poor of the several townships of this chapelry, the sum of £1 10s. a-year, which is now paid by the owner of a field called Thornbury Garth, in West Auckland, and divided in the following proportions by the churchwardens of each township amongst poor widows not receiving parochial relief, viz:—St. Helen's Auckland, 8s. 9d.; West Auckland, 11s. 3d.; and Evenwood and Barony, 10s.—Elizabeth Donald, in March 1789, gave a rent-charge of £5 a-year, in trust that it should be paid to a schoolmaster for instructing ten poor girls, natives of the town and township of West Auckland, whose parents should be resident in and belong to the same, in the principles of the Church of England, and to read and write.—In 1798, Margaret Hubbock built a school-room in West Auckland, and endowed it with three acres of land on the waste, subject to an annual rent of 1s. to the bishop, and now let for £10 10s. a-year. She likewise gave £100 in augmentation of this charity, which is in Messrs. Backhouse's bank at Darlington, and bears interest at four per cent per annum. The master also receives £10 a-year from the Bishop of Durham as a voluntary donation. He teaches the poor children of West Auckland reading, writing, and accounts, free of any charge, on account of Mrs. Donald's gift; ten at the rate of 1s. a-quarter, in respect to the rent of the land and interest of the money at the bankers; and ten more at the charge of 15d. a-quarter, in respect of the bishop's gift; and he is at liberty to take other children at a certain quarterage, which is rather lower than the customary fees. The thirty children just mentioned are appointed by the trustees, none being considered eligible under seven years of age.

WEST AUCKLAND is a township and village in this chapelry, containing 3,720 acres, and in 1853 the amount of property assessed to the county rate was £5,396. The principal proprietors are the Bishop of Durham, Sir William Eden, Bart., Mr. Frederick Glenton, and Mr. William Bowlank. The population of the township in 1801 was 978; in 1811, 971; in 1821, 1,106; in 1831, 1,509; in 1841, 2,310; and in 1851, 2,303 souls. This increase of population is attributed to the opening out of new collieries. This township is crossed by the Haggerleazes Branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, there were in West Auckland "eighteen villains, each of whom held an ox-gang of land, and provided three men weekly in autumn to win and lead the hay, during which service they had a corrody; each led corn two days, and together they rendered eighteen hens, nine score eggs, one milch cow, and made three carryings between the Tyne and Tees. William Coupman and others held divers parcels of land under certain rents, and the services of ploughing and harrowing the lord's land, making hay, preparing ridges of fallow in autumn, and serving on embassies. All the villains of Aucklandshire, to wit, of North Auckland, West Auckland, Escomb, and Newton, provided for the great hunts of the bishop, for every ox-gang of land in their tenure, one cord; and they made a hall for the bishop in the forest, with a buttery and buttery hatch, a chamber and other conveniences. They also constructed a chapel, and they had of charity 2s. They made their part of the hedge round the lodges; and they had, upon the bishop's departure, a tun of ale, or half a tun, if so much should remain. They were to keep the hawk-yard, and were entitled to make eighteen booths at St. Cuthbert's fairs." Amongst the drainage tenants named in Hatfield's survey, we find John Dalton, whose posterity held property in Auckland for many centuries. Besides the Daltons, the families of Taillours, Boltons, Sockburns, Coupmans, Batmans, Fishes, Allgoods, Forsters, and Parkinsons, held possessions here. William Tailbois, of West Auckland, and Jane his wife, by fine, July 29th, 33rd Elizabeth, conveyed the manor of West Auckland, and all their lands there, as well as their estates in Evenwood, Wolsingham, and Gateshead, in trust to John, William, and Ralph Eden, sons of Jane, to the use of John Eden in tail mail; remainder to William in tail mail, remainder to Ralph, remainder to Jane, with remainder to John in fee-simple; and their possessions are now held by Sir William Eden, Bart. There are quarries of stone and slate in the north part of the township, which are held under the bishop, by a 21 years' lease, at the annual rent of £3 3s. without a renewal fine.

The Village of West Auckland is situated at the junction of the high roads from Durham to Barnard Castle, and from Darlington to Wolsingham, about three-and-a-half miles south-by-west of Bishop Auckland. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists, have chapels here; and Bethel Chapel, belonging to the Wesleyan Association, was opened in 1837. A Mechanics' Institution was established under the patronage of Edmund Backhouse, Esq., about ten years ago, and now possesses a library of about 400 volumes. The subscription is three shillings per annum. The National School has been amalgamated with the Endowed School (see Charities, page 292). Several houses in the village bear marks of antiquity. The labouring population of West Auckland are for the most part engaged in the neighbouring collieries. To meet their numerous requirements there are several shops, &c., in the village. Here is an old established ironfoundry, which affords employment to a considerable number of persons. The village possesses a post office, a rural police station, and four parish constables; the centre of the green is occupied by a public pant, erected some years ago, and supplied with water from a neighbouring reservoir, but the supply is scarcely equal to the demand. A stone bridge crosses the Gaunless between St. Helen's and West Auckland. A fair for the sale of cattle, horses, &c., was commenced here in October, 1836, and has since been held annually on the 17th October. Hirings for servants also take place on the 12th and 19th November.

West Auckland Colliery is worked by Messrs. Edmund Backhouse & Co., the royalty belongs to the Bishop of Durham. Norlees Colliery is situated a little to the north-west of the village.

Luttrington is a district on the southern boundary of the township, and was given by Canute to the Church of Durham, under which it was held by a family bearing the local name. It afterwards became the property of the Bowes family, the Collingwoods, and the Tonges. It now belongs to Robert Surtees, Esq. An adjoining farm, called Bolton Garths, is the property of the Duke of Cleveland.

Royal Oak, a hamlet at the south-eastern extremity of the township, is five miles south-by-east from Bishop Auckland, and is partly in the township of Redworth, parish of Heighington.

BYERS GREEN PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, which was formed in pursuance of an order in council, August 8th, 1845, comprises those parts of the township of Byers Green which formerly belonged to the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, part of the township of Binchester, and the township of Newfield. It is bounded on the north by Brancepeth parish, on the west by the river Wear, on the south by the township of Bondgate and the remaining part of the township of Binchester, and on the east by the chapelry of Whitworth.

BYERS GREEN, a township and village, in the chapelry of the same name, comprises an area of 997 acres, and the amount of property assessed to the county rate in 1858 was £2,357 9s. 7d. The population of the township in 1801 was 77; in 1811, 199; in 1821, 281; in 1831, 207; in 1841, 489; and in 1851, it had increased to 1,025 souls. In ancient times we find this place held by the Parks, and afterwards by the Nevilles. Byers Green Moor or Common was enclosed in accordance with an act passed in the 45th George III., and the boundaries were first perambulated in August, 1805. The royalty was reserved to the Bishop of Durham, under whom several portions of the township are held by copyhold tenure. The principal proprietor at present is R. D. Shafto, Esq. The West Durham Railway enters this township from the north-west, and joins the Byers Green Branch of the Clarence line. There are some limeworks in the township.

The Village of Byers Green is situated about three miles north-east from Bishop Auckland, and contains a post-office, rural police-station, several public-houses, and the usual shops. It is supplied with water from a public pant near the church. A public ferry crosses the Wear at the north of the village.

The Church is a neat building, dedicated to St. Peter, and was consecrated on the 10th July, 1845. It is in the early English style, and possesses 288 sittings, 212 of which are free and unappropriated, in consequence of a grant having been received from the Incorporated Society for Building and Repairing Churches. The residue of the cost of erection was defrayed by the Bishop of Durham. The church consists of nave and chancel, with an entrance porch, surmounted by a bell turret on the west. The interior is neatly decorated, and the pulpit consists of a curious selection of antique carvings. The eastern window is of stained glass, and contains representations of the Crucifixion, and Sts. Peter and Andrew. There is also a stained window in the body of the church, to the memory of William H. Robson, who was killed by an explosion of gas in Byers Green Colliery. The living is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, who, in 1853, gave £100 towards the purchase of a piece of land to be attached to it. The value of the living is £180 per annum. A parsonage house was built in 1851, to which £350 was contributed from the Maltby fund. Rev. James W. Hick, incumbent.

The National School is under government inspection, and is attended by about eighty children of both sexes. John Hodgson, teacher.

Biography.—Thomas Wright, F.R.S., an eminent mathematician and astronomer, was born at Byers Green, on the 22nd September, 1711, and in early life was bound apprentice to a clockmaker; but, not liking his servitude, he ran away from his master, and afterwards becoming a seaman, he made a voyage from Sunderland to Amsterdam in 1730. Having no inclination for the naval profession, he opened a mathematical school at Sunderland, where, in 1731, he projected a general representation of Euclid's elements in one large sheet, and in the following year compiled an almanack, in imitation of that of Oxford, calculated for the meridian of Durham. He subsequently wrote several mathematical and astronomical works, and was offered the chief professorship of navigation in the imperial academy of St. Petersburg, but he did not accept it. He died at his house, Byers Green Lodge, and was interred at the church of St. Andrew's Auckland on the 25th February, 1785. Speaking of Mr. Wright, the Rev. Professor Chevallier, of Durham University observes, "It appears that he anticipated many speculations of much later date; and such writers as Arago and Sturm are engaged in vindicating Wright's literary and scientific claims. I perceive Humboldt refers to Wright, in his Cosmos."

Charities.—The charities of this chapelry are described with those of Bishop Auckland.

BINCHESTER.—A small portion of this township is still attached to the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, while the greater portion is included in this chapelry. It comprises an area of 500 statute acres, and the annual value is £528. In 1801, there were 42 inhabitants; in 1811, 45; in 1821, 49; in 1831, 37; in 1841, 43; and in 1851, 30. This township contains the site of a large Roman station, said to be the Vinovium of Antoninus, and the Binovium of Ptolemy. Mr. Cade says that Binchester is situated on the stratum called the Fosseway, and was a celebrated city of the Brigantes, sacred to Bacchus, and deriving its name from the festivals held at it in honour of that deity. Many coins, altars, inscriptions, and pieces of Roman pottery have been found at this station, which covers an area of about 29 acres in extent, and is a prolific mine of Roman antiquities. About fifty years ago, the remains of a sudatory or bath were discovered here, in a singularly perfect state. The station occupies an elevated piece of ground, about 80 feet above the Wear, which washes its western side. The ground within the station slopes on one side towards the east, and, on account of old inclosures, and long cultivation, it is now very difficult to ascertain its exact plan, or that of its outworks. In the history of the church of Durham, Binchester is mentioned as one of the villas pledged to the Earls of Northumberland, and never restored; but a large tract of land is still held under the bishop's tenures; and by Bishop Hatfield's survey, we find that Robert, of Binchester, held Binchester and Hunwick, by virtue of the bishop's grant. His descendants retained possession of it till 1420, when it was purchased by Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland. It was confiscated on the attainder of the last earl. It afterwards came into the possession of the Wrens, from whom it was purchased by Charles Lyon, Esq.

Directory.—The farmers are Edward Dodds, Henry Longstaff, and James Robson.

NEWFIELD is a small township in this chapelry, containing 199 acres, and the property valued for the county-rate in 1853 amounted to £609. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 11; in 1811, 16; in 1821, 11; in 1831, 8; in 1841, 845; and in 1851, 1,016 souls. This increase is principally owing to the opening of the coal mines. The West Durham Railway passes over a portion of this township. The property in Newfield is freehold; the principal proprietors are the representatives of the late R. W. Myddleton, Esq., the Rev. R. Grey, and the Newfield Coal Company.

The Village of Newfield, which consists principally of houses for the workmen employed at the colliery, is situated three miles north of Bishop Auckland, and possesses a National School, to which the colliery owners are liberal subscribers. The average number of children in attendance is 100. Samuel Ager, teacher.

Newfield Colliery is carried on by John Robson, Esq., and partners, and the coals are shipped at the West Hartlepool Docks, to which place they are conveyed by the West Hartlepool Harbour and Dock Railways. Coke is also manufactured to a considerable extent, and from its excellence, is in great demand, both for home and foreign consumption.

Directory.—Samuel Ager, teacher; Archibald Dunbar, farm bailiff; John Hutchinson, farmer; and John Stainbank, victualler.

COUNDON DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish of Coundon comprises the townships of Coundon, Westerton, and Windlestone; and was formed by an order in council, dated February 2nd, 1842, constituting until that period a portion of the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland. The coal found in this district is of good household quality, and although it is distant about twenty-five miles from the shipping places on the Tees, it has been, and still continues to be, worked to advantage.

COUNDON township contains 584 statute acres, the property of William L. Wharton, Esq., T. Greenwell, Esq., John Proud, Esq., Messrs. Johnson and Manisty, and others. The amount of property assessed for the county-rate in 1858 was £3,118. The population in 1801 was 163; in 1811, 163; in 1821, 222; in 1831, 475; in 1841, 990; and in 1851, 1,073 souls. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, the demesnes of Great Coundon, containing six caracutes of land, with the pasture and sheep, were in the hands of the bishop. In Little Coundon there were twelve cottagers, each of whom held six acres of land, and worked two days in the week, from St. Peter's Day to Martinmas, and the rest of the year one day in the week: each tilling four acres of land, and rendering a hen and 100 eggs. From Hatfield's survey we learn there were four free tenants, that William de Coundon, chaplain, held a cottage and six acres, and that there were seventeen cottagers, who rendered similar services to those mentioned in Boldon Book. Nearer to our own time, we find lands held here by the Padcocks, the Bracks, and the Hotons; the property is now much divided, and held by the gentlemen above mentioned.

The Village of Coundon is situated two miles east of Bishop Auckland, and is chiefly occupied by the colliers employed in the neighbouring mines. The rapid increase of population of late years, has caused a corresponding increase in the size of the village, which now possesses a goodly number of public houses, shops, &c.

The Church, dedicated to St. James, was erected in 1841, upon a site given by William Lloyd Wharton, Esq., and the cost of the structure, amounting to £900; was, with the exception of £50 from the Church Building Society, defrayed by Bishop Maltby. It is a plain, neat edifice, containing 400 sittings, of which 300 are free and unappropriated. There is a glebe house; and the living is valued at £250 per annum. Rev. Charles Duberly, B.A., incumbent.

The National School was erected at the same time as the church; it is at present conducted by Mr. Robert Wright.

Coundon Gate Colliery is one of those that have been extensively worked by Messrs. Edmund Backhouse and Co. The coals are shipped on the Tees and at Hartlepool West Docks.

Howlish Hall, the ancient residence of the Hoppers, and more recently of the Walkers, is now occupied by O. L. Wood, Esq.

WESTERTON township, which adjoins that of Coundon on the north and east, is nearly all leasehold under the dean and chapter of Durham. It comprises an area of 697 acres, and the property was valued to the county-rate, in 1853, at £1,271 17s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 56; in 1811, 58; in 1821, 77; in 1831, 85; in 1841, 89; and in 1851, 210 souls.

The Hamlet of Westerton occupies an elevated situation about half a mile north-north-east from Coundon. Here is a lofty round-tower, called "Westerton Folly," which was erected for an observatory by Mr. Wright, the eminent mathematician, of Byers Green.

Westerton Colliery is the property of C. L. Wood, Esq.

Directory.—William Horsman, victualler; and the farmers are Joseph French, George Robinson, Farrow Tweddle, Barbara Turner, and Ann Wood.

WINDLESTONE, a township, four miles east by south of Bishop Auckland, contains 1,540 acres, and forms the south-eastern portion of the chapelry of Coundon. It contained in 1801, 101 inhabitants; in 1811, 86; in 1821, 94; in 1831, 129; in 1841, 186; and in 1851, 238. The property was rated for the county-rate, in 1859, at £1,138. During the episcopacy of Bishop Bury, David de Holgrave and Ellen his wife obtained permission from that prelate to grant property in Windlestone to a chaplain, for performing daily offices for ever, in the church of Bothal, in the county of Northumberland, for the souls of their parents and ancestors. A portion of the manor was held by the Abbey of Neasham, and the Ogles, Lumleys, and other families, also held property here. The Edens became proprietors in the early part of the reign of Elizabeth, and by successive purchases they at length acquired possession of the whole township, and also considerable property in West Auckland. During the parliamentary wars, the Edens sided with the monarch. Robert Eden, one of this family, was created a baronet in November, 1672, and represented the county of Durham in the parliaments of 1678-9, 1689, 1698, 1705, and 1710. He died in 1720, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir John Eden, Bart., who sat for the county in the parliaments of 1713, 1714, and 1722. Sir John dying in 1728, the family honours and estates devolved upon his only son, Sir Robert, who married Mary, youngest daughter of William Davidson, Esq., by whom he had five sons and two daughters. Robert, his second son, was created a baronet in 1776, and was subsequently governor of Maryland. William, the third son, became chief secretary for Ireland, and afterwards was sent as ambassador to the court of France. In 1789, he was elevated to the Irish peerage, and was next appointed ambassador to the states of Holland. Whilst at the Hague, he was created Baron Auckland, which title is now borne by the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells. The fifth son, Henry, became an Irish peer, under the title of Baron Henly. Sir Robert Eden died in 1755, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir John, who represented the county of Durham in three successive parliaments, and on his demise, in August, 1812, the family estates were inherited by his eldest son, Sir Robert Johnson Eden, who assumed the additional surname by royal license in 1811. He died, without issue, on the 3rd September, 1844, aged 70, and was succeeded by Sir William Eden, the present baronet, who is descended from the second son of the Sir Robert above mentioned.

Windlestone Hall, which has been the seat of the Eden family for upwards of a century and a half, is situated on the south side of the road from Bishop Auckland to Rushyford. It was rebuilt by Sir Robert Johnson Eden, Bart. about twenty years ago, when spacious offices were erected, and the grounds handsomely laid out, and ornamented with trees and shrubs, at an expense of about £40,000. It is now a noble mansion of ashlar stone, with a colonnade of Doric pillars at the east front, and with its pleasure grounds, &c., forms an important feature in the scenery of the neighbourhood.

Rushyford, a village in this township, is situated on the great north road, five and a half miles east by south from Bishop Auckland. Here is a school, which was built and endowed by the late Sir R. J. Eden, Bart. This village was the scene of a marauding exploit of Sir Gilbert de Middleton, and Walter de Selby, who, with a troop of outlaws, here waylaid and seized Bishop Beaumont, and the cardinals who accompanied him.

ESCOMB PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, which anciently formed part of the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, comprises no dependant townships, and is bounded on the north by the river Wear, on the west and south-west by Etherley, on the south and south-east by St. Helen's Auckland, and on the east by St. Andrew's Auckland. It contains 840 acres, and the annual value of the property assessed to the county rate, in 1853, was £2,336 11s. 5d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 162; in 1811, 190; in 1821, 232; in 1831, 282; in 1841, 510; and in 1851 it had increased to 1,293 souls. Escomb was one of the places mortgaged to the Earls of Northumberland; and at the period of the compilation of Boldon Book, there were here thirteen villains, each of whom held an ox-gang of land, and rendered similar services as the villains of North Auckland. A toft and croft with four acres were held by a collier, on condition of his providing coals for the cart-smith of Coundon. Other parties also held different portions by various services. At the time of Hatfield's survey, we find the Exchequer lands noted; and it is also recorded that Sir Ralph Eure, of Witton, held lands at Shaly field and Todstones; and that the master and brethren of Sherburn Hospital held a messuage and croft under the Bellasis family. The commons, or wastes, called West Mill Batts, Etherley Moor, Escomb Batts, and Escomb Carr, containing together by estimation 360 acres, were enclosed and divided amongst the neighbouring proprietors, in accordance with the provisions of an act of parliament, 44th George III., the manorial rights, &c., being reserved to the bishop. The principal landowners are T. Johnson, Esq., Henry Stobart, Esq., Messrs. Jackson, of Woodside, Mr. Richard Jackson, of Stockton, Thomas Peacock, Esq., and Messrs. Bolckow and Vaughan. The Weardale Railway passes through this township.

The Village of Escomb is situated on the south bank of the Wear, about one-and-a-half mile west from Bishop Auckland, and comprises three public-houses, a Primitive Methodist chapel, an ordinary day school, and a rural police station. The establishment of the neighbouring collieries and iron works has added materially to the importance of the village.

The Church is an ancient building, situated in an open space, in the centre of the village, and consists of a nave and small chancel, separated by a narrow circular arch. The font is a low octagonal basin of freestone. This church was formerly prebendal to Auckland College, but, in 1501, Bishop Fox united it to the deanery, and it is now a curacy not in charge, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and of the certified value of £13. Total income about £204 per annum. Rev. H. A. Atkinson, M.A., is the incumbent.

The Parsonage House is a commodious and substantial structure, in the Elizabethan style, situated on an elevated site south of the village.

Escomb Colliery adjoins the village on the south, and is worked by Henry Stobart, Esq., who is also engaged in the manufacture of fire bricks. A considerable quantity of coke is manufactured here.

Etherley Lane, a hamlet in this chapelry, about two miles west-by-south of Bishop Auckland, contains a school, a blacksmith's shop, two public-houses, and a number of workmen's dwellings.

Witton Park is a village in this township, situated at the north-west angle of the chapelry, about three miles west of Bishop Auckland, and owes its existence to the flourishing and extensive iron works of Messrs. Bolckow and Vaughan, which are in the adjoining township of Witton-le-Wear. These works, which comprise four blast furnaces, afford employment to about 1,000 workmen, by whom the neighbouring village is almost exclusively inhabited. Here are chapels belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and a school attended by about 70 children. Divine service is performed in the school every Sunday by the curate of Escomb. The village contains a few public-houses and tradesmen's shops; and though the houses are of stone, and substantially built, the streets are much too narrow. The supply of water is very limited.

Woodside is a hamlet in this chapelry, situated about a mile west-by-north of Escomb.

ETHERLEY PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

Etherley parochial chapelry has been formed chiefly from the ancient chapelry of St. Helen's Auckland, and its limits were arranged by the incumbents of the adjoining parishes in 1834. It is about five miles from east to west, and two from north to south, and its population in 1851 was 961 souls. It is bounded on the north by Hamsterley, Witton-le-Wear, and Escomb, on the west by Hamsterley, on the south by St. Helen's Auckland, and on the east by St. Andrew's Auckland. The chapelry comprises portions of the townships of West Auckland, Bishop Auckland, Evenwood and Barony, and Pollard's Lands. Etherley, or Edirley, was anciently possessed by the Pollards, one of whom, John Pollard, held it in capite, at 10s. 10d. rent, in the 5th year of the episcopacy of Bishop Skirlaw. This district was formerly very thinly peopled; and in the early part of last century was infested by a gang of freebooters, who levied a sort of black mail on the neighbouring farmers. The coal mines of Etherley have long been considered of great value; and for some time before the introduction of railways their produce was in great request. Upon the formation of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, Old Etherley Colliery was undertaken by Henry Stobart and partners. The mines at present working are the Etherley Colliery at Escomb, the Jane Pit, in the immediate vicinity of the Witton Park Iron-works, and the Carterthorn Colliery, near Toft Hill.

The Village of Etherley is long and scattered, and chiefly occupied by pitmen and agricultural labourers. It is about three-and-a-half miles south-west of Bishop Auckland, and comprises a Primitive and Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a girls' school, an infant school, and a rural police station. The latter occupies the ground-floor of the Primitive Methodist Chapel. Water is supplied from a fountain or reservoir, called "St. Cuthbert's Pant," which was erected in 1840. There is also a Mechanics' Institution under the patronage of Henry Stobart, Esq., which occupies a small stone building in village, and now numbers 90 members, who possess a library of 400 volumes. President, John Smith, Esq.; secretary, Joseph Dawson; treasurer, James Midas; librarian, Edward Wilson.

The Church is a neat stone building, consisting of nave and chancel, with a small square tower; and, though possessing few pretensions to architectural elegance, yet it affords accommodation to 300 persons. It was erected in 1832, at a cost of £700, which was chiefly defrayed by Bishop Van Mildert, assisted by the Church Building Society, and a few private donations. The living, which has an endowment of 70 acres, and a money payment of £130 per annum, is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. Rev. George Watson, incumbent.

The Parsonage House is a handsome stone edifice erected in 1844-45, at a cost of about £900, towards which Bishop Van Mildert gave £200, and Lord Crewe's trustees £25, the residue of the expense being defrayed by the incumbent.

The National School erected in 1833, is supported by subscription, and has an average attendance of 45 pupils. John Smith, teacher.

Etherley House is a good stone mansion, the residence of Henry Stobart, Esq.

Toft Hill is a village, at a short distance west from Etherley, and contains two public-houses, and a few shops.

HAMSTERLEY PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, which comprises the townships of Hamsterley and South Bedburn, forms part of the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, and is bounded on the north by the parish of Wolsingham, on the west by Middleton-in-Teesdale, on the south by the chapelry of Lynesack, on the south-east by St. Helen's Auckland, and on the north east by Witton-le-Wear.

HAMSTERLEY township contains an area of 4,003 acres, and the value of property assessed to the county rate in 1853 was £1,590 5s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 491; in 1811, 529; in 1821, 552; in 1831, 503; in 1841, 490; and in 1851, 532. This township was anciently possessed by the Eures, by whom it was held for several generations. We also find that the Lumleys and Boyntons held land here. A large tract of moor, or common, bearing the several names of Hamsterley, South Bedburn, and Lynesack and Softley Moors, and which extended into the respective townships bearing these names, containing about 7,000 acres, was inclosed and allotted to the neighbouring proprietors in 1700, subject to a yearly rent of 4d. per acre to the Bishop of Durham, to whom the manorial rights, &c., were reserved. Brownlaw Common, which is uninclosed, lies to the west, and is a portion of a large tract of 2,000 acres, called Hamsterley Waste. Pike Stone Fell, in this township, also remains a common. The principal freehold proprietors in Hamsterley are, Thomas and William White, John Greenwell, and Robert Surtees, Esqrs., and the proprietors of Witton Castle. Michael Garthorne, owns a farm of about 200 acres, called Emms Hill. There are two corn mills in the township. One called Becksides Water Mill is situated south of the village on the Lynburn, which, though fordable except during floods, is crossed at the high road by a wooden foot-bridge.*

The Village of Hamsterley occupies a pleasant situation on the brow of a hill, seven miles west-by-north of Bishop Auckland, and contains three public-houses, with a few tradesmen's shops. The population chiefly consists of agricultural labourers; the houses are irregularly built; many of them have thatched roofs, and some are unoccupied and in a very dilapidated state. An annual feast or hopping is held here, and being considered one of the most noted in the county of Durham, is numerously attended by the people of the neighbourhood. The sports on these occasions consist of cricket, wrestling, dog-trailing, quoiting, foot races, donkey races, and other similar amusements.

The Church, an ancient cruciform structure, dedicated to St. James, was formerly prebendal to Auckland College, and contained a chantry or guild, from which Rowland Brown, the last incumbent, received an annual pension of £2 4s. in 1558. It is situated about half-a-mile from the village, and contains sittings for 300 persons. The entrance is by a south porch, above which is a sun-dial, with the inscription,

"MAN FLEETH AS A SHADOW.
1803."

The baptismal font is a small circular basin, and the ancient piscina still remains in the south wall of the chancel. The church was thoroughly cleaned and painted in 1842, at the expense of David Maclean, Esq., Robert Surtees, Esq., and G. T. Leaton Bleunkinsopp, Esq. The living is a curacy not in charge, in the deanery of Darlington, of the certified value of £18 6s., and endowed with £10 per annum by Lord Crewe's trustees. The value of the living is stated at £90 per annum. The glebe consists of a close, to the north-east of the village, and a small farm of about 60 acres, called Moor Hill, subject to a tithe-rent charge of £5 per annum. About two-and-a-half acres, west of the village, were added to these a few years ago. The parish register commences in 1588. The owners of the Witton Castle estate are the patrons, and the Rev. J. G. Milner, incumbent.

The Parsonage House is situated at the west end of the village, and was enlarged and restored in 1851, at a cost of £400.

A Baptist Chapel was erected at Hamsterley in 1715, and its ministers were generally connected with the Baptist congregation at Muggleswick or that at Rowley. In 1974, a more commodious chapel was erected by subscription, to which a small endowment was annexed, with a school-room, a house and garden for the minister, and a burial ground. In 1790, a library was formed in connection with this chapel, and it now contains from 400 to 500 volumes, chiefly on theology.

* An eddy, called the "Piper's Hole," is situated a little below the bridge; and is said to have received its name from the fact of an itinerant piper being drowned in the stream, whilst attempting to cross the bridge in company with a person, known by the name of "Jack Dowson." Though the bridge is only a foot-bridge, in consequence of the burn not being fordable at the time, Dowson led his horse across, followed by the piper. Dowson and his horse had scarcely crossed the centre of the bridge, when it gave way, and the poor piper, who was following immediately behind the horse, was precipitated into the burn, where he was found the next day. When the people of Hamsterley asked Dowson where the piper was, he replied, with the utmost coolness, that "he was drowned all to rags."

To the west of the village is a large tract, called Brownlaw Common, being part of the 2,000 acres known as Hamsterley Waste. Pike Stone Fell, in this township, also remains a common.

Charities.—Four acres of land, known by the name of the Bull Piece, in the township of Lynesack and Softley, has been from time to time surrendered to successive trustees for the use of the poor of the chapelry of Hamsterley. On April 12th, 1760, an allotment of 10a. 1r. 6p., late parcel of the moors, was awarded to the then trustees, on the inclosure of the commons. The lands are let together at £16 per annum, which is paid half-yearly, and after undergoing a deduction for lord's rent, land tax, and other incidental charges, the residue is divided into three equal shares, which are appropriated to the townships of Hamsterley, South Bedburn, and Lynesack and Softley. It is given away to poor persons of the townships just named, in sums varying from 3s. to 10s.

SOUTH BEDBURN is an extensive but thinly peopled township, the property of J. C. Backhouse, Esq., and others, containing two corn mills and between twenty and thirty farms. It comprises an area of 6,765 acres, and the property was valued to the county-rate, in 1853, at £1,639 15s. The population in 1801 was 310; in 1811, 421; in 1821, 366; in 1831, 296; in 1841, 350; and in 1851, 349 souls. The township occupies the north-western portion of the chapelry; the scenery is bold and picturesque; and the several seats and mansions by which the district is surrounded and ornamented, have, of late years, been much improved by their respective proprietors. At the north-western extremity of this township, and within a short distance of the Harehopeburn, a small rivulet, which rises in the neighbouring hills, is a remarkable piece of antiquity, locally known as "The Castles." It consists of a fortified enclosure at the foot of a high ridge of hills, and is of an oblong form of about 90 paces by 70. It is defended on every side by a lofty mound or vallum of loose pebble stones, with an outward ditch. On the side where the gate or entrance is, a little stream of water runs down a deep gill, where perhaps a bridge or platform of trees or hurdles, easily removed or destroyed, was used. The interior plain, which appears to have been ploughed in modern times, is capable of containing 500 huts, so that the fort, if we may so term it, would secure within its vallum upwards of 2,000 people. It is generally supposed by antiquarians to be the remains of an ancient British fortress.

A little to the north of Hamsterley is Bedburn Hall, which, at the time of Hatfield's survey, was held by Robert Emmerson, who rendered 8s. It afterwards became the property of the Eures, lords of Witton, and subsequently we find it possessed by the Leaton family. Bedburn Park House is the property of the Bishop of Durham, and Hoppyland Hall belongs to G. T. L. Blenkinsopp, Esq. The estate called Shipley, adjoining the Wear, formerly belonged to a family called Blackden; it and Brekon Hill are now the property of George Hutton Wilkinson, Esq. The Monk Field which lies between Shipley and Brekon Hill, belongs to Durham University; and the whole occupy the north angle of the township. Shull, on the north-west of Hoppyland, is an extensive district almost covered by fir plantations, and the property of W. and J. Backhouse, Esqrs.

Bedburn Iron Works, is a small village on the Bedburn, adjoining Hoppyland on the south-west, and at which there is an extensive establishment for the manufacture of edge tools, spades, shovels, &c., and in connection with which there is a saw mill for general purposes. The works are carried on by Mr. Matthew Dodds.

Redford, situated near the Bedburn, was in ancient times the property of the Eures. Mayland occupies the south-west portion of the township; and at the time of Bishop Hatfield, was held by Hugh de Burninghall by foreign service, and 6d., and a pair of spurs at the feast of St. Cuthbert. Property was afterwards held here by the Brackenburys, and the Millots.

HUNWICK PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

Hunwick Chapelry was formed by an order in council, in 1845, and consists of the township of Hunwick and Helmington, with part of that of Newton Cap. It is bounded on the north by Brancepeth parish, on the west by the parish of Witton-le-Wear, on the south by the river Wear, and on the east by the river Wear.

HUNWICK and HELMINGTON form a township, adjoining that of Helmington Row, in the parish of Brancepeth, and constitute the northern and principal portion of this chapelry. The township comprises an area of 1,560 acres, and the principal proprietors are Matthew Bell, Esq., the Rev. G. Fielding, Messrs. Fletcher, Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Booth, Mr. John Robson, Mr. Thomas Young, and Mr. Appleton. The value of property assessed to the county-rate in 1853, was £1,963 16s. 7d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 122; in 1811, 150; in 1821, 160; in 1831, 164; in 1841, 338; and in 1861, 486 souls. Hunwick was formerly held by the Binchester family, from whom it passed to the Burdons, Huttons, Eurcs, Nevilles, and other proprietors. We find a portion of it possessed, about the middle of the last century, by the Stephensons, who transferred it to Joseph Reay, Esq., of Newcastle, and it afterwards passed by marriage to Matthew Bell, Esq., above mentioned. The moor or common called Hunwick Edge, was enclosed and allotted in 1761, and again further divided in 1806. There are several collieries in this township, and extensive brick and tile works have lately been commenced on the estate of Matthew Bell, Esq., where clay of a superior quality has been found. There are also stone quarries worked by Messrs. John Fletcher and John Robson, stone merchants, and a mine of ironstone, whose produce is in great request. HELMINGTON forms the northern part of the township.

The Village of Hunwick is pleasantly situated, about  $2\frac{1}{4}$  miles west-north-west from Bishop Auckland, and contains a corn-mill, two public houses, and a few tradesmen's shops. The population are chiefly engaged in the collieries of the neighbourhood. There was formerly a medicinal well in the vicinity of the village; but, since the sinking of the collieries, its waters have ceased to flow. The plentiful supply of water for which Hunwick was so long remarkable, has lately been interfered with by the cutting of the Auckland and Durham Railway, though every effort has been made by the contractor, Mr. Cail, for a continuance of the supply.

The Church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1844, from designs furnished by Mr. Corry, of Durham, upon a site given by Mrs. Bell. It consists of nave and chancel, with a western bell-turret, and the cost of erection amounted to about £700. It was considerably enlarged in 1854, at an expense of £200. The church possesses a very handsome stained-glass window, erected in 1853, by Mrs. Spencer, of Helmington Hall. The living is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and was originally endowed with £55 per annum, to which the ecclesiastical commissioners, in April 1851, granted an augmentation of £50. Rev. James Richards, M.A., incumbent.

Hunwick Colliery, to the east of the village, is worked by John Robson, Esq. and partners, and its produce is conveyed across a westerly reach of the Wear, from the principal shaft and the bell-pit to the main line of the West Durham Railway. North Bitchburn Colliery is worked by Henry Stobart, Esq., and partners. Its coals are transmitted by the Crook branch to the Weardale railway.

Low Bitchburn is a farmstead near the brook of that name, which here forms the western boundary of Hunwick township.

Helmington Hall is the property and residence of Mrs. Spencer, widow of the late Rev. Robert Spencer, a liberal contributor to the charities, &c. of the district.

NEWTON CAP township comprises an area of 939 acres, and the value of property assessed to the county-rate, in 1853, amounted to £1,362 14s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 114; in 1811, 134; in 1821, 145; in 1831, 156; in 1841, 148; and in 1851, 280 souls. This township is inclosed by the river Wear on the south-west, the south, and the east, and may be thus said to form a kind of peninsula. Boldon Book informs us that there were formerly thirteen villains here, who held their lands by services similar to those performed by the villains of North Auckland. At the time of Hatfield's survey there were only two free tenants, and these held but small portions of land. In later time, we find the Bacons recorded as proprietors here, and they are said to have been a very learned as well as an ancient family. The last of the race, who commenced building a stately hall here, now in ruins, is stated to have led a profligate life, squandering his property in extravagance and gaming, and at length terminating his existence by suicide in his unfinished mansion. The titho-free estate of Newton Cap and Needless Hall were purchased by William Russell, Esq., of Brancepeth Castle, who gave it as a portion to his daughter on her marriage with General Sir Gordon Drummond, the present proprietor. The other proprietors here are E. Smith, Esq., R. D. Shafto, Esq., The Bishop of Durham, Matthew Bell, Esq., Mr. James Bishopbridge, Mr. John Greenwell, Mr. Thomas Wilkinson, and others. The Bishop of Durham is possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. The scenery in the neighbourhood of Newton Cap is very beautiful. The unfinished and ruinous hall forming a striking and picturesque object from the opposite side of the Wear.

Birtley, which forms the eastern portion of the township, was, in ancient times, a forest and park belonging to the prince-bishops of Durham, and we find it occasionally referred to in the records of the palace at Auckland. It is now enclosed and cultivated. Newton Cap Flatts occupies the south-eastern angle of the township. The Auckland and Durham Railway passes through this estate.

LYNESACK CHAPELRY DISTRICT.

This chapelry was formed in June 1850, and comprises portions of the several townships of Hamsterley, Lynesack and Softley, and South Bedburn, which formerly belonged to the parochial chapelry of Hamsterley. The Haggerleazes branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, five miles in length, connecting West Auckland with Cockfield and Butterknowle Collieries, skirts part of the southern boundary of this chapelry. It was formally opened on May 1st, 1830, and traffic was commenced in the October following. At the time of Hatfield's survey, the prior of Finchale held lands here. We subsequently find the Nevilles mentioned as proprietors, but their property was confiscated on the attainder of the last earl. The principal landowners at present are the Duke of Cleveland, the Corporation of Durham, R. Surtees, Esq., Rev. J. G. Milner, Mr. M. Gibbon, Edward Hodgson and Sons, Mr. F. D. Johnson, Mr. John Simpson, Mr. John Thackrey, Mr. Joseph Simpson, Mr. Christopher Middleton, the executors of Mr. Jonah Middleton, Miss Mary Bowlby, and others. The Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor.

The township of LYNESACK and SOFTLEY, or, as it is sometimes called, SOUTH SIDE, formerly constituted the southern portion of Hamsterley chapelry. It comprises an area of 5,946 acres, and its annual value is £2,793 13s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 517; in 1811, 602; in 1821, 732; in 1831, 795; in 1841, 910; and in 1851, 787 souls. Here are Butterknowle and Copley Collieries, Caike Scar and West Pits Colliery, and Lands Colliery, which, with other pits, occupy the south-western angle of the Durham coal-field.

The Village of Lynesack comprises a number of houses built without any regard to regularity; they are chiefly inhabited by agricultural labourers, and the workmen employed in the neighbouring collieries.

The Church, which is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, and situated near the centre of the village, was erected by subscription in 1847-8, from a design by Mr. Thompson, of Bishop Auckland. It is in the early English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, a south porch, a vestry, and a bell-turret at the west end. The interior is commodiously fitted up with low deal benches, stained a dark oak colour; the roof is open, and the general appearance light and effective. The greater portion of the sittings are free. The living is a curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. James Evans Jones.

The Parsonage is a neat building, situated near the church.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here.

The National School, a spacious structure, adjacent to the church, was erected in 1851-2, at a cost of £393 11s., which was defrayed by private subscription, aided by a grant from the Committee of Council on Education. It is attended by about fifty children of both sexes.

Lynesack Mechanics' Institute was established in 1850, and now numbers upwards of forty members, who have a library of about 220 volumes, on various subjects. Its meetings, &c. are held in the National School. Henry Byers, secretary; John Helmsley, schoolmaster and librarian.

MERRINGTON PARISH.

This parish formerly included the townships of Merrington, Ferryhill, Hett, and Chilton, but on the formation of the parochial chapelry of Ferryhill, Chilton was included in its district; and Hett was constituted part of the chapelry district of Croxdale. Under the provisions of the Act 9 Geo. IV., for the better division of counties, the townships of Merrington and Chilton were transferred from the south-east to the north-west division of Darlington Ward, and Ferryhill and Hett were incorporated with Durham Ward. In April 1845, the township of Middlestone was transferred from the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland to that of Merrington. The parish is at present bounded on the north and north-west by the township of Tudhoe, in the parish of Brancepeth, and the chapelry of Whitworth; on the west by the township of Westerton, in the chapelry of Coundon; on the south by the township of Windlestone, in the same chapelry; and on the east by the townships of Chilton and Ferryhill. The parish is intersected by a high ridge of hills ranging east and west.

MERRINGTON township contains an area of 1,934 acres, and the value of property fixed for the county-rate, in 1853, was £2,068 5s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 228; in 1811, 242; in 1821, 290; in 1831, 339; in 1841, 431; and in 1851, 504 souls. A portion of the Stockton and Hartlepool Railway is in this township. The manor of Merrington was given by Bishop Carileph to the church of Durham; and up to the present time, the whole of the township, with the exception of a few isolated portions, about 100 acres, which belong to Sir William Eden, Bart., has been held by the dean and chapter. At the north-eastern extremity of the township Mr. William Dodds has an extensive iron and brass foundry.

The Village of Merrington is situated on the ridge of a lofty eminence, which commands a view of one of the most beautiful and extensive landscapes in the county, comprising the village of Westerton, the vale of the Wear, with its elegant scenery near Bishop Auckland and Witton; the castle of Brancepeth, Cockfield Fell, Ushaw College, the city of Durham, and a great part of Cleveland. It contains a corn mill, four public houses, and a few shops. The supply of water is very deficient.

The Church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, and shows many marks of antiquity. It stands at the east end of the village, and from the elevated position which it occupies, is one of the most conspicuous landmarks in the entire county; its steeple was one of the points of triangulation adopted during the ordnance survey in 1851. It is a cruciform structure, with a square tower, sixty feet in height, rising from the intersection of the nave and transepts. The venerable edifice underwent a thorough renovation in 1849, when the restorations were made, as nearly as possible, in a style of architecture similar to the original. The cost of the restoration, &c. amounted to upwards of £1,880. When Cumin usurped the see of Durham, his nephew seized this church, filled it with armed men, and began to fortify it with a ditch and vallum. In the churchyard is an altar-tomb in memory of John, Jane, and Elizabeth, the children of John Brass, who were murdered by their father's servant, Andrew Mills, who was executed for the crime, and afterwards hung in chains, A.D. 1683. The parish register commences in 1578. The living, a vicarage in the deanery of Darlington, is a peculiar, belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham, valued in the Liber Regis at £14 4s. 9d. The glebe consists of fifteen acres. Some years ago, the living was augmented by the dean and chapter with a portion of Merrington tithes, annual value £50; and in August, 1846, it was endowed by the ecclesiastical commissioners with the remainder of those tithes, annual value £88 18s. 6d. The gross income of the living, in 1835, was £221. Rev. John Tyson, vicar.

The Parsonage, which has a small garden attached, is situated west of the churchyard.

Charities.—It is not recorded how the farm called "Poor's Land," was acquired by this parish. It consists of between 18 and 20 acres, held by lease under the dean and chapter of Durham, at 11s. per annum with a fine for renewal, and is let at £16 per year. The rent is received at Easter; and after setting aside £6 to prepare for the renewal fine, and to pay 15s. 6½d. the reserved rent and land tax, £1 is given to the vicar for his private distribution, and the remainder is divided amongst the four original townships of the parish, according to the proportions in which they contributed to the church-rates; viz.—to Merrington 15 parts, Hett 12, Ferryhill 18, and Chilton 18; in all, 63 parts. The share received by the township of Merrington, is given away, in sums of 2s. 6d. and 5s. each, to about ten poor persons not in receipt of parochial relief. In 1728, Ann Morgan left £20, and the Rev. Mr. Simons in 1739, gave £3 15s. to the poor of Merrington township, which sums were laid out in leasehold tenements, now occupied by paupers. John Smith, of Holstone House, near Stockton, who died August 3rd, 1832, left £200 to the minister and churchwardens of Merrington, upon trust to invest the same in the public funds, or on other good security, and to pay the proceeds thereof on New Year's Day in every year, to ten poor widows residing in the parish. This sum, less 10 per cent legacy duty, was invested in the funds in 1833, and the dividends are applied in accordance with the expressed wishes of the donor.

SHILDON PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry comprises the townships of East Thicklely, Eldon, Midridge, and Shildon, which were separated from the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, in June 1837. Its boundaries, commencing at the Deanery estate, in the above named parish, runs eastward between the southern verge of that estate and the township of Shildon, up to the western extremity of Eldon township; thence north and north-east between that township and Deanery to the township of Coundon Grange; thence east-north-east and north between that township and Eldon to the township of Windlestone; thence east, south, and south-east between the two latter townships to the township of Woodham, in the parish of Aycliffe; thence south and south-west to the township of Midridge, the eastern verge of which it separates from the township of Great Aycliffe; thence west and north-north-west between the townships of Midridge, East Thicklely, and Shildon on the north, and Midridge Grange and West Thicklely, in the parish of Heighington, on the south, up to the western boundary of the chapelry of St. Helen's Auckland; and thence north-west, north, and north-east to the Deanery estate.

EAST THICKLEY, or Thicklely Punchardon, is a small township, 3½ miles south-east from Bishop Auckland, and consists of a single farm, whose area is 260 acres. The property was valued for the county-rate in 1853, at £1,092 10s.

The population in 1801 was 13; in 1811, 18; in 1821, 11; in 1831, 35; in 1841, 452; and in 1851, 62½ souls. The south-western extremity of this township is occupied by a portion of the village of New Shildon, containing the Shildon station of the Stockton and Darlington Railway. There are some lime works in the township. East Thickey was, in ancient times, a portion of the manor of Redworth, from which it was severed, and rendered a mark yearly at the feast of St. Cuthbert for cornage. Bishop Beck gave it to his chief huntsman, Hugh de Punchardon, from whom it received its additional designation. It afterwards belonged for several generations to the family of Lilburn, and was an object of litigious contention between Ralph Claxton and Richard Lilburn, in the year 1638, when, in a writ of right, prosecuted in the Court of Common Pleas at Durham, battle was waged, and, after much litigation, the champions appeared in court, in array, and cast down their gauntlets; their weapons were batons with sand bags: such were the barbarous customs of those days, that the decision of a title to lands was left to a quarter staff. In 1717, the estate came, by purchase, into the possession of Mr. Thomas Gower; it afterwards passed to the Thorps and Hildyards, with the latter of whom it still remains, Robert Hildyard, Esq., being the present possessors.

Biography.—Major-general Robert Lilburn, who was so conspicuous a character during the period of the Commonwealth, was born at Thickey in 1613. During the civil wars he fought on the side of the parliament, and in 1647, became governor of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. In the following year, he sat as one of the judges on the trial of the king, and was one of those who signed the warrant for the execution of the unfortunate monarch. He afterwards became commander-in-chief in Scotland; and, in 1654, was elected, along with his relative, George Lilburn, of Sunderland, to represent the county of Durham. He subsequently represented Malton. On the restoration of the regal power, Major-General Lilburn was tried for regicide, and offering no defence, was banished to the island of St. Nicholas, near Plymouth, where he died in 1665.

ELDON township contains 1,540 acres, the property of the Earl of Eldon. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 101; in 1811, 86; in 1821, 94; in 1831, 129; in 1841, 186; and in 1851, 238 souls. The property was valued for the county-rate, in 1853, at £1,815. This township was one of the places given by Canute to the church of Durham. The manor, with the whole vill, was subsequently possessed by the Nevilles, from whom it passed to Lady Kenmure. It afterwards became the property of the Earl of Seaforth, but was eventually purchased by John Scott, Earl of Eldon, who held for twenty-six years the distinguished office of Lord High Chancellor of England; and it was from this estate he took his title when raised to the peerage. Here are limeworks which belong to Mr. Thomas Sutton, and are managed by Mr. Thomas Thwaites.

The Village of Eldon is situated about 3 miles south-east of Bishop Auckland. Eldon Colliery is worked by Messrs. Joseph Pease & Co; the coals are conveyed by the Black Boy branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway to the shipping places at Stockton and Middlesbrough.

MIDKIDGÆ, a township, adjoining that of East Thickey, comprises an area of 1,118 acres. In 1801, it contained 198 inhabitants; in 1811, 199; in 1821, 201; in 1831, 307; in 1841, 345; and in 1851, 300. In 1853, the property was valued to the county-rate at £1201 14s. A small detached portion of this township is situated in that of Midridge Grange, in Heighington parish. A portion of the Stockton and Darlington Railway is in this township. From Boldon Book we learn, that there were fifteen villains and four cottagers in Midridge, who held their lands by the usual contributions of grain, money, &c. besides the customary labour. It afterwards became the property of the Fulthorpes, del Stanes, and Scropes; but it is now possessed by Captain Agnew, Miss Halhead, Mr. Burton, and others. The whole of the royalty belongs to the dean and chapter of Durham. Here are stone and lime works, which are carried on by Mr. Jacob Deans, of Shildon.

The Village of Midridge is 4½ miles east-south-east from Bishop Auckland, and comprises the customary public houses and shops. Here is a chapel in connection with the parish church, in which service is performed every Sunday afternoon, and it also serves as a day-school. The school is supported by the following yearly donations; viz.—£7 from the Bishop of Durham, £5 5s. from the Earl of Eldon, £2 from Miss Holland, £1 from the Rev. James Manisty, and the weekly payments paid by the scholars. Mr. George Bunney is teacher. Here is also a Primitive Methodist Chapel.

SHILDON, a township, in the parochial chapelry of the same name, contains 552 acres, and is intersected by the Weardale and Black Boy branches of the Stockton and Darlington Railway. The Shildon tunnel, on the former line, was constructed in order to supersede the Black Boy and Brusselton inclines, and is 1,300 yards in length. This tunnel is constructed for two lines of railway, and cost £100,000. The population of this township in 1801 was 101; in 1811, 124; in 1821, 115; in 1831, 867; in 1841, 2,631; and in 1851, 2,144 souls. This rapid increase is attributed to the employment of labourers on railway works. The value of property assessed to the county-rate in 1853 was £11,209 10s. This township, with Heuknoll, was formerly the property of the Bellasis family. The priory of Neasham had lands here, and we find that estates were also held of the Lilburns, and the Earls of Westmoreland. The principal proprietors at present are, Thomas Marley, Esq., Robert Surtees, Esq., and Samuel Southern, Esq.

The Village of Old Shildon is situated three miles south-south-east from Bishop Auckland, and since the formation of the various lines of railway in the neighbourhood, it has rapidly increased in size and population. It contains a post office, a rural police station, several public-houses, and a number of shops. The Shildon Iron Works are extensively carried on by Messrs. Bond and Co., engine builders. A neat and uniform range of buildings, called Chapel Row, on the eastern side of the Black Boy branch of railway, was erected about twenty years ago. There is a neat square, called the Market Place, a name which it obtained from an attempt being made a few years ago, to establish a market in the village. The village, as well as that of New Shildon, is lighted with gas, from works belonging to the colliery proprietors. A more copious supply of water is much to be desired.

The Church, erected principally by Bishop Van Mildert, assisted by the Society for the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches, was opened in 1884. It is a neat building, consisting of nave and chancel, with a square tower. The windows and porch are faced with polished stone, and the interior is lighted with gas. A gallery is situated over the entrance, and a small organ near the pulpit. The living is in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. James Manisty. There is a parsonage house and grounds, and the endowment is stated to be £225 per annum. The burial ground was considerably enlarged in 1853, at an expense of nearly £170.

Here is also a Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1830.

The National School is situated on a portion of ground attached to the churchyard.

New Shildon, a considerable village, partly in this township, and partly in that of East Thickley, is situated a little to the south of Old Shildon, and is intersected by the Stockton and Darlington Railway. A portion of this village is in the township of Thickley. Here are extensive works for the manufacture of locomotive and permanent engines for the Stockton and Darlington Railway Company. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels here, and a few of the Society of Friends' have a place of meeting. There is also a Mechanics' Institute, held in premises belonging to the railway company. It comprises a library and news-room, the former of which contains about 900 volumes. In the village is a school, which is partly supported by the Shildon Iron Works Company.

Charities.—See Bishop Auckland Charities, page 282. The school master at Shildon, in consideration of the income derived from Walton's Charity, instructs 25 children in reading, writing, and accounts. By will, dated July 19th, 1675, Edward Metcalfe gave his house and his lands in Shildon to four poor persons during their lives, and after their death to other four in like manner. The land consists of about three acres of meadow, and is let at £6 6s. per annum. £60 having been received some years ago, on account of the railway passing through it, two cottages were erected on the site of the original one, which had fallen down. The rents arising from these premises, instead of being appropriated to four persons, are distributed to the poor of the township of Shildon not receiving parochial relief, or, in some cases, in addition to their weekly pay, chiefly in sums of 10s. or 20s.

STANHOPE PARISH.

Stanhope parish, the most extensive in the county of Durham, comprises, with its dependant chapelries, an area of 54,870 acres, and extends from the parish of Wolsingham on the south-east, to the boundaries of the county of Cumberland on the west. It is bounded on the north-east and north by the parishes of Muggleswick, Edmond Byers, and Hunstanworth, and part of the county of Northumberland; and on the south and south-west by Middleton, in Teesdale. The parish is intersected from east to west by the valley of the Wear, and is enclosed on both sides by lofty eminences and moorlands. It is divided into four quarters, or townships, called respectively Forest, Newlandside, Park, and Stanhope quarters. The value of property in the parish assessed for the county-rate in 1853, was £23,351 10s.. Heatherey Cleugh chapelry occupies the western portion of Forest quarter; Rookhope chapelry is composed of portions of Stanhope, Park, and Forest quarters; and St. John's Weardale, is partly in Park and partly in Forest quarter.

FOREST QUARTER is an extensive township, comprising an area of 20,000 acres. The number of its inhabitants in 1801, was 2,143; in 1811, 2,987; in 1821, 3,735; in 1831, 4,741; in 1841, 3,591; and in 1851, 4,358 souls. The principal proprietors in this district are, W. B. Beaumont, Esq. M.P.; Edward Emmerson, Esq. M.P.; the Featherston family; Mr. Joshua Dawson; Mr. Thomas Watson, and others. The vale of the Wear, which gives name to the district of Weardale in which this township is situated, is in many places deep and narrow, and is enclosed on the north and south by lofty hills and fells, whilst on the west the horizon is bounded by the mountains of Cumberland. The soil on the river's bank is a deep loam, exceedingly productive; grouse abound upon the hills, which, during the summer months, afford good pasture to large numbers of sheep and kyloes. "The elevations of this part of the Penine Chain," observes Mr. Sopwith, "are not bold and rugged, but very high, massive, and rounded, rising, in most instances, gradually from the east, and descending more steeply on the western side. In the numerous valleys which occur throughout, the cropping or bassett of the strata is very obvious, and affords peculiar facilities for geological research. The influence of calcareous strata on the soil is very conspicuous. The bassett of the great limestone, which is the thickest and nearly the highest calcareous stratum, forms, in many instances, the limit of cultivated land and of human habitations. Below it, the hill sides in spring and autumn present a beautiful green surface, and in summer an abundant and flowery produce in the meadows; while on the same hill, above the limestone, bare short grass, ling, and moss, impart the brown and dreary aspect which characterises all the higher portion of the mining district, rendered in moist weather or in winter, still more dreary by hanging mists on the summits, or wasting snow scattered over the wide expansive sides of the hills; but from the massive character of the scenery, rendered beautiful, and even sublime by the blue shades of evening, or the subdued effect of moonlight. In the midst of these dales, numerous streams of water are seen pursuing a somewhat rapid course over rocky beds or blocks of various kinds of stone; some of immense size tumbled from the scars above, and others which have been carried downwards by violent floods. Their waters vary from the angry torrent rolling along with almost resistless force, to the gentle stream which murmurs along its rocky channel, or is swallowed up in the fissures which frequently occur in the limestone rocks; and these transitions, owing to the extent and steepness of the hills, are often very sudden. A portion of the refuse excavations of the mines is frequently carried down by the stream, and fills the beds of the rivers with a great variety of rocky and mineral substances. The average slope of the hills is from 8 to 10 deg. Their summits, it has been stated, are, for a great part of the year, covered with snow; but this observation is too extended; the hills here as in most other countries where the mountains are not very high, retaining their wintry mantle only a few days longer than the neighbouring valleys; and even then the Alpine snows of Crossfell soon waste away to a few drifted patches, which, on the approach of summer, become very small, and usually disappear in May. In former times, however, there is no doubt that both the quantity and duration of snow were much greater than at present."

St. John's Chapel, or Weardale St. John.—This small market-town is situated on the south side of the Wear, seven miles west of Stanhope, twelve west-north-west of Wolsingham, and twenty-seven west of Durham. A weekly market is held every Saturday, and a fair on the third Wednesday in April and the second Wednesday in September. The market cross is a handsome structure, erected by Sir Ralph Milbanke, Bart., as a compliment to the freeholders of the neighbourhood, who voted for him when he was returned for the county of Durham in 1790. The towns contains five inns and public-houses, and several tradesmen's shops. A coach has been recently established to meet the railway trains at Frosterley; it proceeds through Stanhope to St. John's, and has proved a great convenience to the district.

The Chapel of St. John, from which the town derives its name, was rebuilt by Sir Walter Blackett, Bart., aided by a legacy of £50, bequeathed by Dr. Hartwell. It is a neat plain edifice, consisting of nave, chancel, aisles, and western tower; and is fitted up with oaken pews, which furnish accommodation for upwards of 400 persons. There are galleries over the aisles and at the west end; the latter contains an organ, erected by subscription about six years ago. The font is at the west end, near the entrance. In the ancient chapel there was a chantry, dedicated to Jesus our Saviour and St. John the Baptist, for which Bishop Booth granted his license, dated the 4th June, 1465, to Robert Rhodes, for the maintenance of a chaplain, with a yearly stipend of £5, to be paid out of the manor of Whitley. The burial ground is of considerable extent, having been recently much enlarged. The registers commence in 1788. This chapelry is bounded on the north, north-east, and east by the chapelry of Rookhope, on the south by the parish of Middleton-in-Teesdale, and on the west by Heathery Cleugh chapelry. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the deanery of Darlington, and its annual value is stated to be £186. Patron, the rector of Stanhope; incumbent, the Rev. William Green.

The Parsonage House is situated in a garden north of the church.

Heathery Cleugh is a parochial chapelry in Forest Quarter, forming the most western portion of Stanhope parish, and adjoining the parish of Alston, in Cumberland. It is situated about three miles from St. John's Chapel, Weardale; and is bounded on the north by a portion of the county of Northumberland, on the west by Cumberland, on the south by Middleton-in-Teesdale, on the east by St. John's chapelry, and on the north-east by that of Rookhope.

The Chapel is a plain stone structure, erected in 1823, as a chapel of ease, and will accommodate about 400 persons. It consists of a nave and chancel, with a spacious southern porch, and is lighted by double pointed windows. The pews are all open, the pulpit stands in the middle of the church, and the font is situated at the west end. The church is surrounded with a suitable burial ground, adjoining which is a commodious parsonage house and garden. The net income of the living, which is in the patronage of the rector of Stanhope, is stated at £120. Rev. George Thompson, incumbent.

Burtree Ford is a village, about three miles west-north-west of St. John's Chapel, and contains an extensive corn mill. Daddry Shields, a village, half-a-mile east of St. John's Chapel, is principally occupied by workmen. The Wear is here crossed by a bridge of one arch. Ireshope is a hamlet, situated one mile west from St. John's Chapel, and derives its name from the Ireshope Burn, which flows into the Wear from the south-west. Newhouse is the property of W. B. Beaumont, Esq., M.P., and is a little to the west of St. John's Chapel, in one of the most beautiful parts of the dale. The house is old-fashioned, with large windows, and the walls are clad with evergreens. It is occasionally inhabited by Mr. Beaumont. A substantial stone bridge, bearing the name of Coronation Bridge, was erected across the Wear in front of Newhouse in 1839. Adjoining is a spacious building, erected by Mr. Beaumont as a library and newsroom, in which the monthly meetings of St. John's Friendly Society are held. At the south end of Coronation Bridge is the largest Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in this circuit, with a dwelling-house for the minister attached. It was erected in 1760. An extensive school-house has recently been erected in a neighbouring field, for the education of the miners' children. Middle and East Black Dean are contiguous, and consist of a few respectable houses. Wearhead is a hamlet, situated at the confluence of the Kilhope and Burnhope Water, two miles from St. John's Chapel, and contains a public-house, a post-office, and a few shops. The school is one of those of the parish, endowed by Bishop Barrington. Near the hamlet is a Primitive Methodist Chapel. Wearhead Bridge, erected about half a century ago, is of two arches, strongly built, having the solid rock for its foundation. West Black Dean is a hamlet one-and-a-quarter miles west-north-west of St. John's, and consists of a long row of houses. Loning Head, about a quarter of a mile west of Heatherey Cleugh, consists of a Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Chapel, one of Bishop Barrington's schools, and several houses.

The Schools and Charities of this quarter will be found fully described in the account of Stanhope quarter and town.

NEWLANDSIDE QUARTER forms the eastern portion of Stanhope parish, and adjoins that of Wolsingham. It comprises the township of Newlandside with Bishopley, and the township of Frosterley; and its total area is 9,680 acres. It contained in 1801, 604 inhabitants; in 1821, 763; in 1831, 847; in 1841, 854; and in 1851, 988. "These townships," observes Mr. For-dyce, "may be considered as coming within the lead district of the county of Durham, and form its eastern boundary; the whole being within the manor of Wolsingham. The Bishop of Durham's lead-mines are let on a lease for three lives to the Beaumont family, and for many years paid a very small certain rent." Here are several limestone quarries, whose produce is in great request for agricultural and other purposes.

Frosterley is a township, manor, and village; and at the period of the compilation of Boldon Book, was held by Ralph Cant. It was afterwards the property of the Bradleys, the Deweys, the Morgans, and the Swinburns, but is now possessed by Valentine Rippon, Esq. The Village of Frosterley is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the Wear, two miles south-east of Stanhope. There was formerly a chapel here, which has entirely disappeared, but its site is still known by the name of Chapel Close. The Rev. Dr. Darnell erected a chapel of ease here about twenty years ago, but it now serves as a school for girls (see Charities), under the patronage of the rector of Stanhope. The village is chiefly inhabited by the workmen employed in the neighbouring mines, quarries, &c. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a post-office, three public-houses, and the usual shops. The Wear Valley Railway terminates in the vicinity of Frosterley, where there is a neat station. The Wear is here crossed by a substantial stone bridge of three arches, erected in 1813.

Newlandside Hall, which formerly belonged to the Wards, is now the property of the representatives of the Harvey family. Rogerley Hall, the property and residence of Valentine Rippon, Esq., is an ancient building, with curious and elaborately carved oak panelling in the interior.

Broadwood, or Brandwood, on the south side of the Wear, was anciently possessed by a family which bore the local name. By marriage, one moiety became vested in the Eggleston family, until in the time of Bishop Skirlaw, John de Eggleston was stated to have died seised of one moiety by the service of an eighth part of a knight's fee, and other lands in fee tail by the same service. The estate thus united, continued in his posterity for several generations, and was afterwards held by the Dawsons, from whom it was transferred to John Moses, Esq. It now belongs to the Hon. H. Coventry, and is farmed by Mr. Thomas Todd.

Bishopley (High and Low) is a district in Newlandside Quarter, two-and-a-half miles east of Stanhope. Bolihope Fell occupies the south-eastern portion of this quarter. It has been divided and enclosed in pursuance of the act 5th George III. At the south-eastern extremity of this fell, about six miles from Stanhope, and half-a-mile east from the road between that place and Middleton-in-Teesdale, on an eminence called Parlo Pike, there is a pillar, bearing the letters "L. M.," said to be the initials of the words Long Man, and the place is commonly called Long Man's Grave. Tradition ascribes the origin of this pillar and inscription to the following circumstance:—"One clear summer's evening, many years ago, two tall figures were seen to meet on the top of the ridge, and at once proceed to mortal strife. The clash of arms was heard in the valley; and their forms being set in relief against the clear blue sky, seemed to dilate them to that of the giants of old. One of them was at length seen to fall; and the other after hovering about for a short space, vanished from sight. On the morrow the mangled corpse of a tall man was found on the spot. No person, however, knew him. Neither was there any enquiry after him. He was buried where he fell; and the pile of stones which was reared upon his grave, is now known as the Lang Man o' Bollyhope.—Denham's MSS."

PARK QUARTER or township contains 12,190 acres, and extends from about three miles west of the town of Stanhope to one mile east of St. John's Chapel, Weardale. The principal landowners are W. B. Beaumont, Esq., M.P., Captain Hildyard, and others. The population in 1801 was 1,169; in 1811, 1,321; in 1821, 1,259; in 1831, 1,873; in 1841, 851; and in 1851, 991 souls. This decrease is attributed to the removal of miners to the eastern part of the county. Stanhope Park was anciently the favourite hunting ground of the prince-bishops of Durham, and thither came the men of Auckland and other places to render their various customary services. Though Stanhope Forest generally resounded with the cry of the chase, yet it has also echoed the tumult of battle, for, in 1327, King Robert Bruce having planned a formidable invasion into England, 20,000 Scottish horse were assembled on the western marches, under the command of Randolph Earl of Murray, and

Lord Douglas. With this force the Scottish army entered England about midsummer, and, crossing Cumberland and Hexhamshire, occupied the wild and mountainous passes of Weardale. On hearing of this, Edward III., king of England, marched to the north with a powerful force, a very formidable part of which were the Hainaulters or Flemings, who had come into England under Sir John de Hainault. The English monarch arrived at Durham on the 15th July, and immediately moved forward in pursuit of the enemy. Their track was pointed out by the smoke of burning villages, but, amidst the defiles of a mountainous country, the native habits of the Scots easily baffled the pursuit of regular troops, and, after a fruitless and desperate pursuit of three days, Edward crossed the Tyne, determined to guard the fords, and intercept the retreat of the invaders. The Scots kept the hills; and the English army, after enduring seven days of disappointment and distress, drenched with rain and destitute of regular supplies, recrossed the river and again recovered traces of the Scots, in ruined hamlets and wasted corn-fields. Irritated by the escape of an enemy whose ravages only were visible, Edward promised the honour of knighthood, and an annuity of £100 for life, to the first man who should bring him intelligence of the Scots. The prize was won by Thomas Rokeby, who, in the course of his wanderings, fell in with the advanced posts of the enemy, and was made prisoner. On explaining the purpose of his adventure, the Scottish leaders, with characteristic spirit, set him at liberty, and ordered him to carry the desired intelligence to King Edward. The English army halted that night, the third since they had recrossed the Tyne, near Blanchland Abbey; and at day break placed themselves under the conduct of their guide, who brought them before noon within sight of the Scottish army, encamped in Stanhope Forest. The Scots occupied a hill, at whose base the river Wear, a shallow but impetuous stream, offered a dangerous and uncertain ford, amidst loose rolling stones and shelving rocks. On the appearance of the English, the Scots formed in three divisions, ranged each above the other, prepared with stones and javelins, to contest the passage of the river. The English hesitated on the brink, checked by the uncertainty of the ford, and the difficulty of forming on the opposite bank. The armies remained thus opposed to each other for three days, during which mutual defiance was exchanged, and several adventurous knights crossed the river from both camps to skirmish or to engage in feats of arms. On the third night the Scots made false fires and abandoned their camp; the English scouts discovered them next day at the distance of five leagues, posted on a more elevated height, which, like their former station, rose precipitately from the river, and was further strengthened by a wood and morass. Edward followed their movements on the opposite bank, and the enemies again encamped in sight of each other, separated by the river, and each dreading to hazard the attack. Meanwhile, several desperate feats of individual valour were achieved, but they were all eclipsed by the daring attempt of Douglas, who, on a moonless night, crossed the river, above the encampments, with 200 horse, penetrated to the royal tent, and though repulsed and surrounded, hewed his way through the English camp, and led back his band of adventurers with trifling loss, amidst the slaughter and confusion of a midnight surprise. The armies had observed each other without changing their respective positions during three days. The English vainly hoped to reduce the Scots by famine; whilst the latter, unable to advance without hazarding an unequal contest, began to feel the irksomeness of restraint and inaction, and to meditate the means of retreat. A Scottish knight was made prisoner, who confessed, with seeming reluctance, that his countrymen were in motion, and that the troops were under orders to follow the standard of Douglas at vespertide. The exploit of this formidable chieftain was freshly remembered, and the English lay all night upon their arms, expecting an attack. The morning discovered the deception; the Scots had quitted their camp at midnight, and by means of branches of trees and bundles of brushwood which they threw into the broken parts of the bog as they advanced, had led their horses across a quaking moss, two miles in extent. Two Scottish trumpeters were purposely left behind to insult the English with the intelligence. Pursuit of such an enemy was hopeless; in three days they traversed Northumberland and Cumberland, and on the third night crossed the Scottish border. Whilst the young king lamented with tears the escape of his enemies, his soldiers amused themselves by visiting the deserted camp, and speculating on the simple or savage manners of their adversaries. They found more than 500 large cattle, which the enemy had killed, as they were too heavy to carry with them, and too slow to follow them. They also found more than 300 cauldrons, made of leather, with the hair on the outside, which were hung on the fires, full of water and meat, ready for boiling. Besides these, there were also upwards of 1,000 spits with meat on them prepared for roasting; and more than 10,000 pairs of old worn-out shoes, made of undressed leather, which the Scots had left there." The park and forest of Weardale extended from the east gate of the former, on the site of the village of that name, to the source of the river Wear, and at the time of old Leland was rudely enclosed with stone. He also informs us that, at the west gate of the park, there was "a praty square pile," or tower, nearly all traces of which have now disappeared.

During the northern rebellion, in 1569, the Tynedale robbers made an excursion into Weardale, the particulars of which have been preserved in "The Raid of Rookhope," or "Rookhope Ryde," which was composed in 1572, and taken down by Ritson from the chanting of George Collingwood, the elder, of Boltsburn. We give it at full length:—

Rookhope stands in a pleasant place,
If the false thieves wad let it be,
But away they steal our goods apace,
And ever an ill death may they die!

And so is the men of Thirlwa'nd Willie-haver,
And all their companies thereabout
That is minded to do mischief,
And as their stealing stands not out.

But yet we will not slander them all,
For there is of them good enough;
It is a sore consumed tree
That on it bears not one fresh bough.

Lord God! is not this a pitiful case,
That men dare not drive their goods to t'fell
But limmer thieves drives them away,
That fears neither heaven nor hell.

Lord send us peace into the realm,
That every man may live on his own!
I trust to God, if it be his will,
That Weardale men may never be overthrown.

For great troubles they've had in hand,
 With Borderers pricking hither and thither,
 But the greatest fray that e'er they had,
 Was with the men of Thirlwa'nd Willie-haver.

They gathered together so royally,
 The stoutest men and the best in gear ;
 And he that rade not on a horse,
 I wat he rade on a weil fed mear.

So in the morning, before they came out,
 So well, I wot, they broke their fast ;
 In the [forenoon they came] unto a bye fell,
 Where some of them did eat their last.

When they had eaten aye and done,
 They say'd, some captains here needs must be :
 Then they choosed forth Harry Corbyl,
 And Simon Fell, and Martin Ridley.

Then o'er the moss, where as they came,
 With many a brank and whew,
 One of them could to another say,
 " I think, this day, we are men enew.

" For Weardale men is a journey ta'on
 They are so far out o'er yon fell,
 That some of them's with the two earls,
 And others fast in Bernard-castell.

" There we shal get gear enough,
 For there is nane but women at hame ;
 The sorrowful fend that they can make,
 Is loudly cries as they were slain."

Then in at Rookhope-head they came,
 And there they thought tul'a' had their prey,
 But they were spy'd coming over the Dry-rig,
 Soon upon St. Nicholas' Day.

Then in at Rookhope-head they came,
 They ran the forest but a mile ;
 They gathered together in four hours
 Six hundred sheep within a while.

And horses, I trow, they gat,
 But either ane or twa,
 And they gat them all but ane
 That belanged to great Rowley.

That Rowley was the first man that did them spy.
 With that he raised a mighty cry ;
 That cry it came down Rookhope-burn,
 And spread through Weardale hastyly.

Then word came to the bailiff's house,
 At the east-gate, where he did dwell ;
 He was walked out to the Small-burns,
 Which stands above the Hanging-well.

His wife was wae when she hear'd tell
 So well she wist her husband wanted gear,
 She gar'd saddle him his horse in haste,
 And neither forgot sword, jack, nor spear.

The bailiff got wit before the gear came,
 That such news was in the land,
 He was sore troubled in his heart,
 That on no earth that he could stand.

His brother was hurt three days before,
 With limmer thieves that did him prick;
 Nineteen bloody wounds lay him upon,
 What ferly was't that he lay sick.

But yet the bailiff shrinketh nought,
 But fast after them he did hie,
 And so did all his neighbours near,
 That went to bear him company.

But when the bailiff was gathered,
 And all his company,
 They were number'd to never a man
 But forty under fifty.

The thieves was number'd a hundred men,
 I wot they were not of the worst,
 That could be choos'd out of Thirlwa'nd Willie-haver,
 "I trow they were they very first."

But all that was in Rookhope-head,
 And all that was i' Nuketon-cleugh,
 Where Weardale men o'ertook the thieves,
 And there they gave them fighting eneugh.

So sore they made them fain to flee,
 As many was a' out of hand,
 And, for tul have been at home again,
 They would have been in iron bands.

And for the space of long seven years,
 As sore they mighten a' had their lives,
 But there was never one of them
 That ever thought to have seen their wivcs.

About the time the fray began,
 I trow it lasted but an hour,
 Til many a man lay weapoless,
 And was sore wounded in that stour.

Also before that hour was done,
 Four of the thieves were slain,
 Besides all those that wounded wore,
 And eleven prisoners there was ta'en.

George Carrick, and his brother Edie,
 Them two, I wot they both were slain;
 Henry Corbyl, and Lennie Carrick
 Bore them company in their pain.

One of our Weardale-men was slain,
 Rowland Emmerson his name hight;
 I trust to God his soul is well,
 Because he fought unto the right.

But this they say'd, "We'll not depart
 While we have one:—Speed back again!"—
 And when they came amongst the dead men,
 There they found George Carrick slain.

And when they found George Carrick slain,
 I wot it went well near their heart;
 Lord, let them never make a better end,
 That comes to play them sicken a part.

I trust to God no more they shal,
 Except it be one for a great chance;
 For God wil punish all those
 With a great heavy pestilence.

Thir limmer thieves, they have good hearts,
 They never think to be o'erthrown;
 Three banners against Weardale-men they bare,
 As if the world had been all their own.

Thir Weardale-men they have good hearts,
 They are as stif as any tree!
 For, if they'd every one been slain,
 Never a foot back man would flee.

And such a storm amongst them fell,
 As I think you never heard the like;
 For he that bears his head so high,
 He oft-times falls into the dyke.

And now I do entreat you all,
 As many as are present here,
 To pray for singer of this song,
 For he sings to make blithe your cheer.

Rookhope Chapelry.—This chapelry, comprising that part of the parish of Stanhope known by the name of Rookhope, is bounded on the west by the chapelry of St. John Weardale, on the south by the river Wear, and on the east by the road leading past High Farm to Eastgate. It was licensed by Bishop Maltby, in July, 1841; its principal portion is in Park Quarter, but it extends into Stanhope Quarter, on the east, and Forest Quarter on the west.

The Hamlet of Rookhope is partly situated in Stanhope Quarter, in the school-room of which, previous to the erection of the church, divine service was performed. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels here, and there is a lending library which is well supported.

The Church is a spacious edifice, erected about thirty years ago, and consists of a nave and chancel. It stands north-west and south-east, and is entered by a porch on the north-east side, opposite to which is a plain baptismal font. The pews are of plain fir, and all open, with the exception of the family pew of Mr. Featherston, over which is a mural tablet of white marble, erected to the memory of Mrs. Featherston, who is interred in St. John's churchyard, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Bolts Burn, the principal village of the district, contains an inn, a corn mill, and one of the Barrington schools, erected in 1820. Extensive quarrying operations in iron-stone and lead-ore have been recently commenced, and afford employment to a considerable number of persons. The works are carried on by the Weardale Iron Company. In the centre of the Vale of Rookhope there is a large lead-ore smelting and refining mill, belonging to Mr. Beaumont.

Westgate is a village in this quarter, situated five-and-a-half miles west of Stanhope, on the road between that place and Alston. Here are chapels belonging to the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, a Barrington school, two corn mills, three public-houses, and a few tradesmen's shops.

Directory.—The farmers are Cuthbert Bainbridge, Park House; John Moffitt, Ludwell; Hannah Sowerby, Old Park; Henry Stephenson, Rose Hill; William Steppenson, Billenshield; and John Walton, Westhope Burn.

STANHOPE QUARTER AND TOWN.

STANHOPE QUARTER contains 13,000 acres; its population in 1801 was 1,239; in 1811, 1,375; in 1821, 1,584; in 1831, 2,080; in 1841, 1827; and in 1851, 2,545 souls. The Wear Valley and Wear and Derwent branches of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, extend into this parish. At the period of the compilation of the Boldon Book, there were twenty vilians in Stanhope, each of whom held his lands by rendering 2s., with sixteen days work of one man, between Pentecost and Martinmas, and several other services. Several persons held lands by annual out-rents. When Bishop Hatfield's survey was taken, we find that the Merleys, the de Dirltons, the Todds, the Dowys, the Marshalls, the Rogerleys, and others, were free tenants here. It was afterwards the property of a family that bore the local name. Several other families held lands here at various periods, amongst whom may be mentioned the Powers, Mawsons, Littleforths, Merleys, Bedales, Emersons, Colynsons, Rogerleys, Batemansons, and Eglestons. It is now the property of Colonel Hildyard and others.

The ancient market town of Stanhope is situated on the road between the city of Durham and Alston, in Cumberland, twenty miles west from the former, and 21 east-south-east from the latter place. It is distant 27 miles by road from Gateshead, 40 from South Shields, 33 from Sunderland, 26 from Darlington, and 265 from London, and occupies a sheltered situation on the north side of the Wear, at the confluence of the river and the Stanhope burn. There is a bridge of one arch over the river. The town consists chiefly of one long street, and comprises a few inns and public-houses, two corn mills, a post office, rural police station, and the usual tradesmen's shops. Three annual fairs are held here, namely, on the Wednesday before Easter, on the second Friday in September, and on the 21st of December. The September fair is for the sale of cattle, and is well attended; the others are inconsiderable. Stanhope was anciently a place of some importance, as is manifest by the fact of Cardinal Langley having, so early as 1421, ordained a weekly market on Friday, which having fallen into disuse, was revived in 1669, by Dr. Basire, at that time rector of the parish. The market people were formerly protected from the weather by a wooden shed; but a small plain cross stands now where the market is held. There is a public fountain situated in the Market Place, from which the inhabitants are supplied with water. Petty sessions are held here monthly; and the town is one of the polling places for the southern division of the county. The trade of the town of Stanhope, as well as of the entire parish, is entirely dependant on the fluctuations in the lead market, and as the price of that article has risen or fallen, so has the prosperity of the district advanced or declined. A blast furnace was erected near Stanhope in 1845. It belongs to the Weardale iron company, whose extensive establishments at Tow Law and Tudhoe are noticed elsewhere.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, occupies an elevated situation on the north side of the town, and consists of nave, aisles, and chancel, with a low square tower. The church is entered from the south by a porch of circular arches. The chancel is divided from the body of the church by an open wooden screen of ornamental carvings. The stalls, of painted oak, are also carved; there are six on each side of the chancel, and two on each side of the doorway. The windows in this part of the church contain some fragments of ancient stained glass. The organ is situated on the north side of the chancel. There was anciently a chantry in this church dedicated to St. Mary, and valued at the dissolution, at £10 10s. The parish register commences in 1609. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Darlington, valued in the Liber Regis at £67 6s. 8d.; gross income £4,875. Rev. W. N. Darnell, rector.

THE RECTORY, an elegant mansion, is situated on a pleasant terrace, south of the town, and was entirely rebuilt by Dr. Phillpots in 1821.

THE BARRINGTON NATIONAL SCHOOL, at Stanhope, is under the care of a master and mistress, and attended by about 100 children of both sexes. There is a Subscription Library at the Town Hall, and a Savings Bank has existed here for many years.

THE WEARDALE POOR LAW UNION is divided into the sub-districts of St. John, Stanhope, and Wolsingham. The first comprises the townships of Park and Forest quarter; the Stanhope sub-district includes Stanhope quarter, Newlandside, with Bishopley quarter, and the parishes of Edmondbyers and Hunstanworth, in the west division of Chester ward; and Wolsingham sub-district consists of the parish so called. The union comprises an area of 90,538 acres, and contained a population, in 1851, of 14,567 souls.

STANHOPE CASTLE.—Castle Hill, or Castle Heugh, an elevation 108 feet above the river, is supposed to be the site of a castle, erected in the time of Bishop Beck, but no traces of this fortress now remain. The present castle was erected by the late Cuthbert Rippon, Esq., and is situated on a projecting eminence on the north bank of the Wear, surrounded by some of the most beautiful and romantic scenery in Weardale. The original part of the edifice consists of a quadrangular pile of building, two storeys high, with semicircular projections on each side, and embattled walls. An elegant conservatory, leading to a lofty square tower, which is lighted by large windows, divided into arched and mullioned compartments, has since been added. This tower was fitted up as a museum, and the garden and grounds laid out with great taste. The castle and estates, the latter of which are described as containing 1,376 acres, comprising twelve farms, with productive mines and quarries of lead, iron, limestone, and other mineral products, were advertised to be sold or let, in April 1849, and again in 1850.

STANHOPE HALL, which stands at the west end of the town, is a lofty quadrangular building, now used as a farm house. It was, in former times, the seat of the Featherstonehaugh family, and now forms a portion of the Stanhope Castle estates.

EASTGATE is a village in this township, situated three miles west from Stanhope, on the boundary of Stanhope quarter, and is said to derive its name from having been the gate house or ranger's lodge at the east entrance of Stanhope Park. It contains a Methodist Chapel, two public-houses, a post office, and a few shops. The National School, built by Bishop Barrington, is well attended. A neat chapel of ease is situated at the upper part of the village; it is in the Gothic style of architecture, and will accommodate about 200 persons.

CHARITIES.—Ralph Barrick, by the will, dated May 26th, 1689, gave £20, the interest of which was to be distributed by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, on every Whit-Monday, to the most destitute poor. This legacy is supposed to have been invested in stints or pasture-gates, in Westenhope Common; and an allotment of about 10 acres is said to have been set out in lieu of those stints about fifty years ago. The owner of this allotment pays 20s. per annum to the chapelwarden of St. John's, who disposes of it to poor persons within the chapelry. Barbara Chapman, who died May 3rd, 1829, directed her executor, Thomas Greenwell, Esq., to purchase so much stock, Three-per-Cent. Consols, as would produce yearly dividends, £20, to be invested in the names of the rector of Stanhope and her executor, and their successors, upon trust, to bestow the yearly sum of £6 on the education of four poor boys of the parish in the English school at Stanhope, the further yearly sum of £6 in the education of four poor boys at Frosterley school, and the remaining £8 to be distributed yearly on St. Thomas' day (or, if on a Sunday, on the Saturday preceding) amongst such poor persons belonging to the low quarters of the parish, and in such proportions and manners as the trustees, should deem proper. Mr. Greenwell purchased £666 13s. 4d. stock accordingly, in the names of himself and Dr. Phillpotts; and the first children were nominated and placed in the schools in October, 1829. The remaining £8 is partly distributed by the rector and partly by the agent of Mr. Greenwell to poor women, in sums of about 2s. 6d. each. John Hinks, by will, January 8th, 1735, bequeathed £120 to the townships of Frosterley, High Bishopley, and Low Bishopley, towards making, erecting, and maintaining a free school at Frosterley. The trusteeship was limited to six of the principal freeholders; but the lord of the manor and his successors, and their stewards and agents, were excluded from having anything to do therewith until they should give or procure to be given another sum of £120 for the augmentation of the endowment of the school. In 1747, a school-house was built by subscription, at a cost of £95, on land given for the purpose by Thomas Todd. In November, 1773, a messuage or tenement with a garth in Frosterley, and three parcels of ground there, were purchased for £200, of which the legacy above-mentioned formed a portion. The estate now consists of two cottages, a byre, and about six acres out of Frosterley Intack: the whole is now let for £23 10s. a year. A portion of the Weardale Valley railway passes through part of the property and fence, for which the company paid £270. With this sum the trustees erected two dwelling houses upon a portion of the freehold land, which are let for £17 a year, producing, with the rents of the land, £40 10s. The land was exonerated from land-tax by a certificate of the commissioners in December 1814. Mary Todd, who died in 1824, left £200 to be placed out on government security, and the interest applied to teach eight poor children of Frosterley. After deducting £20 for legacy duty, the residue was invested in the purchase of £198 3s. 10d. stock in the Three-per-Cents., in the names of Thomas Emmerson, executor, and Dr. Phillpotts. From these sources £20 a year is paid to the master, who is also provided with a residence, and a garden adjoining the school-house, which he occupies rent free; and for these emoluments, he instructs six children free, appointed by the trustees, in rotation, from the townships of Frosterley and and Bishopley. He makes a charge, the amount of which is settled by the trustees for the other children in the school. The premises are kept in repair by the trustees. In respect of Mary Todd's legacy, a school mistress receives an annual salary of £10, for which she instructs eight girls of the same township, and is allowed to take other children also, for whom she charges a limited quarterage. Thomas Morgan, by will, dated May 10th, 1641, conveyed to trustees certain premises in Frosterley, and also a rent-charge of 20s., payable out of the lands called Barns Eale, and they were directed to pay 30s. a year to each of three almswomen, with the price of 20 horse loads of coals, and the carriage thereof, and the expense of repairing the messuage intended for an almshouse. The Rev. Ferdinando Moorcroft, and his successors, rectors of Stanhope, were directed, from time to time, to see the poor old women elected, their allowance duly paid them, and their houses repaired; for which the trustees should bestow in largess of him 5s. a year. The property which belonged to the testator, consists of a dwelling house, stable, and out buildings, with about nine acres of freehold land, now rented and occupied by John Golightly, and on which the Wear Valley Railway terminates. There is also an almshouse, consisting of two rooms, in which three poor women of Stanhope reside rent-free. The rector of Stanhope, who now pays much attention to this charity, appoints these alms-women, and pays to each of them 25s. yearly, 5s. of which is considered as an allowance in lieu of coals. He also defrays all the expenses of repairing the almshouse, which was rebuilt about forty-six or forty-seven years ago.

Hartwell's School.—The master of this school receives £9 a year for the instruction of ten children in reading and writing, and £2 to be laid out in books and coals, which is done under the direction of the rector. The number of free scholars is kept up by the rector, who appoints them; and the master has about fifty pay-scholars. The trustees enlarged the school considerably in 1851, and previous to that time, the house had also received additions.

Weardale Schools.—In 1819, Bishop Barrington, with the sum of £2,000, purchased £2,957 9s. 8d. Three-per-Cent. Consols, in the names of Lord Barrington, William Keppel Barrington, and George Barrington, and directed that the dividends of the same might be applied for the promotion of the moral and religious education of the children of the poor within the diocese of Durham, by assisting in the support of certain schools for poor children in Weardale, which the bishop was then forming. In the same year, he purchased a parcel of ground at or near Wearhead; another at Boltsburn, in Rookhope, and a third at Heathery Cleugh; also a parcel of copyhold land in Stanhope: and he caused a school with proper buildings attached, to be erected on each of those parcels, at the expense of about £2,000. The dividends arising from the above stock, amounting to £88 14s. 4d., are added to other funds, raised partly by subscription, and partly from the ancient endowments of different schools in the parish; the disposal of these funds is under the direction of a committee, of which one of the curates of Stanhope acts as treasurer. Out of the receipts, payments are made to the masters of the Westgate, Boltsburn and Chapel schools, named below; also to those of Wearhead, Heathery Cleugh, Eastgate, and Stanhope; and to the mistress of the Stanhope dame school. Coals and books are provided for the scholars, and the repairs of the respective school-premises defrayed. The payments to the teachers are regulated as follows: a certain salary is fixed, at present £40, a calculation is then made of the number of scholars that ought to attend each school, in proportion to the surrounding population, and of the annual amount of the quarterage which such scholars would pay, at 1s. 6d. each; and the difference between the salary and the estimated quarterage is paid from the funds of the charities, with the addition of the quarterage due for such children, as the committee may appoint to be taught free. An addition of £5 a year is allowed in places where there is no dwelling-house.

Boltsburn School.—George Collingwood, on May 15th, 1762, sold to Edward Keene, bishop of Chester, and rector of Stanhope, and his successors in the rectory, a piece of ground at Boltsburn, and the buildings thereon, in trust for a school-house, to be held rent-free, and kept in repair by a master, appointed by the rector, and removable at his discretion for misbehaviour. A new school-house having been erected by Bishop Barrington, the house is let as a dwelling-house at £2 10s. per annum, which is paid to the treasurer of the school-funds, from whom the school-master receives the proportion of his annual salary.

Chapel School.—A house at St. John's Chapel, formerly used as a school, is let at £8 a year, paid to the treasurer of the Barrington School Fund; the bishop having having erected a school-house, and the master's income being made up from the fund.

Dr. Hartwell's Charity.—A house and garth in the town of Stanhope, were bequeathed to the use of the poor by Dr. Hartwell. The old cottage having become ruinous, it was pulled down by Dr. Philpotts, and a new house erected at the expense of upwards of £840, fit for the residence of one or two curates, as the circumstances of the families might make it convenient. One of the curates of the parish now resides in this house, and enjoys the two fields, which contains about three acres, paying to the other curate in consideration thereof, £15 a year, and the yearly sum of £7 to the rector, wherewith two apprentices are placed out every year. The rector sees that the indentures are properly executed, and the children bound to trades whereby they may afterwards obtain their own livelihood.

Westgate School.—By indenture, bearing date 7th April, 1681, Richard Bainbridge granted a customary tenement in Weardale, called Field Stile, for a term of sixteen years from the time of his death, to the uses therein mentioned: viz., after the payment of his debts, for the raising so much money out of the rents and profits as could be during the said term, as a fund for the maintenance of a school-master, to teach and instruct the poor of the parish of Stanhope at Westgate. The property belonging to the school, consists of a meadow in Westgate, containing about four acres, let to a yearly tenant, at a rent of £14; part of a field called Crooked Salter, producing a rent of 18s. 9d.: the sum of £50 secured by bond, and producing £2 10s. interest; the old school-house, the upper part of which the master has as part of his salary, and the lower part is let at a rent of £3 10s. per annum. These several sums are paid over to the treasurer of the funds, appropriated to the support of the Weardale Schools. The building used as a school, was much enlarged at the expense of Bishop Barrington. It has recently been pulled down, and a new school erected in another part of the village. The school is now under the direction of the trustees of the Weardale Schools, from whom the master receives a salary, far exceeding the annual income of the old foundation.

THORNLEY CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, consisting of a considerable portion of the East Quarter or constabulary of Wolsingham, was formed by an order in council, dated the 11th February, 1848, and its population in 1851 was 2,206 souls. It is bounded on the north by Satley chapelry, in the parish of Lanchester; on the west by the Houselhope brook and Bradley burn; on the south by the river Wear; on the south-east and east by the chapelry of Wilton-le-Wear, and on the north-east by Crook chapelry. It comprises the villages of Thornley and Tow Law, with the hamlet of Helm Park.

BRADLEY LORDSHIP is an agricultural district, extending for a considerable distance on both sides of the Wear, the northern portion being intersected by the Bradley burn. The district to the east of this burn belongs to Thornley chapelry, while that on the west is still attached to the parish of Wolsingham. This lordship was formerly held by a family bearing the local name; but, at the time of Hatfield's survey, we find it possessed by Ralph Eure, of Witton, who rendered for it 22s.; and in the time of Cardinal Langley, Sir William Eure obtained license to embattle and fortify Bradley Hall. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the Tempests were the proprietors; but the estate became forfeited to the crown on the attainder of Robert and Michael Tempest, for engaging in the northern rebellion. It was afterwards granted to Sir George Bowes, of Streatham, on whose demise, the Bradley estate passed to his eldest son, Sir William, who was ambassador in Scotland, and treasurer of Berwick, until the dissolution of that garrison in the time of James I. The estate has since remained in the same family, and is now the property of the representatives of the late Thomas Bowes, Esq., of Durham.

Bradley Hall, at present used as a farm house, occupies a secluded and romantic situation, east of the Bradley burn, and on the north side of the road between Durham and Wolsingham. Bradley Mill is situated on the Wolsingham side of the Bradley burn, and is occupied by Messrs. William and James Elliott, corn millers and farmers.

Directory.—Thomas Baker, farmer, Bradley Hall; William and James Elliott, corn millers and farmers, Bradley Mill; Anthony Walton, farmer, New Hall.

HELM PARK, a hamlet in this chapelry, comprises four farmsteads, and is the property of G. P. Wilkinson, Esq., of Harpley Hall, who is also the owner of the mines and minerals.

Helm Park Colliery, which produces coal fit for household purposes, and for the manufacture of coke and gas, is worked by the Messrs. Snowdon. The royalty is partly in this manor, and partly in the township of Witton-le-Wear. It is held under a lease for thirty-one years from the 1st June, 1836. The hamlet of Helm Park is the birth-place of Mr. Thomas Baker, the celebrated engineer and land surveyor, and author of several works on surveying and railway engineering.

Directory.—Robert Robinson, forester to G. P. Wilkinson, Esq., Helm Park; and the farmers are George Allison, Joseph French, Thomas Snowdon (and coal owner), South Park Farm; John Stephenson, and George Vasey.

THORNLEY is a village in the chapelry of the same name, and the property of various owners; the mines and minerals belong to the Hon. G. F. H. Russell, of Brancepeth Castle. It comprises, besides the church and school, a few farm houses, and some good cottages.

The Church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a neat unpretending edifice, consisting of a nave only, with bell-turret at the west end, and will accommodate about 300 persons. The seats are all open and free; and the male portion of the congregation usually sit on the north side, and the females on the south side. The cost of erection was about £350. The chapelry is without endowment; but an annual grant of £100 is given by the Wearable Iron Company, and the surplice fees amount to about £10 a year. The living is a perpetual curacy, dependent on the parish of Wolsingham. Rev. Joshua Elliott, incumbent.

The Parsonage House, situated at Tow Law, is a fine stone edifice, somewhat in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and was erected in 1854, at a cost of upwards of £800.

Thornley School was erected by subscription in 1824, and for fourteen years previously to the building of Thornley Church, divine service was performed within its walls on Thursday evenings, and occasionally on Sundays, by the curate of Wolsingham.

Thornley Colliery, the property of the Hon. G. F. H. Russell, of Brancepeth, is leased by the Tow Law Iron Company, and its produce is almost entirely made into coke for the use of the company's iron furnaces. North of Tow Law are the Blackfield coke ovens, which are furnished with coal from the Black Prince Colliery, in the parish of Satley; and the coke manufactured is used at the iron works.

TOW LAW is a populous and increasing village principally situated in the ecclesiastical district of Thornley, three miles north-east from Wolsingham, and about ten miles north-west from Bishop Auckland. In 1841, a solitary farm house, situated at the northern extremity of the township of Thornley, was called Tow Law, and has given name to the present village, whose prosperity dates from 1845, at which period the extensive works of the Wearable Iron Company were established. At the census taken in 1851, the population amounted to nearly 2,000 souls; in 1854, it had increased to nearly 3,000. The village is intersected by the Stockton and Darlington Railway, which has a station here. There is a large and commodious National School in the village, erected in 1849, at an expense of £1,000, upon a site given by the proprietors of the iron works. The school is supported partly by subscription, and partly by the pence of the children. It is under government inspection and conducted by a certificated teacher. In connection with the school there are two libraries, one for the use of the scholars and the other for adults, established and supported by Charles Attwood, Esq., and the incumbent of Thornley. The school-room is licensed for public worship; and a piece of ground attached is consecrated for interments. Here are Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Chapels, each capable of holding about 200 persons. The Wesleyan Chapel has a school attached, which is attended principally by the children of workmen engaged at Mr. Pease's colliery of Hedley Hope, and that gentleman subscribes £20 a year towards its support. There are several public houses in the village, a post office, which issues money orders, a rural police station, and the customary tradesmen's shops.

Tow Law Iron Works.—These works, belonging to the "Weardale Iron Company," and constructed under the management of the resident partner, Charles Attwood, Esq., were begun in 1845, by the erection of one blast furnace at Stanhope. In the following year six others were erected, in a more suitable situation at Tow Law, where the Durham coal-field terminates, and in contact with the mountain limestone formation, in which are contained the deposits of iron-ore required for their supply. "The ore," observes Mr. Fordyce, "is conveyed to the iron works partly by the public line of railway connecting Tow Law with Stanhope, near which last-mentioned place the mining field begins; and partly by a private branch from that railway, constructed by the iron company, and extending into Rookhope, which latter is at present being further prolonged into Middlehope. The mines of iron-stone become, about this latter place, much more numerous, larger, and of richer quality than in the immediate neighbourhood of Stanhope; and this superiority continues throughout nearly the whole length of Weardale westward, or for a further distance of about fifteen miles. The ore which these mines afford is found in the same veins as those out of which the lead-ore of the district is wrought; although it is found, for the most part, that where the lead becomes the most abundant, the quantity of iron-ore diminishes; whilst where the iron is more plentiful, the lead-ore as frequently becomes more sparingly diffused. The ore is met with not only in the veins themselves, but extends on one or both sides of them, by an expansion which is locally described as a flatting out, or into flats; that is to say, into horizontal beds, for very variable distances from the cheeks, or sides, of the true vein; sometimes, indeed, to the width of several hundred yards, and of a depth or thickness of from fifteen to nearly seventy feet. These are, in some places, so near the day as to admit of being wrought by open work, or in the manner of quarries; whilst in other cases, they have to be followed and wrought under ground, in the same manner as is most usually done with common lead mines. The quality of the iron afforded by these ores is of the very strongest and best description; especially that made from the sparry carbonate, which partakes largely of the toughness of the Russian and the stiffness or body of the Swedish iron. In fact, if smelted with charcoal, it would be fully equal or superior to the best of these; and even smelted with the coke of the county of Durham, and subsequently worked up with charcoal, it is very little inferior to them, for any use of either iron or steel. Indeed, there are extant old documents which show that, about two centuries ago, the iron ores of the Bishop of Durham's manor and mines in Weardale were worked for the purpose of making steel as well as iron. The manor is of great extent, reaching from near Witton-le-Wear to Alston Moor, at which latter place a portion of these ores, although much less abundantly, is also found; and the whole manor of Weardale is held, as to its iron, by the Weardale Iron Company. The lead therein was held by leases, renewed for several centuries, by the ancestors of T. W. B. Beaumont, Esq., M.P. for South Northumberland, and at present by himself; and the Weardale Iron Company work and save the lead ore that they meet with in all their iron mines, to be delivered, upon terms agreed, to him. They employ at present, at Tow Law and in Weardale, about 1,700 men, of whom about one half are occupied in raising iron and lead ore. They have four blast furnaces, of unusually large size, in blast, and two more nearly ready to blow-in; each of them capable of producing, according to the different quality afforded by their ores, as wrought near Stanhope or further westward, from 130 to 180 tons, and, in some cases, even more, per week. They have also mills and forges, for most varieties of finished iron, at Tudhoo; which latter are at present in process of enlargement to a scale capable of consuming as much pig iron as the above mentioned number of blast furnaces can make. Meanwhile, a considerable part of it is sold for the same purpose of making finished bar iron, to forge and mill masters in Yorkshire, Staffordshire, and Shropshire, in all which places its superior quality commands remunerating prices, notwithstanding the great distance and cost of carriage."

WHITWORTH PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry was anciently dependant on the parish of Merrington, but now enjoys all the privileges of a distinct parish, though the period of its separation from Merrington is not known. It contains the townships of Old Park and Whitworth, and forms one constabulary. The boundary line between it and the township of Middlestone consists of the turnpike road from Bishop Auckland to Durham, along which it passes to the north-western angle of the township of Merrington, where it leaves the said turnpike road on the north, and proceeds east-north-east to the Tudhoe Iron Works; here it forms nearly a right angle, and proceeds north-north-west along the course of a brook which separates Whitworth from the township of Tudhoe, in the parish of Brancepeth, until the said brook is joined by another from the east; thence in a western and north-western direction until the said brook falls into the Wear, opposite Brancepeth East Park; thence south-west along the course of the river Wear, which separates Whitworth from the parish of Brancepeth, to the north-eastern boundary of the chapelry of Byers Green; thence south-east and east nearly to the hamlet called New Whitworth; thence south-west to Old Park, and south and south-west between the said manor and Byers Green Common to the township of Binchester, in the said chapelry of Byers Green; thence east-south-east to the township of Westerton, in the district parish of Coundon; thence north-east between the said township of Westerton and manor of Old Park to the extreme northern angle of the former; and thence south-east to the turnpike road from Bishop Auckland to Durham, at the point where the township of Westerton adjoins that of Middlestone.

OLD PARK township or manor adjoins Whitworth on the south-west, and comprises an area of 401 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 20; in 1811, 14; in 1821, 80; in 1831, 67; in 1841, 30; and in 1851, 20 souls. The property was assessed for the county rate, in 1853, at £297. This manor was formerly under the ecclesiastical superintendence of the Prior of Durham; but being granted by Thomas de Ackley to Bishop Philip, his successors granted it to Galfred de Park. It was afterwards held by the Kellawes, and at the time of Hatfield survey, we find it held by Thomas Claxton, in whose family it remained till the time of the northern rebellion, when it was confiscated, and granted by the crown to George Frevill, of Hardwick. It afterwards became the property of the Whartons, and is now possessed by their representatives.

Old Park House occupies a retired situation, about half-a-mile from the Wear, and from the style of its architecture harmonises well with the seclusion by which it is surrounded. It is at present unoccupied.

Directory.—John Kirkley, farmer, is the principal resident.

The township of WHITWORTH contains 1,465 acres, and the property was assessed for the county rate in 1853 at £2,343. The population in 1801 was 122; in 1811, 115; in 1821, 112; in 1831, 104; in 1841, 290; and in 1851, 650 souls. The increase is attributed to the more extensive working of coal mines. The township is intersected by the Byers Green branch of the Clarence Railway. From Boldon Book we learn that Thomas de Ackley held this manor by knight's service; and it appears that his descendants assumed the local name, for we find John de Whitworth recorded as the proprietor in Hatfield's survey. It was afterwards held by the Nevilles, and was confiscated on the attainder of that family. After being held by the Watsons and Baxters, this estate was purchased, in 1652, by Mark Shafto, Esq., and is still possessed by his descendants; Robert Duncombe Shafto, Esq., is now the sole proprietor of Whitworth. The township includes five farmsteads.

The Village of Whitworth is pleasantly situated about three-quarters of a mile south of the river Wear, four-and-a-half miles north-north-east from Bishop Auckland, and six miles south-west from the city of Durham.

The Church, which was almost re-edified in 1850, is a neat structure, consisting of nave and chancel, with a bell turret at the west end. The western window is filled with stained glass, and three graceful lancet lights form the east window. The entire cost of the improvements effected in 1850, amounted to above £500, which was defrayed by a rate and a voluntary subscription. In the church yard are two ancient monuments, one of which represents a knight in full armour, supposed to be one of the Whitworth family; the other is an effigy of a female, with the arms raised. The parish register commences in 1569. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge or certified, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, who are also the impropietors. The old lords of Whitworth, the founders of the church, endowed it with a messuage and twelve acres of land. In 1835 the income was stated at £243 per annum, out of which £50 was paid to a curate. The gross value of the living is now £220. Rev. Charles Carr, B.A., incumbent.

The Parsonage, erected in 1847, occupies a pleasant site, overlooking the vale of the Wear, about a quarter of a mile from the church.

Whitworth Park, the residence of Mrs. Catharine D. Shafto, is a neat modern mansion, commanding a fine view over the vale of the Wear.

Whitworth Park Colliery was commenced by the Durham County Coal Company, on June 15th, 1839; and the coal was won on the 10th July, 1841. Like the other speculations of the company, however, this colliery proved unremunerative; and in 1842, it was dismantled and laid in, after an outlay of nearly £40,000, but was afterwards relet to, and fitted up anew by a private company. The manufacture of coke is now extensively carried on. The railway joins the Byers Green branch of the Clarence line, about 500 yards from the colliery, from whence to the drops at Port Clarence, on the Tees, is about 21 miles. Coals from this pit, however, are now shipped at Hartlepool West Docks, and are known in the market as "Whitworth Wallsend."

Spenny Moor.—This ancient waste or common, was held by the Prior of Durham and Hugh Gubyon, lord of Tudhoe, as early as 1279; and it afterwards belonged successively to the Whitworths and the Nevilles. Twenty years ago, the name was confined to a single farm held in the Whitworth estate; but now Spenny Moor is a considerable village, situated on the road between Durham and Bishop Auckland, and, from the rapidity with which buildings are being erected, will shortly assume the appearance of a considerable town. A handsome and substantial school house, with a dwelling for the master, built in 1841, stands at one end of the village; it is conducted on the national system, and is attended on an average by about 100 boys and girls. There is also an infant school, which is well attended. The establishment of the Tudhoe Iron Works, in the immediate vicinity, has tended to increase the population; and, in consequence, additional houses are continually in the course of erection.

WITTON-LE-WEAR PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north-east by Crook, on the north-west by the parish of Wolsingham, on the south by Etherley, on the south-west by Hamsterley, and on the east by Escomb. It is situated in the most north-westerly portion of the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, and consists of the townships of North Bedburn and Witton-le-Wear, a portion of the latter being situated on the south-side of the Wear, and the remainder of the chapelry on the north-side.

NORTH BEDBURN township comprises an area of 2,036 acres, and its annual value is £3,696 15s. The land owners are George H. Wilkinson, Esq., George Coates, Esq., George P. Wilkinson, Esq., Smith Greenwell, Esq., Rev. Edward Davison, Mr. John Whitfield, and several small proprietors. The Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 255; in 1811, 282; in 1821, 351; in 1831, 337; in 1841, 457; and in 1851, 1,151 souls. A portion of the Wear Valley Railway extends into this township. Here are extensive coal-mines which afford employment to a considerable number of persons. At the time of Hatfield's survey, Ralph de Eure held Macknell and 80 acres of land, rendering 5s. rent. Robert de Dittleton held Wadley, rendering a rent in lieu of a sparrow-hawk. John Spring and Robert Hagerston each held a toft and 100 acres in little Mayland. John Barker held Wodingfield, containing 40 acres, and rendered 20s., and divers other persons held land in the manor. Harperley, by the above survey, was held by John Conyers, who rendered 20s. It was afterwards possessed by the Cradocks, of Gainford; and as the old hall on the estate stood in a low situation, Marmaduke Cradock, Esq., erected a new mansion on a more elevated site. In 1785, we find the estate described as consisting of the mansion house and 670 acres of land, tithe-free, with two farm-houses, and a colliery then working; the whole paying an annual rent of £3 6s. 6d. to the bishop, and 13s. 4d. to the curate of Witton, which payments are still continued. George Pearson, Esq., of Durham, afterwards held Harperley Park, which he ornamented with thriving plantations. He died in April 1798, when the estate came into the possession of the Wilkinson family, with whom it has since remained, George Wilkinson, Esq., being the present proprietor.

Bitchburn Colliery School, which is supported by Messrs. Strakers and Love, the proprietors of Bitchburn Colliery, and George Coates, Esq., is attended by about 85 pupils of both sexes, and conducted by Mr. Joseph Richson. It is used on Sundays as a place of worship by the Wesleyan Methodist New Connexion. The Wesleyan Methodists have also a chapel at Howden.

WITTON-LE-WEAR township comprises an area of 2,955 acres, and its rateable value is £6,557 15s. Its population in 1801, was 450; in 1811, 544; in 1821, 531; in 1831, 502; in 1841, 565; and in 1851, 918 souls. The land-owners are Henry Chaytor, Esq., who is also lord of the manor; R. D. Shafto, Esq.; the executors of Newby Lowson, Esq.; Mr. Cuthbert Jackson; and Miss Elizabeth Garthwaite. The township is traversed by the Crook Branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway and by the Wear Valley line; the latter has two stations, one at Harperley, in the township of North Bedburn, and another at Witton-le-Wear, where it curves a little to the north, and joins the Crook line near Low Bitchburn, at which junction there is another station. "An act for dividing and inclosing certain moors or commons within the townships of Witton-le-Wear and North Bedburne, within the chapelry of Witton-le-Wear, in the manor of Wolsingham, in the county palatine of Durham," was passed 18th Geo. III. The land divided contained upwards of 1,380 acres, which were allotted to the neighbouring proprietors. There are several coal-mines in this township, which give employment to a considerable number of persons.

The manor of Witton was anciently held by the crown, and in the reign of Henry II. it was granted to Henry de Pudsey, in consideration of 2,000 marks of silver, paid by his uncle, Bishop Pudsey. It afterwards came into the possession of the Eures, who were so famous for their military exploits against the Scots, but the family became extinct about 1680. At the period of the civil wars, we find Witton possessed by Sir William Darcy, but he not being a royalist, his castle of Witton was besieged and taken by the royalists under Sir Arthur Hazelrigg, governor of Auckland Castle; and Sir William was compelled to compound for his estates for £1,000, with £40 per annum settled for the support of the Presbyterian ministry. About the year 1689, Wilton Castle was dismantled, and its materials sold by auction. It was rebuilt in the early part of the last century, and, with the manor, was sold by Henry Darcy, Esq., to William Cuthbert, Esq., for about £15,000. It was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Hopper family, and in December 1796, the whole of the interior of the castle was destroyed by fire, the outer walls only being left standing. Witton Castle and estate were purchased for £78,000 by William Chaytor, Esq., in October 1816, at which period, the estate contained 2,383 acres, all tithe-free, except 208; and freehold, except 200 copyhold. Mr. Chaytor was succeeded at his demise by his eldest son, William Chayter, Esq., of Croft, M.P., who, dying in May 1819, the estate devolved upon his eldest son, Sir William Chaytor, Bart., who was born 29th April, 1771, and created a baronet by patent, September 30th, 1831. He was a candidate for the representation of the city of Durham in August 1880; and, on the passing of the Reform Bill, was elected one of the first members for the borough of Sunderland, in 1832. In 1835, he was a candidate for the same borough, and in 1837, for the northern division of the county, but was, in both cases, unsuccessful. He was lieutenant-colonel commandant of the North Riding Militia, a magistrate, and a deputy-lieutenant of the counties of Durham and Yorkshire. Sir William died January 28th, 1847. Sir William Richard Chaytor, Bart., of Croft, the present baronet, was born February 7th, 1805. He was elected M.P. for the city of Durham in March 1831, and again on the 2nd of May following; and he was returned December 12th, 1832, as one of the first members for the city after the passing of the Reform Act. In August 1839, Sir William Chaytor sold Witton Castle and estate to Donald Maclean, Esq., M.P. for Oxford, for nearly £100,000. This gentleman, during his residence at Witton took an active part in the affairs and trade of the county, and maintained a splendid establishment; but, becoming a bankrupt in 1846, the estate, &c., were sold by an order of the High Court of Chancery, and were purchased on behalf of Henry Chaytor, Esq.

The Village of Witton-le-Wear occupies a pleasant and healthy situation, on the southern declivity of an eminence on the north-side of the river Wear, four miles west-north-west of Bishop Auckland, and twelve miles south-west from Durham. The village commands a charming view of the surrounding country. It contains several inns and public houses, a post office, a rural police station; and is chiefly inhabited by miners, iron founders, and agricultural labourers. The Wear is here crossed by a good substantial bridge of two arches.

The Church is an ancient structure, dedicated to St. Philip and St. James, and was formerly prebendal to Auckland College. It is situated on the north-side of the road through the village, and consists of a nave and north aisle, a chancel, and a low western tower. The north-wall was taken down, and rebuilt in the early part of the present century; a western gallery was erected in 1780, and another has since been added above the north aisle. The church was re-roofed and otherwise repaired about the year 1850, at a cost of £100. It contains a fine stained glass window, the gift of Donald Maclean, Esq., M.P., in 1845; and also an organ, which has been recently erected. Accommodation is provided for about three hundred persons. The parish register commences in 1558. The living is a curacy, not in charge, in the deanery of Darlington; the owners of Witton Castle estate are the patrons and impropiators. It is of the certified value of £11 10s. In 1723 the living was augmented by £400 from Queen Anne's Bounty and voluntary subscriptions; and a similar sum was added in 1754. It also receives £10 per annum from Lord Crewe's trustees. In 1835, the income was stated at £97 per annum. The Rev. Lawrence L. Brown is the incumbent.

The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have places of worship here.

Witton Castle, a stone-built mansion, with turrets and embattled walls, comprises an elegant and lofty drawing room, with an arched ceiling, and a stone-staircase, leading to the turretted-roof; a billiard room, a library, a dining room, with sitting rooms, bed-rooms, and domestic offices. The principal entrance is by a portico from the Court-yard, opening into a hall, from which a stone-staircase leads to the rooms just named. The Court-yard is surrounded by castellated walls, with a clock-tower containing three rooms. From its position, being situated in the centre of the estate, and near the confluence of the Linburn and the Wear, the castle commands pleasant and extensive views of the surrounding country.

Witton Mechanics' Institution was established in 1850, and now numbers about thirty members, who pay a subscription of 1s. per quarter each, and possess a library of about two-hundred volumes. The meetings are held in the school-room.

The Witton Park Iron Works, situated in this township, are very extensive, giving employment to about one-thousand persons. Messrs. Bolckow and Vaughan are the proprietors.

Witton School, a good stone-building, is situated on the north side of the village, on the Durham road, and is attended by about forty children of both sexes. It is endowed with the interest of £200, left by John Cuthbert, Esq., and now producing about £8 per annum, for which the school master teaches six poor boys gratuitously. The boys are nominated by the owner of the Witton Castle estate. Mr. William Buston, master.

Charities.—Besides the endowment of the school mentioned above, this chapelry possesses the following charities:—The Rev. Ezra Emerson, by will, dated December 28th, 1793, bequeathed £20 for the use of the poor of this parish not receiving parochial relief; and £60 was given by other persons for the same purpose. The amount was vested in £120 stock three-per-cent consols, but has since been removed to the Savings Bank, Bishop Auckland; and out of the interest, £3 12s., the sum of 16s. is paid to the overseer of North Bedburn for distribution in that township; the remainder being given away at Christmas to the poor of Witton-le-Wear, in money or clothing, in small amounts to each person. Township of North Bedburn.—Donor Unknown.—£2 per annum, understood to have been charged for above 100 years, though its origin is unknown, is received from George Coates, Esq., the owner of Pit Close in this township; and with the 16s. above noticed, is distributed by the overseer to the poor, in small sums of 2s. or 3s. each.

Biography.—Thomas Jackson, D.D. author of "Commentaries on the Apostles' Creed," was born at Witton-le-Wear, but having many relations at Newcastle, his parents designed him for a merchant in that town. His literary tastes, however, could not be suppressed, and he was consequently sent to Oxford University, where he soon became distinguished for his knowledge in mathematics, philology, logic, &c., but it was in divinity that he stood pre-eminent. He became vicar of Newcastle in 1603, and held the benefice till 1635, when he became president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He was collated to a prebend of Winchester in 1635, and, in 1638, became dean of Peterborough; but did not enjoy this dignity quite two years, for he died in 1640. His numerous works are collected in three volumes folio.

WOLSINGHAM PARISH.

Wolsingham parish, which comprises the constaberies of Wolsingham quarter, East quarter, South quarter, and Park quarter, is bounded on the north-east by Lanchester parish, on the north-west by the parish of Stanhope, on the south by Hamsterley chapelry, on the south-east by that of Witton-le-Wear, and on the east by Crook chapelry. It is partly traversed by the out-crop, or boundary of the coal field, and consequently borders on the great lead mining district of Durham, Northumberland, and Cumberland. The parish comprises an area of 20,403 acres; and the lands and buildings were estimated for the county-rate in 1853, at the annual value of £13,026. The population in 1801 was 1,834; in 1811, 1,983; in 1821, 2,197; in 1831, 2,239; in 1841, 2,086; and in 1851, it had attained to 4,885 souls. This great increase is chiefly attributed to the erection of iron blast-furnaces and the working of coal and iron mines on an extensive scale. The Wear Valley Branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway passes through this parish, at a short distance from the river, which it crosses at East Wesserby, about a quarter of a mile south-east of the town. The Wear and Derwent Junction Railway also passes through a portion of this parish.

Wolsingham being a manor belonging to the bishop, the tenants anciently held their lands on servile tenures, as appears in the record called the Boldon Book. Henry, nephew of Bishop Pudsey, commenced the erection of a religious house at Backstaneford, near Wolsingham, but he was induced to discontinue its progress here, and to fix upon the more eligible situation of Finchale for the site of his monastery. A field, called the Chapel-garth, long contained traces of an edifice of considerable extent, surrounded by a moat, and was supposed to have been the site of the intended institution. Property in this parish was much divided at an early period; the royalty of the whole parish still belongs to the bishop. The commons have been enclosed and divided, in accordance with the powers of the act 5 George III.; the rights of the Bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor of Wolsingham, being reserved. Several parts of the parish have been much improved, of late years, by their respective proprietors.

THE TOWN OF WOLSINGHAM.

Wolsingham, a market-town, in the parish of the same name, is situated on the north bank of the river Wear, 16 miles west of Durham, 23 south-south-west of Newcastle, and 260 north-north-west of London. It contains several good houses, a railway station, and a number of inns and public houses. The principal articles of manufacture are, spades, shovels, axes, and coarse woollen cloth; wool combing and dyeing are also carried on; and there are a number of tradesmen's shops. The Wear is here crossed by a bridge of two arches, erected upon the site of the old bridge, which was swept away by a great flood in November 1771. The weekly market for the sale of corn butter, eggs, &c., is held on Tuesday. There were eight annual fairs at the following periods, viz.: the 12th of May and St. Matthew's day (September 21), for toys and pedlery; the Tuesdays before the 1st and 31st of March, and before the 12th May, the 15th of September, the 2nd and 29th October, and the 23rd of November, for cattle, &c. The only cattle fair now held is that on the 1st Tuesday in October, on which day the Wear Valley Agricultural Society holds its annual show; the other fairs are almost obsolete.

THE PARISH CHURCH, dedicated to St. Mary and St. Stephen, was completely restored in 1848, no part of the old building remaining except the tower. The present structure is in the early English style, erected from designs furnished by Mr. W. Nicholson, architect, of Wolsingham, at a cost of nearly £1,200. The interior is fitted up with open seats, a large number of which are free. The baptismal font is the gift of Lady F. Fitzclarence. The churchyard is bordered by rows of very fine trees, which, with the church, form a beautiful object in the view of the town from the opposite side of the Wear. The parish register commences in 1655. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Darlington, valued in the Liber Regis at £31 13s. 4d.; gross income £907 per annum. There is a small glebe, and the rector is entitled to all the tithes. An apportionment of a rent-charge in lieu of tithes was laid before a meeting of the parishioners on August 5th, 1839; and the commutation was agreed to at a meeting held on the 19th April, 1841. Rev. J. A. Blackett, rector; Rev. W. H. Walter, curate.

ST. THOMAS OF CANTERBURY'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH is situated on an elevated site at the north-east part of the town, and is an elegant and spacious building, in the decorated style, consisting of a chancel, nave, and aisles. It was erected in 1854, from designs by Joseph Harrison, Esq., and will accommodate upwards of 800 persons. The ceiling of the chancel is circular, divided into panelling, in which decorative ornaments are to be placed. The ceilings of the aisles and nave are lofty, and the building is well lighted from several windows in the north and south aisles. The cost of erection was about £2,000. Rev. William Wilkinson, priest.

THE BAPTIST CHAPEL, Market Place, is a suitable stone building erected in 1830, and was opened for worship in 1831. Rev. T. Cardwell, minister.

The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have also chapels here.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—At a court held for the manor of Wolsingham, October 14th, 1612, William Grimwell, Anthony Vasey, and seven others, were, by the special mandate of the Lord Bishop of Durham, admitted to a parcel of the waste land, lying at the east end of the village of Wolsingham, for the building a common and free school and other necessary edifices, to teach boys in the rudiments of learning and the Christian religion; a garden to be made adjoining thereto, and inclosed, containing in length fifty yards, and in breadth sixteen yards; and also of another parcel of land on the west side of the corn fields of the said village, containing by estimation sixteen acres, called the Batts, to hold to the use of the said school and of a master in the same, at the yearly rent of 5s. 4d. The curates of Wolsingham have generally been appointed masters of the school, and put in possession of the premises, consisting of a good dwelling-house, with a large school-room, rebuilt between sixty and seventy years ago by subscription. There is a small garden attached to the house. The whole of the land belonging to the school lies on the south side of the river; an exchange having been effected many years ago for the benefit of the charity; and the rental, amounting to £56 10s., is received by the master, who, in respect of this foundation, instructs eighteen boys of the parish in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and classics, if required. They are not admitted under nine years of age, and remain for three years. In 1789, Jonathan Wooler left £100, and in 1826, George Wooler left a similar sum, to this school; the interest on the first of these sums is £3 10s., and that on the second £4, for each of which sums the master instructs four children of persons not receiving relief from the parish, appointed by the respective trustees, in the same manner as the eighteen appointed on the old foundation. An examination is held annually in December by the trustees, at which prizes are awarded to the most deserving pupils. Henry Wade, master.

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL, situated at the east end of the town, is a handsome stone building, in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1848, at a cost of £1,000. The average attendance is 120 children. William Stokoe and Elizabeth Whiteley, teachers. Besides these establishments there is a school attached to the Catholic Church, and the various places of worship have Sunday schools attached.

THE WOLSINGHAM MECHANICS' INSTITUTE AND LITERARY SOCIETY.—This institution was founded in 1826, by the establishment of a library, which proving successful, afterwards assumed the above title. The library now contains upwards of 500 volumes. Lectures are occasionally delivered, and the institution derives every support from the inhabitants.

PUBLIC OFFICES, &c.—The Town Hall, situated in the Market Place, is a neat stone building, the upper part of which is used as a news-room, and for public meetings, and the lower storey for depositing stalls, &c. It was erected in 1834. The Post Office is in the front street, opposite to the railway station. The latter building, erected in 1847, is somewhat in the Elizabethan style, and built with fire-brick, with polished stone facings. The County Police Station, built about eleven years ago, is on the south side of the Market Place, and has a lock-up attached. Petty sessions are held in the Town Hall once a month, and the county court is also held monthly in the same building. The officers of the latter court are Henry Stapylton, Esq., judge; A. Lambert, Esq., treasurer; John E. Marshall, chief clerk; Robert Weddell, assistant clerk; and George Taylor, high bailiff.

CHARITIES.—Besides the Grammar School (which see), this parish possesses the following charities:—The "Poor's Land" was left by persons named Markindale, Astley, and others unknown, for the use of the poor of Wolsingham. Leadgate Field contains 1a. 0r. 10p., and is let at £5 a-year. The Low Field, containing 4a. 2r., is let together with an allotment of 8a. 1r. 10p. (set out on an inclosure in respect of the other lands above mentioned), at £12 a-year. The rents are paid to the churchwardens, and distributed on St. Stephen's day by the parish officers and the curate, to such poor persons of the parish as are thought most deserving.—In 1676, George Clarke gave 8s. 4d. yearly to the poor, payable out of land possessed by John Wren. This sum is paid by the proprietor of the field.—John Ayre, by will, in 1685, left £2 yearly to the poor, payable out of the Havre Field. This sum continued to be paid until 1850, when the occupier of the field refused to do so, on the ground that his landlord would not allow it him when he paid the rent. Joseph Wooler, Esq., owner of the property, on being applied to, declined to pay more than a moiety of the charity, which was rejected by the churchwarden. The latter procured a copy of that part of John Ayre's will relating to the charity, by which it appeared that the overseers, and not the churchwardens, are trustees; the amount is now paid by the proprietor, and is distributed with the produce of the two charities last mentioned, in sums of from 2s. to 3s. to each poor person.—The Rev. Robert Gordon, who died in 1780, by will, directed his executors to invest £200, and to appropriate the annual produce for the benefit of the poor of the parish of Wolsingham. This legacy was laid out in the purchase of £272 2s. 2d. four-per-cent stock, afterwards reduced to three-and-a-half per cent.—On November 29th, 1780, the Rev. W. Nowell, rector of the parish, transferred £200 four per cent bank annuities into the names of the same trustees, and for the same purpose. The dividends on these sums, amounting to £16 10s. 6d. per annum, are remitted to the rector, and, after notice given in the church, are distributed, generally in March, amongst such poor householders residing in and belonging to the parish, as receive no parochial relief. The sums given to each family vary from 2s. to 5s.—Besides the interest of £100 to the Grammar School, Jonathan Wooler bequeathed a similar sum for the benefit of the poor widows having no relief from the parish. £3 10s., the dividend received on account of this bequest, is divided annually by the rector and trustees, on the Friday in Easter week, into nearly equal sums, and given to about twelve poor widows.—George Wooler, by will, May 12th, 1820, bequeathed two several sums of £100 to the same purposes as the last named charity; and the dividends received from stock, late new four per cents, is given to the same persons that receive the above. The alteration of the dividends on stock, reduces the two sums to £6 5s.—The late Rev. William Wilson, in 1843, left £400 in government stock (consols), the interest of which, £12 10s., to be divided amongst poor widows of the parish.—William Newcombe, in 1846, left £800, invested in government stock, the interest of which was to be divided amongst poor widows of the parish. He also bequeathed £200 in government stock, the interest of which was to be paid to the master of the Grammar School, for the education of poor children.

EAST QUARTER.—A considerable portion of this quarter or constabulary, which extends about five miles to the east of the town of Wolsingham, has been formed into the new chapelry of Thornley, and will be found described under the head of that chapelry. Redgate House, the property of John Kirsop, Esq., of London, is a well built modern mansion, surrounded with gardens, shrubberies, and lawn, about half a mile from Wolsingham. A fine prospect of the valley of the Wear is obtained from Redgate Bank Top, on the north of the town. Greenwell Hill and Hodge House—the latter a farm of sixteen acres—form a freehold, belonging to Thomas Greenwell, Esq., of Durham. Boundary House Farm belongs to Messrs. Curry, of Bishop Oak.

PARK QUARTER.—This constabulary forms the western and north-western portion of the parish, and extends about four-and-a-half miles from Wolsingham. It anciently comprised one of the great hunting parks of the bishops of Durham. All the mines and minerals within this district are held by lease under the see. Newland and Fawlees, or Faunlees, were held, in the time of Bishop Hatfield, by Thomas de Ebor. The Wooler family have long held property here; and Fawlees House, is now the property of George D. Wooler, Esq., J.P.

Wolsingham Park estate was purchased from the late Lord Barrington, in 1847, by ——— Isaacs, Esq., of London. Bishop Oak is the name of a respectable mansion; Low Jofflas, Park Wall, Bail Hill, Chapel Walks, Backstone Bank, Harelaw, and West Field House, are the names of farms.

SOUTH QUARTER.—The constabulary called South Quarter comprises all that portion of the parish which lies on the south side of the Wear, except a part of the manor of Bradley. The southern limit of the quarter, about four miles from the town, includes Wolsingham Common, which adjoins that of South Bedburn, in Hamsterley chapelry. This constabulary comprises the estates or farms of Brandwood or Broadwood, Wyshill or Wyserley, Holbeck, Goosecroft, Landieu, the Eshes, &c.

DARLINGTON WARD.—SOUTH-EAST DIVISION.

This division of Darlington Ward comprises the parishes of Aycliffe, Coniscliffe, Darlington, Dinsdale, part of Gainford, Haughton-le-Skerne with the chapelry of Sockburn, and the parochial chapelry of Denton. It contains 49,787 acres, and its population in 1851 was 19,349 souls.

AYCLIFFE PARISH.

This extensive parish, the most northerly one in the south-east division of Darlington Ward, comprises the townships or constaberies of Aycliffe, Brafferton, Preston-le-Skerne, and Woodham. It is bounded on the north by Merrington and Bishop Middleham, on the south-west by St. Andrew's Auckland, on the west by Heighington, on the south by Haughton-le-Skerne, on the south-east by Bishopton, and on the east by Sedgfield and Great Stainton.

GREAT AYCLIFFE township is supposed to have derived its name from its ancient oak woods. It contains 2,134 acres, and the amount of property assessed for the county-rate in 1853, was £3,978 15s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 640; in 1811, 633; in 1821, 807; in 1831, 937; in 1841, 823; and in 1851, 812 souls. The Stockton and Darlington,—the Stockton, Hartlepool, and Clarence,—and the York, Newcastle and Berwick Railways pass through this township. The station of the latter is a little east of the village. Great Aycliffe, as well as School Aycliffe, in the parish of Heighington, was one of those mortgaged by Bishop Aldune to the Earls of Northumberland. Simeon of Durham informs us, that it was restored to the see at the time of Canute's pilgrimage; but the registers of the church state that Scot, the son of Alstane, at a later date gave Aycliffe to St. Cuthbert. Bishop Flambard received a confirmatory grant of Aycliffe from the crown, specifying that it was one of those places that the people of Northumberland had injuriously claimed against St. Cuthbert and the see. In 1379, 1388, and 1484, the monks of Durham were licensed by Bishops Hatfield, Fordham, and Dudley, to acquire lands in this parish, in consequence of which the dean and chapter are now proprietors of nearly all the land in Great Aycliffe, which they let on 21 years' leases, renewable every seven years. The Earl of Ellon, — Addison, Esq.; John Harrison, Esq.; Samuel Swire, Esq.; Stephen Burdon, Esq.; and Benton Ord, Esq.; J. J. Metcalf, and Mr. Daniel Mumby, are also landowners.

The Village of Great Aycliffe is pleasantly situated five miles north of Darlington, on the west bank of the Skerne, which here gives motion to two corn mills. It comprises four inns and public-houses, several workshops, and the customary tradesmen's shops. The Skerne frequently overflows its banks in this neighbourhood, and inundates the adjoining meadows. Linen was formerly manufactured to some extent in this village, but it was discontinued about the year 1837; and the principal trade of the place now consists in lime burning, which is extensively carried on by Mr. George Chapman and Mr. Stephenson.

The Church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is situated on a hill west of the village, and forms a striking object in the scenery of the neighbourhood. It consists of a nave with side aisles, a chancel, tower, and southern entrance porch. It is an ancient edifice, but was considerably repaired in 1835, when a gallery was erected by subscription. The greater portion of the interior was newly plastered in 1852, and the south porch re-erected. The pews are of the date 1600, and are well designed seats, with balustraded backs. In the chancel there is an effigy of a knight, with his hands clasped on his breast, his sword sheathed, a plain shield on his left arm, and a dog at his feet; and within the altar rails is a flat slab, on which are sculptured two crosses. In the porch beneath the tower are the fragments of two curious Saxon crosses, which formerly stood in the churchyard. One of them is richly sculptured, and bears a representation of the Crucifixion. The parish register commences in 1560. The living, formerly a rectory, but now a vicarage, is a peculiar belonging to the dean and chapter of Durham, valued in the Liber Regis at £20; gross income £282. The great tithes of Aycliffe are assigned to the third stall in Durham Cathedral; and those of Preston-le-Skerne, Ketton, and Ricknall, to the eight stall. The dean and chapter have granted, in augmentation of the endowment, a house, a garden, and two pieces of land annexed, £10; Brafferton tithes (previously belonging to the third stall), £60; annual value, £70. Rev. John Davie Eade, M.A., vicar; Rev. William Eade, M.A., curate.

Here is a Methodist Chapel, a suitable building, erected in 1837.

Heworth is an estate in this township, consisting at present of a single farm, situated on the main road, about a mile to the north of Aycliffe. At the time of the compilation of Boldon Book, it was held by William Brus, by foreign service and 15s. rent. It afterwards passed to the Hotons of Herdwyk, who conveyed a portion of the vill to trustees for the Priory of Durham. The remainder was transferred by marriage to the Hebbornes. This property was subsequently held by the Salvins, Byerleys, Millbankes, and Watsons, and now belongs to Samuel Swire, Esq.

Charities.—William Bell, by will, dated December 28th, 1800, bequeathed £100 to the vicar and churchwardens of Aycliffe, to be by them invested in government securities, and the annual dividend paid to the village schoolmaster. The dividend at present produced from stock in the new four-percents is £3 18s. 2d., which, after deducting necessary expenses, is paid to the master, and in consideration of which, he instructs eight children, nominated by the vicar and churchwardens, in reading, writing, and accounts, at 3d. per week each, which is less than half the ordinary charge. The school-house was built by subscription, and possesses no other endowment. It was enlarged in 1837.—Thomas Gibson, by will, February 3rd, 1702, gave to the poor of the township of Great Aycliffe his close, called the Millholme, then of the annual value of 40s., and of which the lease from the dean and chapter was to be from time to time renewed by the vicar, who should distribute the rent thereof in white bread to the said poor every Lord's-day at the communion table. After deducting the necessary expenses for rent and renewals, the remainder is expended weekly in the purchase of eighteen penny white loaves, which are given by one, two, or three loaves each, to poor old persons attending divine service.

CONVEYANCE per railway, from the railway station, at the eastern part of the village, and from the Heighington and Aycliffe Station, about three quarters of a mile west of the village.

BRAFFERTON is a township and village, the principal proprietors of which are Sir C. Hardinge, Bart., and the trustees of the late A. Wilkinson, Esq. The area of the township is 2,409 acres, and the property was valued for the county rate in 1853 at £2,845. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 212; in 1811, 204; in 1821, 263; in 1831, 247; in 1841, 211; and in 1851, 206 souls. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway extends into this township for upwards of a mile. Lands were formerly held here by the families of Chauncellor and Brafferton, and afterwards by the Eures, Forsters, Killinghalls, Aslakbys, Wrenns, and Millbankes. The present proprietors are the gentlemen above mentioned. The manor of Ketton, in this township, was granted to the convent of Durham by Bishop Carileph, and it continued in their possession till the Reformation. It was afterwards possessed by the Darcys, Belasyses, and Millbankes, and is now possessed by Frederick Harding, Esq.

The Village of Brafferton is on the east side of the Skerne, about a mile south of Aycliffe, and four-and-a-half miles north of Darlington. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel; and a school-room was erected by subscription in 1823, and endowed with £12 a-year by the Diocesan Society.

Ketton House is situated on rising ground above the Skerne, east of the great road, and two miles south of Aycliffe.

Newton Ketton is a leasehold estate, held by Sir C. Hardinge, Bart. To the north-east of this estate there is a singularly-shaped field, in which four rivulets have their sources; and, during a great part of the year water may be observed running in four different directions.

PRESTON-LE-SKERNE township contains 2,610 acres, principally the property of the Earl of Eldon, and its annual value is £2,968 19s. 3d. The population in 1801 was 119; in 1811, 127; in 1821, 126; in 1831, 176; in 1841, 131; and in 1851, 139 souls. Lands were formerly held here under the Nevilles, by the De la Poles, Roger Thornton of Newcastle, and the Walworths. In 1384, these lands passed to the Claxton family, from whom they were transferred to the Conyers of Horden. They were sold by the latter family, in 1771, to Rowland Burdon, Esq., for £20,000, and a considerable portion of them were afterwards conveyed to Mr. Paul Watson, of Bradbury. Grindon, or Howhills, an estate in this township, is bounded on the north by Morden Carrs, in Sedgefield parish, and was held of the Earls of Westmoreland by the Morden family. It is now the property of the Earl of Eldon. The Clarence Railway extends over rather more than two miles in this township.

The Village of Preston-le-Skerne is situated six miles north-by-east of Darlington.

WOODHAM township forms the northern part of Aycliffe parish, and comprises an area of 3,705 acres. It contained in 1801, 166 inhabitants; in 1811, 165; in 1821, 183; in 1831, 204; in 1841, 207; and in 1851, 209. The value of the property rated in 1853 was £3,883 10s. 1d. Portions of the Clarence; and York, Newcastle, and Berwick railways are in this township. Woodham was held by Thomas de Ackley in 1291, and was subsequently the property of a family which bore the local name. It was afterwards possessed by the Ayscoughs and the Jennisons, coming ultimately to the Lambtons, by whom it was sold to the family of the present proprietor, the Earl of Eldon. John Lawson, Esq., Mr. George Hodgson, of Woodham Burn, and others, are also landowners.

The Village of Woodham is situated on the great North Road, about eight miles from Darlington; and consists of an inn, a farm house, a blacksmith's shop, and a few cottages. Tradition informs us that at some remote period, this place was burned down by the Scots, and the foundations of buildings may yet be discovered near the Skerne, which is here crossed by a bridge. Races were formerly held on Woodham Moor.

Nunstainton is a hamlet in this township, six miles north-east of the parish church. It is situated near the Skerne, which separates it from Bradbury and the Isle, in Sedgefield parish; and consists of two good farm houses with their offices, and a corn mill.

Ricknall Grange is situated on the Skerne, near Preston, six-and-a-half miles north of Darlington; it comprises three farms and a steam mill, which are leasehold under the see of Durham. Traveller's Rest, a hamlet, partly in this township and partly in that of Great Aycliffe, is situated on the North Road, six miles from Darlington.

CONISCLIFFE PARISH.

The parish of Coniscliffe, which comprises the townships of High or Church Coniscliffe, and Low Coniscliffe, is bounded on the north by Heighington, on the west by Gainford, on the south by the river Tees, and on the east by Darlington. Its area is 3,008 acres. This parish was given to the see of Durham, at a very early period, by Snaculf, son of Cykell; but some writers state that lands here were given by Styr, the son of Ulphus, to St. Cuthbert. It subsequently belonged to the Greystocks, who are said to have been lineal descendants of Ulphus, and we find that in the 21st Edward I., John de Greystock had, within this manor, the privileges of furca and infangthæof, goods and chattels of felons and fees of court, together with free warren in his lands there. A close, in Low Coniscliffe, called Gallow Hill, is doubtless the site of the manorial gallows. In 1485, the Earls of Westmoreland held a messuage and twenty acres in Low Coniscliffe, under the Greystocks, whose possessions were transferred by marriage to the Dacre family; and subsequently, in a similar manner, to the Howards, with whom they still remain; P. H. Howard, Esq., being the principal landowner.

HIGH CONISCLIFFE township contained in 1801, 220; in 1811, 234; in 1821, 245; in 1831, 234; in 1841, 244; and in 1851, 248 souls. The acreage is returned with the parish; the property was valued in 1853 at £1,679 14s. 11d.

The Village of Coniscliffe is situated on the north side of the Tees, four-and-a-half miles west by north of Darlington, and on the brink of a long ridge of limestone rocks, which have been wrought to the very walls of the out-buildings, so as to form perpendicular cliffs, which have a singular and very beautiful appearance when viewed from a distance. Large quantities of limestone is still obtained and burnt in the parish, but the quarries near the village have long been discontinued. The village contains two public-houses, a school, and a few shops.

The Church, which is dedicated to St. Edwin, consists of a western tower, a nave with a north aisle, and a chancel, chiefly in the early English style. The tower is embattled and surmounted with a lofty spire, which was used as a point of triangulation in the ordnance survey of 1851. The nave and chancel have the same external altitude, and the effect produced by the unbroken length of the church is very imposing. This venerable edifice underwent considerable repairs in 1844, at which time the triple lancet window at the east end was inserted. The chancel is fitted up with ancient stall seats and desks, whose massive carvings are very similar to those in St. Cuthbert's, Darlington. The church contains 500 sittings. There was formerly a chantry here dedicated to St. Mary, and worth £5 8s. per annum, besides five other chantries, viz., Bitry's, valued at £6 4s.; Our Ladie Masse, £4 9s. 2d.; St. Katherine's, St. Helen's, and the Twelve Apostles', £6 11s. The parish register commences in 1590. The living was originally a rectory, and was appropriated to St. Alban's Abbey. It is at present a vicarage, in the deanery of Darlington, and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham. It is valued in the Liber Regis at £7 18s. 1½d.; gross income, £219. The vicar has the tithes of one farm, and Henry Howard, Esq., has the remainder of those in the parish. Rev. Henry A. Baumgartner, vicar.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

The National School, a neat stone building, was erected in 1848.

Carlbury is a hamlet, situated five-and-a-half miles west-by-north of Darlington; and, though in the constabulary of High Coniscliffe, repairs its own roads; and its population, up to 1831, was returned with Low Coniscliffe. The number of inhabitants in 1841 was 44; and in 1851, 57 souls. This place was for a long period the property of the Earls of Westmoreland, but after the suppression of the northern rebellion, it was granted by Queen Elizabeth to Ralph Tailbois, Esq., of Thornton Hall, by whom it was sold to Thomas Jennison, in whose family it remained till 1616. It afterwards became the property of various families, and is now held by Lord Harry Vane.

Ulnaby, another hamlet in this township, was granted with Carlbury to Ralph Tailbois; and, after successive sales, was reunited by the Boweses to Thornton Hall. It is now the property of the Rev. Robert Croft.

LOW CONISCLIFFE is a township, in this parish; the number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 131; in 1811, 142; in 1821, 146; in 1831, 140; in 1841, 134; and in 1851, 146 souls. Up to 1831, the population of Carlbury was returned with this township, but since that period it has been included with that of High Coniscliffe. Low Coniscliffe, and the impropriation, were valued for the county-rate in 1853, at £1,133 8s. The township pays all parochial rates to High Coniscliffe, except highway-rates; and is the property of P. H. Howard, Esq., and others.

The Village of Low Coniscliffe is situated on the north bank of the river Tees, three miles west of Darlington; and contains a public-house and six farms. It was anciently the site of the manor house of Coniscliffe.

Thornton Hall is a quaint old mansion, occupying a low situation, surrounded with rich grounds, on the road between Darlington and Staindrop. It was anciently purchased by the Thorntons, by whom it was transferred by marriage to the Tailbois family, and subsequently became the property of the Salvins and Boweses. The Rev. Robert Croft is the present possessor. Thornton and Ulnaby have been constituted distinct manors by a recent act of parliament. The hall is at present used as a farm house.

DARLINGTON PARISH.

Darlington parish contains the townships of Archdeacon Newton, Blackwell, Cockerton, and Darlington, whose united area is 7,856 statute acres. It is irregular in shape, and is bounded on the north by the parish of Haughton-le-Skerne, on the north-west by Heighington, on the west by the Tees and the parish of Coniscliffe, on the south and south-east by Hurworth, and on the east by Haughton-le-Skerne. The recently formed chapelry of St. John includes the district east of the Skerne.

ARCHDEACON NEWTON township, the property of the Right Hon. Lord Redesdale and others, comprises an area of 1,040 acres, and its annual value is £901. The population in 1801 was 72; in 1811, 71; in 1821, 64; in 1831, 50; in 1841, 68; and in 1851, 62 souls. This township was formerly the property of the Archdeacon of Durham, under whom it was held by lease by the Blackistons, and other families.

The Hamlet of Archdeacon Newton is situated about three miles north-west of Darlington.

Directory.—Robert Smith, farm steward for Lord Redesdale; and the farmers are A. Greenwell, F. Ridley, and B. Weighell.

BLACKWELL township contains 1,499 statute acres, and the property was valued for the county-rate, in 1853, at £3,042 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 277; in 1811, 291; in 1821, 268; in 1831, 271; in 1841, 299; and in 1851, 272. When Boldon Book was compiled, lands were held here by villains, who rendered similar rents and services as those of Darlington. A family, bearing the local name, subsequently held a portion; and, at the time of Bishop Hatfield's survey, John Middleton was owner of several messuages and lands here. His descendants were proprietors here for a considerable period; as were also the Eures of Witton, and the Boweses of Streatlam. Sir John Bernard Burke, Ulster King of Arms, in his "Visitation of the Seats and Arms of the Noblemen and Gentlemen of Great Britain," informs us that "The manor of Blackwell was purchased by the Nevilles from a family of Middleton, who represented the Blackwells of Blackwell. It fell out of their hands at the general confiscation, after the disastrous rising of the north. A portion had been sold before that time to the Parkinsons, one of whom 'saved the earl in the rebellion time.' Other part was granted to the Garnetts, whose kindred of the same name were lords of Egglecliffe; but eventually all was consolidated in Parkinson. The manor was next purchased by the Ewbanks of Staindrop, who, like other cavaliers, sinned for the crown against their acres. The subsequent title is of little interest until John Allan, Esq., who purchased of George Allan, Esq., M.P., became possessor. The manor had by this time taken up all its dependant freeholds, no sub-owners were left to do suit and service, the manorial customs tacitly expired, and in 'these piping times of peace' the military service is excused to its lords. Not so, however, the ancient rent of 24s. 10d. to the prince-bishops, which is still duly and truly exacted by my lord of Durham's officers." This manor is the only freehold manor in Darlington parish.

The Allans, the present possessors of this township, are connected with the ancient family of Allan of Buckenhall and Brockhouse, in Staffordshire, whose ancestor, Henry Allan, was lord of the manor of Buckenhall, in the thirteenth century. George Allan, the second son of William Allan, Esq., of Brockhouse, settled in the county palatine of Durham, where "his grandsons at once," observes Longstaffe, "through a vast command of capital for that day, struck deep root on the banks of the Tees and the Wear, and took the front rank amongst the squirearchy of the palatinate." One of these grandsons, Thomas Allan, Esq., who was born in 1651, soon became one of the largest coal owners on the Wear, and, purchasing estates, settled at Allan's Flatts, near Chester-le-Street. The failure of the Allan's Flatt branch in coheirresses, merged in the family of Shafto Adair. Another grandson, George Allan, Esq., of Blackwell Grange, born in 1663, bought, in 1710, several estates, which, in 1814, let for £5,000 per annum. He erected Blackwell Grange in 1710. His grandchildren ending in coheirresses and dying unmarried, the family honours and estates devolved upon James Allan, Esq., of Blackwell Grange, who was born in 1712, and died possessed of the manors or lordships of Nether Worsall, Appleton-upon-Wiske, Barton Grange, Wandesford; and of estates at Eryholme, Yarin, Staifiton, and Maltby, and of a moiety of the manor or lordship of Dalton-upon-Tees, in the north riding of Yorkshire; and of estates at Blackwell Grange, Blackwell, Darlington, Polam Hill Farm, Hill Close House, &c., in the county of Durham. The entailed portion of the estates were inherited by his eldest son, George Allan, Esq., F.S.A., of Blackwell Grange; and the other portion passed to the younger son, Robert Allan, Esq., of Sunnyside, Bishopwearmouth. George was succeeded in his possessions by his son, George Allan, Esq., M.A., F.S.A., D.L., and M.P. for the county of Durham, who dying childless in 1828, the estates passed to his cousin, William Allan, Esq., M.A., J.P. This gentleman purchased of his cousin, George Allan, Esq., M.P., Blackwell Hall and the adjoining estate, including the ancient freehold manor of Blackwell, which formerly belonged to his ancestor, Ralph Neville, first Earl of Westmorland, and dying unmarried in 1844, having bequeathed the same in fee, together with his old patrimonial manors or lordships of Barton Grange, Wandesford, and his estate at Nessfield, to his nephew, Robert Henry Allan, Esq., F.S.A., J.P., D.L., high sheriff of the county in 1851.

The Village of Blackwell is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Tees, 1½ mile south-by-west from Darlington, and is surrounded by rich meadows, green pastures, and thriving plantations. It comprises two inns, and a number of dwelling houses. On the formation of a new line of road from Darlington to Barton-Lane-End to communicate with the road to Richmond, a stone bridge was erected across the Tees at Blackwell Ford, from the designs of Mr. Green, of Newcastle. It consists of three elliptical arches; the centre one being seventy-eight feet span, and the two side arches each sixty-three feet. A toll is levied on both horse and foot passengers.

Blackwell Hall, the seat of Robert Henry Allan, Esq., is part of the ancient manor, which is, according to Burke, "a rich territory full of entrancing nooks and shady dells, from which bright glances of the silvery Tees, with all its wooded banks and fertile flats, ever and anon present themselves. The seat-house, 'bosomed high in tufted trees,' rises over the river, and commands its green levels and deep meadows, which form an amphitheatre of three or four miles hemmed in by rising wooded grounds. Immediately opposite the mansion is a remain of Castle Hill, once a gallant mound, but now sorely reduced in its fair form in consequence of the irruption of the 'thundering Tees,' which here makes a singularly sudden and rapid sweep. In the memory of old men yet living, its ample brow was decked with the cotter's dwelling and his sunny garden, both long fallen into the dark remorseless stream below. The formation of a strong embankment, together with a formidable pier of Barton stone, has, after repeated failures of other more rustic engineering appliances, effectually secured this venerable remain from further denudation. The estate is collectively styled 'Baydales;' Baydale being a well-known archaism for battle. Castle Hill is connected in the earliest records with Bathby, Battela, Battle Law, or Battle Hill, and Battlefield; but all records of the origin of these names have disappeared. Blackwell Hall is rich in pictures and prints. Robson's chef d'œuvre, in water colours, the celebrated view of Durham Cathedral, painted for Bishop Van Mildert, and purchased by the present possessor on his lordship's death, has found its way from Auckland Castle to the stately dining room (which has dined 200 persons at one time) built by the late John Allan, Esq., J.P. The varied grounds contain fine specimens of the cypress, cedar of Lebanon, and the singular tulip tree. Here a portion of the large collection of documents, title deeds, correspondences, and MSS., formed by James Allan, Esq., and his son the antiquary, are deposited."

"Blackwell Grange," says the writer above-quoted, "is a more stately and older residence of the Allans than Blackwell Hall; but it is barren in early historical associations. It possesses, however, a magnificent champaign prospect, a noble avenue of ancient limes, filled with rooks, long laurelled walks, and choice adornments of every kind. Then it has a very extensive and grand suite of rooms, extending through the entire southern wing. Numerous old portraits of the Allans, all bearing a striking resemblance to each other, look grimly down, and impart a deep feeling as to the long continued residence and wealth of the owners. The haunted state chamber completes the picture of ancestral grandeur. There, where the family lie in the solemn pomp of death, some deeply undercut and fine carvings dance over every unoccupied spot on the bedstead, mantle-piece, and panelling. Over all the walls of the other rooms and stairs, pictures by the first masters have been drawn together by the present owner."

COCKERTON township comprises an area of 1,748 acres, and its annual value is £3,768 2s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 330; in 1811, 409; in 1821, 469; in 1831, 522; in 1841, 482; and in 1851, 537 souls. This township was one of the places given by Styr to St. Cuthbert; and in Boldon Book we learn that there were here five farmers and six cottagers; the villains holding forty-seven ox-gangs. During the episcopacy of Bishop Bury,

Thomas de Morton held lands here, by homage, fealty, and a certain rent to the bishop's exchequer. John de Morton, Geoffrey Kellaw, John Dow, and other cottagers, are named in Hatfield's survey, in which John Cornforth and eighteen other bond tenants occur, with the usual services and payments. The Nevilles, the Eures, the Parkinsons, the Shepherds, the Dykes, and others, subsequently held lands here. The property is at present much divided. The principal proprietors are Arthur Meggitt, Esq., William S. Stowell, Esq., Thomas P. Pick, Esq., and others.

The Village of Cockerton is situated on a little stream, called the Cockerbeck, about a mile north-west of Darlington. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, built in 1823; and another has since been erected by the Wesleyan Association. A school-room was built by subscription in 1825, and endowed with £5 per annum by the trustees of Lord Crewe's Charities. The village contains a post office, three public houses, and a few shops. Mr. W. S. Stowell, of Faverdale House, in this township, obtained four prizes at the cattle show held in Darlington, in December 1854. The first prizes were for the best short-horned bullocks, and the two second for two heifers.

Carmel House Convent, formerly Cockerton Field House, situated south of the village, is occupied by a community of Carmelite or Teresian nuns. The estate was formerly possessed by the Hodgsons and Wetheralls; but has latterly become the property of R. W. Johnson, Esq., of Darlington. On the suppression of the monastic establishments, in this county, during the reign of Henry VIII., the Carmelite nuns took refuge at Antwerp; and, in 1618, a number of them proceeded to Lierre, in Belgium, where the community remained till the outbreak of the French Revolution. On the 23rd June, 1795, they were driven from their convent by the revolutionists, and, like many others, sought an asylum in their native country. They arrived in London on the 7th July, and, under the patronage of Sir John Lawson, of Brough, they settled at St. Helen's Auckland, in this county. In 1804, they removed to Cocken Hall, where they remained till 1830, when, in consequence of the opening out of a colliery in their neighbourhood, and other causes, they removed to Field House, near Cockerton. The community consists of about twenty members. The chapel is an elegant structure, in the early English style, and its interior is beautifully decorated. The eastern window is of stained glass, by Wailes, of Newcastle; the ceiling is richly ornamented with symbolic devices; and the altars, screens, &c., are simple, chaste, and highly finished. The establishment possesses extensive gardens, pleasure grounds, and an estate of about forty acres of land. Lady prioress—Mrs. Coulson.

TOWNSHIP AND TOWN OF DARLINGTON.

The township of Darlington comprises an area of 3,569 acres; its annual value is £36,970 17s. 6d. Its population in 1801, was 4,670; in 1811, 5,059; in 1821, 5,730, in 1831, 8,574; in 1841, 11,035; and in 1851, 11,582 souls. There were at the latter period, 1,976 inhabited houses, 128 uninhabited, and 10 in process of erection. The Boldon Book is the first record in which Darlington is particularly noticed, and from this source we are informed that there were forty oxgangs of land there, in the hands of villain-tenants, for each of which the lord received 5s.; their service consisted in mowing the bishop's meadows, winning and leading the hay, enclosing the limits of the court, working at the mill, and bringing one load of wood for every oxgang, and carrying the bishop's baggage on his circuits, was also included in their services, together with carrying yearly three loads of wine, herring, and salt to the episcopal palace. There were likewise twelve tenants here who each held an oxgang of land, for which they paid the same rent as the villains, but did not render any services, except on the bishop's embassies. Besides the base-tenures, there were many tenants in capite, and by Bishop Hatfield's survey, we find that the free tenants were thirty-nine in number, and held sixty-seven pieces of land. The township is sub-divided into the constaberies of Darlington, Borough, Bondgate, Priestgate or Prebend Row, and Oxenhall or Oxen-le-Field. The principal landowners are the Duke of Cleveland; John B. Pease, Esq.; Captain Robertson; Robert H. Allan, Esq.; Christopher Watkin, Esq.; Alfred. Backhouse, Esq.; William Backhouse, Esq.; Edward Pease, Esq.; W. L. Wharton, Esq.; William R. Bayley, Esq.; John Harris, Esq.; and Lady Byrom.

DARLINGTON is a neat and thriving market-town on the Great North-road, 18 miles south of Durham, 11 west-south-west of Stockton, 16 east-south-east of Barnard Castle, 12 north-west of Richmond, and 237 north-north-west of London. It is situated "near the junction of the upper new red sandstone, with the magnesian limestone. The former crops out in the bed of the Tees at Croft, three miles south of the town; at Middleton, five miles to the east; at Coniscliffe, four miles to the west; and at Aycliffe, five miles to the north. The level stratifications of superficial accumulations of sand, gravel, and clay, the latter in some places passing into marl, seem to be formed of the debris of the magnesian limestone; the clays, which belong to the red marl series, containing no dull and decomposing matter of magnesian limestone. The Vegetable soil, within a circuit of two miles, is fully up to an average; but beyond that distance, and particularly in the north-east and north-west directions, it is considerably under an average. The climate of Darlington is mild and somewhat relaxing; but it is favourable to longevity, for the depressing influence mainly depends upon removable causes. There is no reason why Darlington, if under judicious management, should not rank amongst the most salubrious towns in England." There are fifty-four streets in the town, with a total length of four-and-a-half miles; and there are 106 yards or courts. The population of Darlington in 1851, was 11,228, of whom 5,174 were males, and 6,054 females. There were at the same period, 1,921 inhabited houses, 128 uninhabited, and ten in process of erection. Half a century ago, this town was little better than a large village—very little better than Stokesley. At that time there were two manufactories; but now there are several. The iron-trade is about to be established in Darlington; and when that has become consolidated, no limits can be assigned to the prosperity of the town. It is the centre of many railways; there is a railway to the north, a railway to the south, a railway to the east, a railway to the west; and another is about to be made to the south-west to Barnard Castle. From these circumstances we may augur favourably as to the future prosperity of Darlington.

ANNALS OF THE TOWN.—Darlington, or, as it is sometimes written, Derlington, lays claim to considerable antiquity. Soon after the episcopal seat was settled at Durham, we are informed that Styr, son of Ulphus, gave this place, with its appendages, to St. Cuthbert, a donation made with such solemnity, that the king and Archbishop Wulstan were present when Aldune, the first bishop of Durham, received the gift; and it is from this grant that the bishop's manor here appears to have arisen. In 1082, Bishop William de Carleph removed the secular clergy from the church at Durham; and a part of them were provided with an asylum at Darlington. About the year 1164, Bishop Pudsey built a manor-house, or hall, on the banks of the Skerne at Darlington. In 1197, the temporalities of the see, during a vacancy, being in the king's hands, the borough of Darlington paid £8, and the bondmen 69s. 8d.

In 1291, Edward I. was at Darlington, and issued from thence his summons to fifty-seven of the chief military tenants of the north. They were to assemble with their retainers, at Norham Castle, and attend him in Scotland, during the accustomed period of military service; and in 1302, he here dated an address to the pope, appointing ambassadors and proctors to treat with him. When the Scots had penetrated into Stanhope Park, in 1327, "Archibald Douglas toke great prayes in the Bishopricke of Duresme, and encountered with a band of English men at Darlington, and killed many of them." In 1336 and 1338, Edward III. dated letters patent from Darlington.

In 1502, Margaret, eldest daughter of King Henry VII., then affianced to James IV., king of Scotland, was conveyed in great splendour through the counties of Durham and Northumberland. Being come into the neighbourhood of Darlington, she was met by Sir William Boummer, sheriff of the lordship of Durham, Sir William Ewers, and "many other folks of honor of that countre, in fayr ordre, well-appointed of liverays and herst, to the number of six-score horsys. By the said company was sche conveyde to Darnton. And at the gatt of the church of the said place, war revested the vicayr and folkes of the church, wer doing as sche had done on the dayes beefore she was led to the manayr of the said byschop of Durham for that nyght. The XXth day of the said mouneth the qwene departed from Darnton in fayr aray, and with the precedente company went to the town of Durham."

On the 15th June, 1567, Queen Elizabeth, by charter, founded a grammar-school at Darlington, through the solicitations of Henry, Earl of Darlington, and Bishop Pilkington, whose influence the inhabitants had sought for that purpose.

The Rev. George Swallowell was executed at Darlington, on July 28th, 1594. He was born at the same place, in 1564, and was educated for the church. While curate or reader at Houghton-le-Spring, he went one day to visit a gentleman who was imprisoned at Durham for recusancy, when a dispute took place, which ended in Mr. Swallowell embracing the Roman Catholic faith. He was shortly afterwards apprehended and committed to Durham gaol, and after a year's imprisonment, received judgment, which was to be hanged, drawn, and quartered at his native town.

In 1597, the plague made sad ravages in Darlington; the number of interments in August being 89, and in September 187. It was again prevalent in 1605, and in 1644 and the following year the town and neighbourhood experienced a similar visitation, 135 being carried away within four months.

In 1640, when the king's troops retreated before the covenanters, after the defeat at Stella Haugh, and abandoned Newcastle and Durham, the Earl of Stratford issued an order from Darlington, dated April 30th, to cause "all such quantities of butter, bread, cheese, and milk, as could be possibly furnished, to be brought into Darlington by four o'clock the next day for victualing his majesty's army; to break or bury all the upper millstones, and to remove the goods, and drive the cattle before the approach of the Scots."

During the parliamentary wars in 1644, the cavalry of General Leslie's army came up with the rear of that of the Marquis of Newcastle, at Darlington, and made some prisoners. We find that the town was afterwards occupied by Cromwell's soldiers; and in 1650, the royal arms in the church were defaced. In May 1656, "the commissioners for the county of Durham for securing the peace of the Commonwealth," sat at Darlington, adjudicating on the property of the delinquents.

When the army under the Duke of Cumberland was advancing from the south in 1745, the members of the Society of Friends in Darlington, on learning that the soldiers were ill clothed and unprovided with necessary comforts, manufactured a great number of flannel waistcoats for them, which were ready on their arrival. In October of the same year, all the bakers were ordered to get bread ready for the troops. The duke, who travelled north by way of Pierce-Bridge, returned, after the battle of Culloden, through Darlington, in July 1746.

Mr. Wilkes having been liberated from prison in April 1770, there were great rejoicings in Darlington, on the 18th of the same month. The bells were rung all day, forty-five pieces of cannon were fired off, and in the evening there were bonfires and illuminations. On the 30th of August, 1798, the Darlington Volunteers were presented with new colours. A most destructive fire occurred on the 2nd of February, 1817, by which the extensive woollen manufactory belonging to Messrs. Edward and Joseph Pease, on the site of the Old Bishop's Mill, and other property, valued at £30,000, were destroyed, and 500 people thrown out of employment.

On August 9th, 1822, Robert Peat, of Ravensworth, near Richmond, aged fifty years, was executed in front of the County Courts at Durham, pursuant to his sentence, for poisoning, by putting a quantity of laudanum into the broth of a relation named Robert Peat, at Darlington, from whom he had stolen his will.

On the 29th July, 1834, Mr. Green, aeronaut, according to a promise he had made to the inhabitants of Darlington, in consequence of a failure in an attempt to ascend a few days before, ascended from the Market-place, with two females, in the car of his balloon, and descended at Pillmoor House, near Croft, about four miles from Darlington.

A fire broke out on the 12th August, 1837, in the premises belonging to Messrs. Middleton & Son, tanners and curriers. Although the alarm was soon given, and the fire-engines brought to play upon it, the fire spread rapidly. Two engines were sent for from Stockton; but before they arrived, the fire was, in a great measure, extinguished, though not until damage to the amount of several thousand pounds had been sustained.

On the 28th June, 1841, an imposing cavalcade of electors accompanied Mr. Bowes, who had been elected M.P. on the 12th, on his entry into Darlington.

The following was the order of the procession :—Two gentlemen on horseback. The band playing " See the Conquering Hero Comes." The candidate and his friends—about three-hundred horse-men, four abreast. A procession of carriages filled with electors, succeeded by two hundred voters on horseback, each decorated with blue and white rosettes, &c., the whole graced with a large collection of banners, with a number of mottoes. At two o'clock, Joseph Pease, Esq., the late member, appeared on the platform in front of the Sun Inn, and introduced Mr. Bowes, and the scene which ensued baffles all description. Stationed below the platform was a crowd of the opposition party who commenced hooting, and roaring in such a manner as to prevent any person from being heard. After the speaking, the streets were kept in a disorderly state by the mob; and on the police interfering, they were attacked, and compelled to fly in all directions. Two or three took refuge in the Town Hall, on which an attack was commenced and the windows smashed unremittingly, until past eleven o'clock, when their destruction being complete, a rush was made at the entrance door, which, after some delay, was broken in, and had it not been for some gentlemen in the news-room at the south end of the building, who disguised the police, and got them out by a private door, when the mob rushed in at the north end, they would doubtless have been massacred without mercy. Foiled in their attack upon the police, the mob tore up the bar-railings, broke the forms and chairs, and committed every kind of outrage. They then formed in parties, and on their way home, broke the windows of two private houses, before they dispersed. Another riot took place on the 5th of the following November, in consequence of a dangerous bonfire, being kindled in the Market-place, and a large quantity of fireworks being set off, in celebration of the gunpowder plot. The police were driven off by the mob, and the windows of the Town Hall broken.

During a tremendous thunder-storm, which occurred on the 10th of August, 1842, the electric fluid descended into the workshops of Messrs. Coates and Farmer, printers, and set fire to them, but being immediately discovered, the fire was soon extinguished. It also descended the chimney of the adjoining house, and forced the fire-grate out of its place.

Diarrhoea was very prevalent in Darlington, during the summer of 1846, and occasioned the revival of an old local superstition, that bread made on a Good-Friday is an infallible remedy for many of the complaints " which flesh is heir to." The older the bread is the better; and a most extraordinary cure is said to have been effected by some Good-Friday bread three or four years old.

The late Sir Robert Peel passed through Darlington on the 1st September, 1847, on his way to Wynyard Park, on the occasion of the marriage of the Earl of Portarlington, with Lady Alexandrina Vane. He was received at the Central Hall by upwards of 2,000 persons, and an address from the gentry, merchants, and inhabitants of the town was presented to him. Two years afterwards her majesty, the queen, passed through the old town, on her journey from Scotland to the Isle of Wight, on which occasion she was presented, by the borough bailiff, with a loyal address from the nobility, magistrates, clergy, gentry, and other inhabitants of Darlington. On 10th August, 1850, her majesty was again received at the railway station by a large assemblage of the local magistracy, and a large concourse of the inhabitants.

ST. CUTHBERT'S COLLEGIATE CHURCH, which, next to Durham Cathedral, is the most beautiful church in the county, is supposed to have been erected by Bishop Pudsey; but Billings observes, " this must be a mistake, because the whole building is of the early English style, which was not completely developed before the year 1280. Bishop Pudsey founded the establishment, and, it is said, provided funds for its completion; hence the erection of the building has been ascribed to him." The church is a cruciform structure, with a tower and spire rising from the intersection of the nave and transepts. The architecture generally is early English, merging into a more ornamental style. The windows of the nave are square-headed, and of the decorated period, bearing evidence of a date posterior to the year 1400; and the tower and spire belong to the latter end of the fourteen century. The entire body of the church, the clerestories, and the tower, with the exception of the windows in the north and south aisles, are ornamented with regular series of blank and open windows, of the earliest date of pointed architecture. The principal entrance is from the west, which portion of the church is separated from the main body of the edifice by a modern partition, and forms it into a kind of ante-chapel. Here is situated the font, covered with a lofty canopy of debased Gothic. The nave has regular side aisles, and the transepts are of equal dimensions, that to the south being more richly decorated than any other part of the church. The central tower is supported by four obtuse arches, rising from clustered piers, and surmounted by four other arches, opening into the roofs, which must have originally formed a sort of lantern, but are now hidden from below by the ceiling. The rood loft is a massive stone structure filling up the entire width of the great chancel arch, with a ribbed archway in its centre, leading from the nave to the chancel. This is now surmounted by an organ, which was erected by subscription about the year 1822. The east end of the chancel is modern, "being," says Cade, "out of its perpendicular, by taking away the leaded conic roof (after the alienation of the college, temp. Edward VI.), was repaired in the present humble manner by Lord Viscount Vane, the patron, in the year 1748; until that time, the stalls in the quire and architecture of the east end had a venerable appearance, being adorned with six large windows, and excellent Gothic work in stone and wainscot." Cardinal Langley's arms are on the stalls of the chancel, which are decorated with some fine carvings of foliage, angels, and grotesque heads. On the north side of the altar is a recess under a pointed arch, surmounted by an embattled canopy, with foliage in the spandrels. The church will accommodate about 1,200 persons. The tower contains six musical bells, on which the clock chimes a tune every fourth hour. An effigy of a female, in the costume of the twelfth century, is now placed upright near the western door; and a stone-coffin with its lid lies near the entrance to the choir. There are several monuments in the interior, amongst which those of the Allan family are conspicuous. The church was repaired in 1853, when the pulpit, reading-desk, and organ-gallery were rehung with drapery; the chancel-stalls and altar-rails repaired and varnished; and the space around the altar laid with encaustic tiles. According to Turgot, prior of Durham, and other ancient writers, it appears that when Bishop Carleph removed the seculars from the cathedral church of Durham, Darlington was one of the places appointed for their reception; but we are not told who first erected a church here, or where the original edifice stood. The foundation charter is lost; but the substance of its provisions is recapitulated in the subsequent ordinances of Bishop Neville. The college consisted of a vicar and four prebendaries, Darlington, Blackwell, Newton, and Cockerton. In 1292, the whole revenues are stated to have been £73 6s. 8d., and in 1318 they are set down at £37 4s. In 1439, the bishop of the diocese, with the consent of the prior and convent of Durham, ordained that the name of vicar should cease, and be changed to that of dean; for the support of which dignity an additional prebend was created, to be held conjointly with the deanery. In the year 1535, the revenue of the deanery of Darlington was stated at £36 18s. 4d.; the prebend of Cockerton, £5; the prebend of Blackwell, £5; the prebend of Newton, £5 0s. 3d.; and the prebend of Rowe, £1 13s. 4d. The college was dissolved in 1550, and only a small stipend of £16 per annum was reserved to the vicar, and £8 to the curate, subject to deductions, the clear yearly proceeds only amounting to £22 6s. 8d. Yearly pensions amounting to £19 6s. 8d., were paid to the prebendaries, &c., out of the crown revenues from the receipt of the collegiate lands. The living is at present a perpetual curacy not certified nor in charge, in the patronage of the Duke of Cleveland. The endowment consists of a reserved pension of £22 6s. 8d.; an augmentation of £10 per annum left by Lord Crewe, and a small farm consisting of thirty-six acres, situated partly in the parish of Darlington and partly in Houghton-le-Skerne. The gross income, in 1835, was stated at £284. The parish register commences in 1590. Rev. James Howell, M.A., incumbent; Rev. H. B. Hall, M.A., curate.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, is a neat structure in the early English style, situated on the road from Darlington to Cockerton and Staindrop, about half a mile west-north-west from the Market-place. The foundation stone was laid by the Bishop of Durham on the 4th October, 1836; and an ecclesiastical district to which this church is attached, was formerly by an order in council, dated April 3rd, 1843. This district consists of the townships of Archdeacon Newton and Cockerton, and part of the township of Darlington. The church consists of a nave and aisles, and a square tower on the north. The interior is lighted by three triple lights on the north and south, and a large triple window with a small light on each side on the east. It will accommodate upwards of 1,000 persons, and contains 600 free sittings. A new organ was erected in 1843, and a clock was placed in the tower in 1850. The living, which is stated to be worth £180 per annum, is in the patronage of the Archdeacon of Durham. Rev. Thomas W. Minton, M.A., incumbent; Rev. M. Duggan, B.A. curate.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, situated on the eastern bank of the Skerne, in the vicinity of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway station, is an elegant edifice, in the architecture of the later period of early English. The foundation stone was laid by George Hudson, Esq., M.P., at that time lord mayor of York, on the 10th September, 1847; and it was consecrated by the Bishop of Durham on the 16th July, 1853. An ecclesiastical district was formed, under Sir Robert Peel's Act, and attached to this church by an order in council, dated July 6th, 1845. The district includes "all that part of the township of Darlington, in the county and diocese of Durham, and also that part of the township of Blackwell, in the same parish, situated on the eastern side of the river Skerne." The population of this district, in 1851, was 8,458 souls. Previous to the erection of the church, the railway company set apart one of their warehouses for the celebration of divine service. The church was erected from designs furnished by John Middleton, Esq., and consists of nave and chancel, with a lofty western tower, containing a peal of six bells, and which is intended to be surmounted by a spire 160 feet high. The entrance is by a projecting porch on the south. The tower opens into the nave by a lofty arch, beneath which is a stone screen for the support of an organ. There are open stalls throughout the church, with richly-carved poppy heads, and accommodation is furnished for 600 persons. The font is a gift from Archdeacon Thorp. The chancel is laid with a tassellated pavement of a very rich running and circled pattern, in blue, red, and yellow. This church possesses some fine stained glass windows, filled with representations of the evangelists, the apostles, Sts. Peter and Paul, monograms, &c. Under the eastern window is a reredos of seven trefoiled arches. The living is in the patronage of the queen and the bishop of Durham, who present alternately. The income is about £170 per annum. Rev. George Brown, incumbent; Rev. Richard Garland, curate.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH, situated in Paradise Lane, is in the Gothic style; and was erected, in 1827, from designs by Ignatius Bonomi, Esq. The interior, which possesses a panelled oak ceiling, is in harmony with the general style of the building. The Catholics of this neighbourhood were formerly dependent for the consolations of their religion upon the occasional visits of a priest from Stockton; but on the sale of the Witham property, at Cliffe, in Yorkshire, the ancient mission there, which had remained in the possession of its Catholic proprietors from the period of the reformation, was given up; and its pastor, the Rev. William Hogarth, D.D., now bishop of the Catholic diocese of Hexham, was transferred to Darlington; and by his exertions the present church was erected. The resident clergymen are the Right Rev. William Hogarth, D.D., bishop of Hexham; and the Rev. Joseph Gibson, chaplain.

THE BAPTIST CHAPEL, Upper Archer Street, is a good brick building, erected by subscription in 1847, at a cost of £800, and will accommodate about 450 persons. It contains an excellent organ, and the choral arrangements are very satisfactory. Rev. Josiah Green, minister.

BETHEL CHAPEL, situated in Union Street, was erected in 1812, and enlarged in 1828; it will seat about 850 persons. It belongs to the Independent body, and is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Matthew Galt.

THE FRIENDS' MEETING HOUSE is a handsome and convenient structure, in Skinnergate, and will accommodate nearly 1,000 persons. The society of Friends have long formed a numerous and influential body in the town of Darlington and its neighbourhood.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL, in Queen Street, is a neat building, erected in 1821-2, and possesses about 600 sittings. Rev. Peter Clarke, minister.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL, Bondgate, is a handsome brick building, in the Italian style, erected in 1812, from designs by Mr. Jenkins, of London, at a cost of £4,000. A large gallery extends around it, and a semicircular apse at the west end contains communion arrangements, and an organ gallery above. This chapel will accommodate upwards of 1,400 people.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION CHAPEL, situated in Paradise Row, was erected in 1840, at a cost of £2,500, and will seat upwards of 700 persons. There are convenient vestries and spacious and commodious school-rooms attached.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—Queen Elizabeth, by letters patent, dated the 15th June, 1563, granted, upon the petition of Henry Earl of Westmorland, and James Pilkington, bishop of Durham, that from henceforth there should be a grammar school in Darlington, to be called "The Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth," for the education, training, and instruction of boys and youths in grammar, to consist of one master and one usher; the four churchwardens of the town, for the time being, to be governors. The school was endowed with lands, &c.; and the governors were licensed to obtain any manors, messuages, lands, tenements, rectorial tithes, or other hereditaments in England, so as they should not exceed the clear yearly value of £10. In 1748, statutes were made for the government of the school. They relate to the qualifications of the upper and under masters, who are to be licensed by the bishop—a preference to be given to graduates of the universities,—to the discipline of the school, and the remuneration of the masters; £18 per annum being the salary of the under master, who might also receive such voluntary gratuities as the parents chose, whilst the remainder of the income of the school, after deducting the costs of repairs, &c., was to belong to the head master. The revenue of the school, at present, is about £220 per annum. The salary of the usher has been increased to £70; and the upper master receives the clear residue. The school formerly stood at the east end of the church; but, in 1813, it was pulled down, and the site added to the churchyard; and another school was built, at the expense of the parish, at a short distance from the old site. An upper storey was added in 1846. The terms for general tuition are as follows, viz.:—Extra-parishioners, £1 per quarter; parishioners, 7s. 6d. per quarter; ink, fuel, &c. 6d. per quarter extra. French, £1 1s. per annum extra. Application, in writing (to the head master), is required at the entrance of a pupil; and a quarter's notice or a quarter's pay previously to the removal of one. Head master—Rev. John Marshall, B.A.; second master—Rev. John Kenyon, B.A.; French and writing master—Mons. D'Albert.

ST. CUTHBERT'S PARISH SCHOOL, Lead Yard, was commenced in the year 1812, but it was not until 1824 that a suitable school-room was erected. The average attendance is 120 boys, and 70 girls. The master receives a fixed salary of £50 per annum from the funds of the school, besides a small payment from each of the pupils. John A. Storey, teacher.

THE TRINITY NATIONAL SCHOOLS are situated in Commercial Street and Union Street; the latter school-room was erected by subscription and a grant from government in 1850, at a cost of £700. The schools are under government inspection, and are supported by voluntary contributions, the payments made by the children, and the government grant. Horace Armstrong, Sarah Brown, and Matilda Gibbs, teachers.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL, Skinnergate, was erected by subscription in 1819; and is supported chiefly by dissenters, for the education of children of every religious denomination. The school is under government inspection; and has an average attendance of 220 children. G. W. Bantlett, teacher.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL, Bridge Street, was established in 1839, and, with the exception of the grant from the Committee of Privy Council on Education, is supported entirely by the liberality of Mrs. Anna Pease. Catherine Steele, teacher.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL, Kendrew Street, is attended by upwards of seventy children, and supported by the Society of Friends. Mary Spreadbury, teacher.

ST. CUTHBERT'S (CATHOLIC) SCHOOL, situated in Paradise Lane, was erected a few years ago, and will accommodate about 120 scholars. The school is under government inspection, and has an average attendance of eighty children. Thomas McKenzie, teacher.

THE WESLEYAN SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, or FEMALE SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY, is held in the upper apartment of the British School, Skinnergate. It was established in July, 1826, and is supported by the Wesleyan Methodist Sabbath and Week-day School Society. It is managed by a committee of twelve ladies and two secretaries, who provide the institution with work, fix its prices, and fill up vacancies in the school, which is open for the reception of 100 children of the poor, of all denominations, at six years old and upwards. They are instructed in reading, writing, arithmetic, sewing, knitting, marking, &c., and pay a penny a week each. Mary Hollidge, teacher.

Besides the establishments just enumerated, Darlington contains several boarding, and other schools; and there are Sunday schools in connection with the various places of worship.

BRIDGES.—The principal bridge across the Skerne is near the east end of the parish church. It is a plain structure, with a stone parapet, and was erected in 1768, at an expense of £1,000. It was widened and repaired in 1832, but it is still much too narrow for the increased traffic, and the footpaths are encroached upon by erections on the parapets. At the lower end of Workhouse Lane, a cast-iron bridge was erected in 1833, and has proved a great convenience to the inhabitants of the locality. A stone bridge crosses the Cockerbeck in Northgate, and foot-bridges over both branches of the Skerne connect Priestgate with Clay Row.

THE CENTRAL BUILDING, Market Place, is a large brick edifice, erected in 1846, by a number of shareholders, at a cost of about £7,000. On the basement storey there is a large room, and two smaller rooms, besides numerous apartments for cooking, refreshment rooms, &c. It contains the Dispensary, Subscription Library, Savings Bank, Gas and Water Company's office, Superintendent Registrar's office, the office of the Darlington and Stockton Times, and several private offices. On the upper floor, which is approached by an easy and elegant staircase, is the large hall for holding public meetings, exhibitions, &c., measuring 82 feet in length by 44 in width, proportionably lofty, and having a gallery at one end capable of holding nearly 200 persons. The hall is well lighted, and the windows are ornamented with stained glass. W. and R. Thompson, secretaries.

THE MARKET CROSS.—This is a plain stone pillar, elevated on a platform of four steps, and situated on the north side of the Town Hall. It was erected, about the latter end of the 17th century, by Lady Brown, the heiress of the Barnes family, in whom the office of bailiff had long been vested.

THE PUBLIC PARK, situated about a mile south of the town, was formed about two years ago, under the auspices of the local board of health. It contains about 20 acres of land, which were formerly known as the Poor Moors (see Charities). The trustees of the charity receive the usual rent for the ground; and this sum, together with the expense of keeping up the grounds, are defrayed by the board of health. A neat cottage has been built for the residence of the park-keeper, and a bridge, which has been thrown across the Skerne, gives the public an easy and ready access to the grounds.

THE POLICE STATION, a plain stone building, situated in Grange-street, was erected partly out of the county rate, and partly by subscription, and contains suitable accommodation for the magistrates and policemen, with strong cells for the prisoners. Petty sessions are held here every Monday, when two or more of the following magistrates attend:—R. H. Allan, Esq.; J. H. Aylmer, Esq.; Edmund Backhouse, Esq.; R. Colling, Esq.; J. Cookson, Esq.; J. L. Hammond, Esq.; G. J. Scurfield, Esq.; H. P. Smith, Esq.; J. Smithson, Esq.; Rev. John Swire; and Nathaniel Plews, Esq. Clerk, John Shields Peacock, Esq.

THE COUNTY COURT, for the recovery of debts under £50, for the district of Darlington, is held once a month in the police court. Judge, Henry Stapylton, Esq.; assistant clerk, Thomas Bowes; bailiff, Richard Benson. Office, Houndgate.

PUBLIC BATHS.—This establishment, which is situated in Kendrew-street, was erected in 1850, at a cost of £2,500. It comprises a swimming bath, 99 feet in length by 49 in breadth, four slipper baths, tepid and cold shower baths, vapour baths, and plunge baths, at very moderate charges. The swimming bath is open every day, Sundays excepted, from sun rise to sun set, and on Sundays to 8 a.m.; and is reserved for ladies from 10 to 11 a.m. each day. M. Potts, secretary; George Burlinson, keeper.

THE SHAMBLES, in the Market Place, is a convenient building, erected in 1816, and consists of a basement wall and an iron railing, with corner pillars of stone supporting a sloping roof. The whole is well lighted from the roof and side windows. It is the property of a private company, who charge a small toll for the use of the market.

THE TOWN HALL, situated in the Market Place, is an elegant stone structure, in the Italian style, with a terrace and balustrade at the top, surmounted by a cupola, and was erected for the use of the inhabitants in 1808. The lower storey is occupied by warehouses and shops; and the upper storey contains a spacious room, which is used for public meetings, and the transaction of the business of the town.

THE DISPENSARY, for the relief of the sick poor, which occupies a portion of the Central Buildings, was established in October, 1808, in commemoration of the jubilee of George III., and since that time medical and surgical advice and assistance have been given to thousands of patients. It is supported by annual subscriptions and donations, together with the interest of £100, bequeathed in 1825, by the late Thomas Backhouse, Esq. By the rules of the institution, annual subscribers of half-a-guinea are entitled to four tickets of admission of patients, and others in proportion. A benefaction of £5 and upwards constitutes the donor a governor for life. S. E. Piper, surgeon.

THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTE is a fine edifice, in Skinnergate, erected in 1858, from designs by Mr. Joseph Sparkes, of Darlington, at a cost of £2,400. It comprises a reading room on the ground floor, a library, committee and class rooms, a lecture hall, and various offices. The institution now numbers upwards of 400 members, who pay 5s. per annum for the use of the library, or 12s. 6d. for library and news-room. The library contains 2,200 volumes in the various departments of literature, and the reading room is well supplied with the various newspapers and periodicals. The institute is connected with the Yorkshire Union of Mechanics' Institutes; and has recently subscribed to the Society of Arts, by which means it is enabled to secure the services of able lecturers at reduced rates, and becomes entitled to many other advantages. President, Henry Pease, Esq.; vice presidents, Thomas Watson, and Ralph Mountford, Esqs.; treasurer, John C. Backhouse, Esq.; hon. sec., Hugh Dunn, Esq.; librarian, Charles Forster.

NEWSPAPERS.—Darlington possesses two newspapers, the Darlington and Stockton Times, published weekly by the proprietor, Mr. Robert Thompson; and the Northern Express, published daily by Mr. John Watson.

THE SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, Central Buildings, was established in 1825; and now consists of 180 members, each of whom pays a subscription of £1 ls. per annum. The library contains 4,000 volumes on various subjects.

J. C. Backhouse, Esq., treasurer ; David Dale, hon. sec. ; Sarah Stockton, librarian.

MARKETS AND FAIRS.—Weekly markets are held on Mondays and Fridays, the former being the ancient market day. These markets are well supplied with the produce of the rich agricultural district which surrounds the town, and the attendance of buyers and sellers is numerous. Nine annual fairs are held in Darlington at the following periods, viz. :—The first Monday in March, a show of horned cattle, sheep, &c. (pays no tolls for cattle); Easter Monday, for cattle and all goods and merchandise (pays no toll for cattle, except horses and pigs); Monday before and after Old May-day, a hiring day for servants; Whit Monday, for horned cattle, sheep, and all goods and merchandise; Great Monday after Whitsuntide, which is always the Monday fortnight, the same; the 9th of November, for horses, &c.; the 10th of November, for horned cattle, sheep, &c.; the 18th of November, for hogs and pigs; Monday before Old Martinmas-day, hiring day for servants; November 23rd, Old Martinmas-day, for horned cattle, sheep, and all goods, &c.; Great Monday after Old Martinmas, which is always the Monday sevensnight after Martinmas-day, except when the latter falls on a Monday, when the great Monday fair is that day fortnight, for horned cattle only, and all other goods and merchandise.

MANUFACTURES, TRADE, &c.—This town has long been noted for its woollen manufactures, and more recently for its linens; but this latter branch of industry has of late years been neglected, or transferred to other localities, and the chief employment of the labouring classes is in the combing and other operations in the woollen spinning mills. The manufacture of carpets is extensively carried on; great quantities of leather have been for many years produced here; and there is a large iron foundry at Hope Town. There are five breweries, and several wine, spirit, ale, and porter merchants.

BANKS.—Darlington possesses three banking establishments, besides the Savings Bank. Messrs. Backhouse and Co.'s Bank, established in 1774, is situated in High Row. This company issue their own notes, and possess branch houses in the various towns of the county. London agents, Messrs. Barclay and Co. The Darlington District Bank is the property of a joint-stock banking company, in shares of £100 each, established in 1832. The place of business is in Prospect Place, with branches at the different towns in Durham, and the North Riding of Yorkshire. A. Dinsdale, manager. London agents, Messrs. Barclay and Co. The National Provincial Bank of England has an office in High Row, under the management of Mr. T. MacLachlan, with branch offices at the other towns in the county. London agents, London and Westminster Bank. The Savings Bank, Central Buildings, was established in 1817, and a great number of the industrious classes avail themselves of its benefits. It is open on Mondays from 12 to 1 o'clock, and on Saturdays from 6 to 7 o'clock, p.m.

RAILWAYS.—Darlington possesses two lines of railway communication, one by the Stockton and Darlington line, and the other by the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway. The station of the former is situated near the north entrance to the town, and covers an area of more than 16 acres. There are large warehouses for heavy goods, besides extensive depôts for the sale of lime, coals, &c. The railway crosses the Skerne to the east, by a lofty arch. The suburb of Hope Town has started into existence in the neighbourhood of the station, and in it are many important manufactories. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick station is on the east side of the Skerne, and with its warehouses, dépôts, &c., extends over an area of 29 acres. The railway bridge over the Skerne is an elegant and substantial structure. Besides these two lines of railway, which are now in full operation, a third, the Darlington and Barnard Castle, is in course of construction, which, when finished, will bring those two towns within half-an-hour's journey of each other. John Anderson, Esq., of Gainford, is the contractor.

GAS AND WATER WORKS.—Darlington was first supplied with gas by a joint-stock company, which commenced lighting the town in 1830. This company was superseded, in 1846, by another, which bought the old works, and was merged in the present company, and incorporated by act of parliament, 12 and 13 Vic., c. 73. The subscribed capital amounts to £25,000, in shares of £12 10s. each. The works, situated in North Road, contain four gasometers, the largest of which will contain about 130,000 cubic feet of gas, and the three smaller ones about 12,000 each. Gas is supplied to the public at 5s. per thousand cubic feet.

"The supply of water," says Mr. Fordyce, "previous to obtaining the act of parliament, was derived from wells sunk to depths varying from six to thirty feet, according to the depression of the surface of the ground, and terminated in a stratum of gravel and sand. That this supply was both inadequate, and frequently deleterious from extraneous admixture, may be naturally surmised. The company, upon the recommendation of their engineer, made choice of the river Tees as their source, and laid down their works so as to abstract the water from that river at a distance of about two miles west of the town. The works consists of two filter-beds, each eighty feet by fifty; a steam engine of 28-horse power, calculated to lift 500 gallons per minute; and a service reservoir to hold 800,000 gallons, the quantity estimated for three or four days' consumption, allowing twenty gallons per head of the population per day. The service reservoir is about 100 feet above the river, and admits of an average pressure in the town of about seventy feet. There are about 14,000 yards of water pipe." The scale of charges for domestic purposes ranges from 1s. 6d. per quarter for a house not exceeding £4 rent, up to 15s. for a house not exceeding £100, and £3 per cent per annum on all above that rent. These works were transferred to the local board of health in 1854. Office, Central Buildings—William Jones, secretary. The Stockton, Middlesbrough, and Yarm Water Company conduct their business in the same office as the Darlington Gas and Water Company, from whose mains the supply of water is obtained.

THE DARLINGTON POOR LAW UNION comprises an area of 62,312 statute acres, and its population in 1851 was 20,798. The union includes the following townships in the county of Durham:—Darlington, Blackwell, High Coniscliffe, Low Coniscliffe, Dinsdale, Hurworth, Middleton St. George, Neasham, Piercebridge, Sockburn, Great Aycliffe, Archdeacon Newton, Barnton, Brafferton, Great Burdon, Coatham-Mundeville, Coatsay Moor, Cockerton, Denton, Heighington, Houghton-le-Side, Haughton-le-Skerne, Killerby, Morton Palms, Wallworth, Redworth, Sadberge, School Aycliffe, Summerhouse, and Whessoe. The following townships in Yorkshire also belong to the union:—Barton, Cleaseby, Cliffe, Croft, Dalton, Eryholme, Girsby, Manfield, Newton Morrel, Over Dinsdale, and Stapleton. The Union Workhouse is situated in Lead Yard, and will accommodate 150 persons. Present number of inmates, 70. Governor, William Grey; matron, Isabella Grey; surgeon, Stephen Piper; chaplain, Rev. John Marshall; clerk, William Robinson; relieving officers, and registrars of births and deaths, John Tweddell, for Darlington district, Ralph Fortune, for Aycliffe district; superintendent-registrar, William Robinson; registrar of marriages, John Walton, High Row.

THE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY hold their meetings in the lecture room of the Mechanics' Institute, Skinnergate; president, John Fothergill; secretaries, Alexander Fothergill and Jonathan Dresser.

CHARITIES. — Besides the Grammar School, which will be found described under its proper head, Darlington possesses the following charities: —

The Apprentices' Fund. — The churchwardens and overseers of Darlington township purchased, in 1659, of William Middleton, in Blackwell, six acres of copy-hold land, called Poor Moor, the rents of which were appropriated to the placing out of poor boys as apprentices. The premises now consist of three closes, containing together rather more than twelve acres, with a barn and stable, and let for £33 a year. In 1828, the vestry ordered that this fund should be applied in giving a sum not less than £3, nor more than £5 to each apprentice, to be laid out in necessary expenses and clothing during his term; the boy not to be bound in the manner of a parish apprentice.

Barker's Charity. — Thomas Barker, by will, dated May 22nd, 1686, gave to the parishes of Bishopton, Long Newton, Haughton, and Darlington, 20s. each yearly, payable out of his lands at East Newbiggin. These sums are paid by the Marquis of Londonderry's tenant there, and the Darlington portion forms part of the Christmas distribution.

Bellasses Charity. — James Bellasses, by will, October 10th, 1836, bequeathed all his messuages, &c., which he had bought of Ralph Wilson, and four beast gates in Bracken Moor, together with the sum of £20, for the purpose of establishing a linen and woollen manufactory. The premises first mentioned by the testator are supposed to be three tenements situated in Blackwellgate and fronting Skinnergate. They are known by the name of the Alms Houses, and are occupied rent free by three poor widows of the parish of Darlington, nominated by the churchwardens. The trustees were admitted to the land in Blackwell, in 1771. It consists of four closes, called the Poor Howdons, containing upwards of nineteen acres. The rents were paid to the churchwardens up to 1812, from which time till 1823, they were received by George Allan, Esq. The churchwardens having again taken possession, are now in receipt of the rent. The proceeds of this charity not being sufficient to carry out the intentions of the testator by establishing a trade, were for many years applied, with those of the Apprentices' Fund, mentioned above, in binding out apprentices, almost exclusively to weavers; but in 1828, the inhabitants and head men resolved that a committee of twenty-four should be empowered to lend to linen and woollen manufacturers whose capital does not exceed £800, sums of not less than £50, and not more than £200, at interest at one per cent, on two competent householders joining in security; that the sum borrowed be refunded on the manufacturer giving up his business, or being supposed to have realised the sum of £500; and that no term of loan should exceed seven years.

Blue Coat School. — By indenture, April 19th, 1713, Dame Mary Calverley assigned to trustees the sum of £1,000, to be laid out in lands and tenements, and the rent of which and the interest accumulated before such purchase could be made, were to be applied towards the support and maintenance of a charity school intended to be established at Darlington. In 1714, a subscription commenced, to which Lady Calverley gave £150. On May 20th, 1719, Robert Noble, of Darlington, bequeathed the yearly sum of 40s. for the use of the Blue Coat School; but, as this sum was to be contingent upon the master being licensed by the bishop, it has never been received. In 1772, the contributions and savings, amounting to a sum of £1,280, were placed in the hands of George Allan, Esq.; and in 1800, £1,392 9s. stock three-per-cent consols was transferred to the names of the trustees. Since the establishment of a parochial school, conducted on the national system, twenty children of the parish, named by the trustees, and called the Blue Coat Boys, have been taught by the master of that school; and the dividends arising from the stock £41 15s. 4d., are disposed of for their benefit, as follows:—The schoolmaster receives £18 per annum for teaching them; and he is also allowed his bill for books, paper, and school requisites, which generally amount to 40s. or 60s.; and 15s. is paid yearly for firing. The children receive an entire suit of clothing once in two years, the annual average cost of which is about £20. The peculiar dress is now discontinued.

Buck's Charity.—George Buck, of Sadberge, gent., by will, July 18th, 1704, gave £100 to be laid out in lands, three-fourths of the rents of which were distributed amongst the poor of the parish of Darlington, and the remainder amongst the poor of Sadberge. The land purchased, near Northgate Bridge, is copy-hold, and now consists of three parcels, containing in all 3a. 2r. 24p., let at the time of the charity commissioners' inquiry at rents amounting to £21 per annum. The three-fourths named are given away with the other charities at Christmas.

Carr's Charity.—Shafto Carr, in 1809, bequeathed to the churchwardens of the parish of Darlington £50 upon trust, the interest to be distributed to the poor yearly on St. Thomas's day. £2 2s. is received as the dividend upon £52 10s. new four-per-cent, purchased with this bequest, and forms part of the Christmas distribution.

Catherick's Charity.—Two copy-hold houses and an orchard in Bondgate were charged by the will of Catharine Catherick, May 20th, 1720, with £2 12s. annually, to be laid out by the minister and churchwardens in the purchase of twelve pennyworth of bread, to be distributed every Sunday amongst such poor people as they might think fit. Bread to the amount of 4s. 4d. is now given away on the last Sunday of every month, in penny and two penny loaves, to poor persons attending divine service, according to a list prepared by the minister and churchwardens.

Cornforth's Charity.—On March 1st, 1676, John Cornforth, of Blackwell, yeoman, gave by will, £40 to trustees, to purchase lands or to put out to consideration, the profits to be distributed amongst the poor of Blackwell, within the twelve days of Christmas. Up to 1740, the interest of this sum was distributed with Baron Hylton's dole (see Hylton Castle), but in that year, the principal sum, with Prescott's legacy, noticed below, were invested in the purchase of a field at Blackwell, called the Poor's Close, now an orchard, containing about two acres, let for £12 yearly. The moiety of this sum is distributed, at May-day and Martinmas, in sums varying from 2s. to 3s. 6d. amongst poor persons residing in the township of Blackwell.

Forster's Alms House.—By indenture, March 9th, 1632, Francis Forster, for the great and good affection he bore unto the poor and aged people of Darlington, conveyed to trustees his two lesser houses in Northgate, for the use of six poor and impotent married or unmarried men or women, unable to earn a living, born in Darlington, or resident there for three years, and to be nominated by his heirs, with the assent of the churchwardens. These premises which consist of two cottages under one roof, are, with the sanction of the churchwardens, now occupied by two poor widows.

Forster's Charity.—On November 20th, 1641, Francis Forster, and Richard his son, by indenture (reciting that Christopher Forster, butcher, deceased, had, on January 1st, 1605, demised to the said Francis a close on on the north of the high road to Yarm, for 1,000 years) granted the same (now called Carlton Close, and containing 2a. 2r. 8p.) to the churchwardens and their successors, the profits to go to the use of the most needful poor of the borough and Bondgate, born there, or resident for three years. The rent of this close, £11, now forms part of the Christmas distribution.

Lamb's Charity.—Matthew Lamb, by deed, May 1st, 1714, gave to George Allan, of Darlington, and the churchwardens and their successors, a yearly rent of 12s., charged on certain houses in Blackwellgate, to be distributed yearly on Good Friday to twelve poor widows of Darlington. The bequest is now regularly paid at Christmas.

Noble's Charity.—Robert Noble, by will, May 20th, 1719, charged his freehold property, in High Row, with 20s. a year, to be distributed on the 29th September to such poor as were not receiving relief from the rates. This sum is now attached to the Christmas distribution.

Pape's Charity.—John Pape, by will, June 9th, 1599, charged his burgage, in the Head Rawe, with four horse loads of coals at Christmas, and 3s. 4d. to be bestowed in bread at Easter by the vicar and churchwardens; the aged poor and impotent to be especially relieved. The sum of 3s. 4d. (though not the value of four horse loads) is paid in lieu of coals, and with the other rent charges, forms part of the Christmas distribution.

Pease's Alms-Houses.—Mrs. Mary Pease, widow of Mr. Joseph Pease, having purchased property in Chairgate, otherwise Glover's Weind, or Post House Weind, for the residue of a term of 980 years from December 1st, 1694, caused the buildings thereon to be pulled down, and erected four alms-houses on the site, which by indenture, June 10th, 1820, she vested in twelve trustees, who were to keep them in repair, and to insure them for £150, and to permit four poor women, being widows of the age of sixty years at least, of a good moral character, and not of the Society of Friends, to dwell in the said alms-houses without paying any rent, except the yearly sum of 5s. each, to form a fund for repairs. Vacancies in the trustees are to be filled up by a monthly meeting of the Society of Friends of Darlington; and it was provided that if any of the alms people should marry, or be guilty of any gross immorality or impropriety of conduct, she or they should be expelled. On the sum of £30 being raised from the 5s. rentals, they were to cease, and the interest of that sum was to be applied for repairs, &c. Four poor widows, appointed by the trustees, reside in the houses; and the rent has been occasionally, but not regularly demanded, so that nothing has been invested, and the repairs have been executed at the voluntary charge of individual trustees.

Lady Calverley's Charity.—Dame Mary Calverley, by will, May 10th, 1715, bequeathed several legacies, to the amount of £905 or thereabouts, to be paid out of a mortgage of £1,500 upon Ipsley estate, in Warwickshire; the interest or profits of the residue to be distributed amongst the poor of the parishes between North Allerton and Darlington inclusive. Up to the year 1821, the churchwardens of Darlington received £10 a year in respect of this charity, from Richard Thompson, Esq., of Escrig Park, Yorkshire. After his death, the payment was discontinued by his representative, Bailby Thompson, Esq.; and nothing has since been received.

Phillip's Charity.—Gideon Gravett Phillips, of Darlington, died in 1800; and on a slip of paper attached to his will, "Town £100" was written in his own hand-writing. This legacy was paid to the guardians of the poor, and, by order of a vestry meeting in 1804, laid out in building the poor-house.

Prescott's Charity.—On February 2nd, 1705, Arthur Prescott, by will, gave £40 to trustees, the half of the interest to be distributed amongst poor widows of Darlington, and the other half amongst the poor of Blackwell. In 1814, a bank, in which the Darlington £20 had been placed, failed; but G. L. Hollingsworth, Esq., one of the partners, paid the amount in 1827. In the following year, it was laid out in the purchase of £19 13s. 1d. stock new four-per-cents., the dividends of which form part of the Christmas distribution. For the other half of the bequest, see Cornforth's Charity.

Walker's Charity.—£50 was bequeathed, April 11th, 1791, by Elizabeth Walker, widow; the interest of which was to be divided amongst twelve poor widows of the town. In 1800, this money was laid out in the purchase of £58 3s. five-per-cent. loyalty annuities, the dividend of which, £2 18s. 2d., is distributed at Christmas.

Christmas Distribution.—The income arising from such of the above charities as are not otherwise specifically appropriated, amounts to about £30; and is distributed at Christmas by the curate and churchwardens, in sums seldom exceeding 3s. 6d. to a family, or 4s. to some of the widows, their proportion being increased in respect of Walker's Charity.

BIOGRAPHY.—It is a peculiar relief when enumerating the dry details of topographical, statistical, or commercial history, to have to record individual exertion or struggles for eminence in the intellectual pursuits of literature, science, or art. And in our researches for an account of the strictly "money-making place of Darlington," we only find one native who has so struggled for distinction, and that, too, through difficulties and opposition. We allude to William Bewick, "the favourite pupil of Haydon." It is needless on the present occasion to attempt to unravel the mysteries of legends, or explain the meaning of Greek mottoes, or repeat ancient ballads, in confirmation of any proposition of descent or lineage, we admit that the race of the Bewick's originally descended, with their taste, from Greek ancestors. Probably they formed part of a Roman cohort, stationed at Newcastle, on the banks of the Tyne, where they established their name, with the ensign of the goat, as it is handed down to us to this day. William, the son of William and Jane Bewick, was born at Darlington, on the 20th October, 1795, and was intended for his father's business, that of an upholsterer, but his growing love for the arts increased to such a length, that he was impelled by an irresistible impulse to give way to the natural bent of his inclination, and contrary to parental wishes left home at the age of twenty, for London, the seat of everything that could gratify an ardent thirst for improvement and distinction. He arrived in London without introduction or friends of any kind, and after seeing all the exhibitions of art then open to the public, he set himself about his work in earnest. By accident, he was presented with a ticket of admission to draw from the Elgin marbles, then at Burlington House, and he proceeded immediately and took his place among some of the leading artists of the time; his natural timidity and nervousness was overcome by the great desire of improvement, and after proceeding for some time in the best way he could without the aid of advice, Haydon, the historical painter, came there, as was his wont; this "enthusiast" was not long before he was by the side of our Darlington artist, and offered him his valuable advice to him about his drawing. This interview is described by Haydon, in his autobiography, as follows:—"1816. One morning, while visiting the Elgin marbles (then at Burlington House), I saw a youth with a good head, drawing in a large way. I spoke to him, and was pleased by his reply. It ended by an invitation to breakfast. The next day he came, and told me his name was Bewick; that he came up from Darlington, &c. He entered my school at once; was introduced to the Landseers, proceeded to copy all my dissected drawings, and soon became the most prominent pupil of the whole set." The small amount of funds that he had saved from the sale of some of his early productions at Darlington, was soon expended, and driven to great straits and privations for want of support at this time, and assiduously working away at his "labour of love," from six in the morning till twelve at night, his health gave way, but he continued, encouraged by his master, and by those of the school he had entered, until great progress had been made in his studies: he dissected and drew, and made himself thoroughly master of the anatomy of the human figure,—entered the Royal Academy, studying the antique,—made large and important drawings of those difficult groupes in the "Elgin Marbles," at the British Museum,—such as were never made there before, nor since; and which were exhibited by permission in the Museum, and attracted great attention from the artists, the President West giving a lecture on the spot, addressed to the students. Bewick made a series of these full-sized drawings of the principal figures and groups of these celebrated statues, for Goëthe, the poet, and sent to Germany, and which were alluded to by the poet in a letter to Haydon, in 1831, as follows,—“My soul has been elevated for many years by the contemplation of the important pictures formerly sent to me, which occupy an honourable station in my house,” &c. And Haydon writes in his journal that he sent Bewick “with the Landseer’s to the British Museum, where they made from the Elgin Marbles those celebrated drawings, the size of the originals, which gave them so much reputation, that Goëthe ordered a set for Weimar, where they are still shown in his house, and to which, just before his death, he alluded in a letter to me. Finding my pupils, and Bewick especially, doing such justice to the Elgin Marbles, I resolved to endeavour to get the cartoons (of Raphael), and stating my objects to a friend, he induced Lords Stafford and Farnborough to go to George IV. and ask leave to have two at a time at the British Gallery, which they did, and got it. “I then sent my whole school to the Gallery, and there drew from the cartoons the size of the originals. When done, the rush to see the copies was so great, the doors were closed for fear of injury. They were then established in St. James’-street, here the people of fashion crowded for days.” It was now that Haydon found Bewick at the lead of his school, although he was one of the last to enter it, and at this time considerable interest was created for this young and enterprising artist, at his native place, and some attempts were made to raise funds to carry him through his early pictures, but not to that extent that was sufficient. The late Lady Chaytor took great interest in the matter, and Haydon addressed her on the subject. This amiable lady communicated with Bishop Barrington, and the late Duke of Cleveland, with no result. Her ladyship, however, did furnish substantial aid as far as she was enabled, and to her honour be it recorded, she relieved the pressing necessities of one who was assiduously striving to do honour to his native place, as well as his country, in the acquisition of one of the most difficult of intellectual pursuits—important alike to taste, to manufactures, and to commerce, — for it is surely to the arts we owe the greatest source of what we do know of antiquity, the cultivation or advancement of by-gone ages and it is to the "arts" we owe superiority in what depends upon "taste" in manufactures. Is it not lamentable then, in a place like Darlington, advanced in education, and comparatively wealthy, should have neglected the duty of encouraging efforts of genius, and to have alleviated the sufferings, and relieved the necessities of their townsman, William Bewick. If we take shame for the heartless negligence of our fellowmen, it is painful to have to record that the privations and anxieties which this young man endured in his early life, has had, no doubt, a lasting influence upon his constitution, and in his mid-career he has been obliged to retire from a profession he so ardently loved, and to forego an ambition for excellence in the higher walks of art to which all his aspirations were concentrated. Mr. Tom Taylor, the editor of Haydon's Autobiography, has the following introduction to his painting the head in the picture of Lazarus:—"The record of the circumstance under which this head was painted, and the model who sat for it, may give an interest to this picture to those who have not felt one, and will increase the interest with those who, with me, see in it the most awful representation of death just awakening into life again that has ever been put on canvass." Haydon says, in 1821, "Bewick, my pupil, has realised my hopes in his picture of Jacob and Rachael, &c. He sat for the head of Lazarus, and as he had not sold his excellent picture of Jacob, looked quite thin, and anxious enough for such a head. I hope you get your food regularly, said I. He did not answer: by degrees his cheeks reddened, and his eyes filled, but he subdued his feelings. This is an illustration of historical painting in England—a master and his pupil—the one without a pound, the other without bread!" According to Mr. Longstaff, in his history of Darlington, Bewick is the only instance of any native of the place, ever attaining to the promise of distinction in a pursuit applicable to the rare category of genius, and it is lamentable to reflect that, like Chatterton, Burns, and Goldsmith, he was left by his compatriots to starve with the genius God had endowed him with. There needs no higher testimony than those of Laurence and Haydon, to the qualifications and natural powers exhibited in all the productions of this young artist, to have satisfied any patrons in the county of Durham, or his immediate friends and fellow townsmen to have rescued him from utter want of "bread." There is an instance of gross and heartless pretensions to be "a patron of genius in distress" stated by the same author, to have occurred at Darlington, when the artist not having sold "his exquisite picture of Jacob," and having exhausted his funds in the prosecution of his next great work; he came to his native place with the view of painting portraits or any small works that would have supplied him with sufficient money to carry him through the great work he had half completed. He had no sooner made known the object of his visit than a professed friend, in great sympathy, offered his services to supply the advance of what was required, and induced the artist to return to London, and resume his labours and complete his work; the required remittance was to be sent immediately on his arrival in London. Nothing could be more cheering, or to the artist's wishes; and he returned to his studio and set to his work again. Days past, weeks went over, and still no arrival of any "remittance," nor did it ever come, nor could he ever obtain any explanation whatever of this extraordinary and heartless proceeding. During all the time of these vain expectations this young artist suffered the greatest privations, anxieties, and misery, which may be more easily imagined than described, and Johnson's lines, with the substitution of a word, will be applicable to the historical painter, only thirty years ago :

"What various ills the painter's life assail—Toll, envy, want, the razor, and the gaol."

In despondency, if not in despair, Mr. Bewick quitted London for Edinburgh, and was cordially received there by his friend, Sir William Allan, and the other artists, and introduced through a letter from a literary friend, to all the celebrities of the northern metropolis—Scott, Jeffrey, Hogg, Wilson, Basil Hall, Brewster, Sinclair, McCulloch, &c., &c., of whom he took the opportunity of making elaborate and spirited drawings, life-size, which, with those he obtained at Glasgow and at Dublin, form an exceedingly interesting collection, still in the artist's possession. Whilst in Edinburgh and Glasgow he merely painted unimportant works for existence. After some three years sojourn in the north, he returned to Darlington to prepare for his projected journey to Italy, where he was to undertake a most difficult commission for the president of the Royal Academy, Sir Thomas Lawrence. Whilst employed upon these expensive and laborious works, the sudden death of the president put a stop to the completion of them, and he returned to this country to make the best settlement he could with the executors of Lawrence, whose affairs were involved and uncertain; and suffering considerable loss by the death of his friend Lawrence, he came to his native place to endeavour to make up his losses by the drudgery of portrait painting, and he seems to have had no difficulty in producing striking likenesses, to which his drawings of eminent persons had initiated him. Thus, painting portraits and "fancy pictures" in the neighbourhood of his home until his pecuniary circumstances became easy, he once more returned to London, and set up his easel at 27, George Street, Hanover Square, where he laboured in "full practice," until, with excess of employment, his health broke down, and he was ordered by his physician to retire into the country to save his life, where he has ever since remained in precarious health, residing upon his own property, at Haughton-le-Skerne, one mile from Darlington, surrounded by works of art and objects of taste, married and enjoying all the blessings of domestic happiness, except that important one—health.

OXENHALL, OXEN-LE-FIELD, OR OXNEY-FIELD is a detached portion of the township of Darlington, locally situated in that of Blackwell, and about three miles south of Durham. By Boldon Book, William held Oxenhall, which then consisted of one caracute and two portions of tillage, with a horse mill. Nicholas de Oxenhall died seised of this manor in 1337, leaving Richard his son an heir. It was afterwards held by Roger de Belgrave, from whose son, John, it passed, before 1378, to John Lord Neville, and John Faixfax. Lord Neville held it under Hatfield's survey, and it remained in the possession of his descendants till the attainder of Charles Earl of Westmoreland, in 1570. Queen Elizabeth, in 1574, granted Oxnetfield Grange to Thomas Brickwell, and Andrew Palmer, the former of whom sold it in 1602 to William Bore. Before 1700, Oxenhall was purchased by the Millbankes, and it is now the property of Lady Byron.

This constabulary contains the curious pools or springs of water called Hell Kettles, the origin of which are thus described in Brompton's Chronicles :—
"On Christmas-day, 1179, a wonderful matter fell out at Oxenhale, viz., that in the land of Lord Hughe, bishop of Duresme, the ground rose up to such a height, that it was equal to the tops of the highest hills, and higher than the spires and towers of the churches, and so remained at that height from nine in the morning till sun-set. But at the setting sun the earth fell in with such a horrid crash, that all who saw that strange mound, and heard its fall, were so amazed, that for very fear many died, for the earth swallowed up that mound, and where it stood there was a deep pool." Such is the account of their formation given by the ancient chronicle, and though various attempts have been made to account for them in other ways, yet the tendency of modern writers is to agree with the old historians, and ascribe their origin to volcanic action. The pools are four in number; three of them are near each other in the second field from the road, betwixt the second and third milestone; the fourth and smallest is in the field next the turnpike road. The diameter of the three larger pools is about 33 yards each, and their respective depths 19½ feet, 17 feet, and 14 feet; the diameter of the fourth and separate pool is 28 feet, and its depth only 5½ feet. They are all nearly round; the water stands to the brim, is quite cold, and impregnated with sulphur, curdling with milk, and refusing to mix with soap. Though near the level of the Tees, their waters are never affected by any flood or other variation of the river, and there seems no reason to suspect any communication with the Tees. The three largest are joined with a surface channel, and the water, after supplying the neighbouring farms by a small streamlet, flows into the Skerne.

DENTON CHAPELRY.

The parochial chapelry of Denton, which is dependent on the parish of Gainford, comprises the townships of Denton and Haughton-le-Side. It is bounded on the east and north by Heighington, on the west and south-west by Gainford, and on the south by Coniscliffe.

The township of DENTON comprises an area of 966 acres, and its annual value is £1,541 10s. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 141; in 1811, 129; in 1821, 125; in 1831, 144; in 1841, 119; and in 1851, 121 souls. Tradition says that Denton, Ulnaby, Carlbury, Walworth, Houghton-le-side, Shackleton, Newbiggin, and other places in this neighbourhood, were burnt by the Scots; and it is probable that Malcolm passed through or near these places when he advanced as far as Cleveland. Denton was the property of the Earls of Westmoreland, but being granted out on reserved rents, was not included in the forfeiture which carried their estates to the crown. It has since been possessed by various families, amongst whom we may enumerate the Tempests, Surtees, Brackenburys, the Earls of Somerset, the Carrs, and the Cullays, from the latter of whom it was purchased, about 1849, by the Duke of Cleveland, who, with the exception of twenty-six acres of glebe land, and about four acres held by the incumbent, is the sole proprietor.

The Village of Denton is six miles north-west-by-west of Darlington, and occupies a retired situation in a valley through which a brook flows from north to south. It contains a public house, a grocer's shop, and a few houses.

The Chapel is a small Gothic edifice, dedicated to St. Mary, and was rebuilt in 1810. It was enlarged in 1836, by which means seventy additional sittings were obtained; and in consequence of a grant from the Incorporated Society for the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels, sixty of that number are declared to be free and unappropriated for ever, in addition to twenty-two sittings formerly provided, twenty of which were free. The chapel will now accommodate 200 persons. During the rebuilding of the chapel, a stone coffin, supposed to have belonged to a knight templar, was discovered a few feet below the surface. In now lies near the entrance of the chapel. The register of this chapelry commences in 1586. The living is a curacy not in charge, in the deanery of Darlington, and pays neither first-fruits nor tenths, but procurations only at the bishop's visitation. It is certified at the annual value of £46 14s. 4d.: annual value of the living, £60. Patron, the Vicar of Gainford. The glebe consists of the parsonage house, offices, and garden, the church yard, and six acres of land. Rev. John Birbeck, incumbent.

HAUGHTON-LE-SIDE township, the property of the Duke of Cleveland, John Bowes, Esq., and others, comprises an area of 1,060 acres. The valuation of property for the county-rate in 1853 was £1,009 6s. 6d. In 1801 it contained 102; in 1811, 113; in 1821, 122; in 1831, 130; in 1841, 130; and in 1851, 146 inhabitants. Houghton-le-Side was granted by Robert Fitz-Meldred, lord of Raby, to Henry Spring, of Hereby, one of whose descendants, Sir John Spring, was murdered in 1312 in his manor house, by Robert Lascelles, of Yorkshire; and Ralph, lord Neville, was excommunicated by Bishop Kellaw, for seizing and detaining the armour of the deceased.

The Hamlet of Haughton-le-Side is situated six miles north-west of Darlington. Above the hamlet is an eminence called Leg's Cross, upon which, traditions inform us, King James sat down, on his route to Walworth, in 1603, and whence he enjoyed the prospect of Raby Castle, and declared it to be the fairest castle in his dominions.

DINSDALE PARISH.

Dinsdale parish, which comprises no dependent townships, occupies the north-eastern peninsula of Sockburn. It is bounded on the north by the parish of Houghton-le-Skerne, on the west by a portion of Hurworth parish, on the south by Sockburn, and on the east by Middleton St. George and the river Tees. It comprises an area of 1,150 acres, and the value of property assessed to the county-rate in 1853, was £1,488 11s. 8d. The population in 1801 was 108; in 1811, 125; in 1821, 111; in 1831, 169; in 1841, 169; and in 1851, 157 souls. The Stockton and Darlington Railway extends into this parish. The manor of Dinsdale was possessed by the Surtees family at a very early period, and remained their property till 1552, when it was transferred by marriage to the Brandlings, the Blackistons, and the Wycliffes. The whole, however, became gradually vested in Christopher Place, Esq., whose descendants retained possession till 1722, at which period it was purchased by Cuthbert Routh, Esq. It afterwards passed to the Lambtons, and was sold by the present Earl of Durham to Henry George Surtees, Esq. The other landowners in the parish are, H. A. W. Cocks, Esq.; S. R. C. Ward, Esq.; William Grey, Esq.; Miss Hoar, and others. Each proprietor claims the manorial rights of his own property.

The Village of Dinsdale, or Low Dinsdale, as it is sometimes called, occupies a retired situation near the river Tees, five miles from Yarm, four miles from Croft Bridge, and five miles south-east-by-east of Darlington. Its population is almost exclusively rural. The old manor house, which occupies a low and sheltered situation, near the river, now serves as a farm house; and its thick walls, heavy beams and rafters, and low apartments, render it an interesting relic of "the days that are over." A stone, inserted in the wall on the left side of the door, bears the arms of the Place family. There was formerly a gate-house on the south; but the only defences were an outer fosse or moat. There are four other farms in the parish, a corn mill on the Tees, and a productive salmon fishery. The fish locks are usually an object of curiosity to the visitors of Dinsdale and Middleton-One-Row, to see the salmon leap up the fall. Various other kinds of fish are abundant in these waters. Over Dinsdale in Yorkshire, is approached by a wooden bridge, supported by two substantial stone piers in the river, and one on each bank.

The Church, an unpretending edifice, dedicated to St. John, is situated near the old manor house, and consists of a nave, chancel, and a south aisle. The west end of the building terminates in two gables, surmounted by crosses. A new window was inserted in the west end of the church in 1843, and an organ has been erected by the rector. There are a few stone coffins and sculptured slabs to be found here. Previous to 1195, this church, with its lands and rights of pasture, were given by Ralph Surtees, to the church of Durham, in free and perpetual alms, to provide lights for the shrine of St. Cuthbert. St. Mary's chantry in this church, was founded by William Britton, and mass was celebrated daily therein for the repose of the founder's soul. On its suppression, in 1553, Christopher Carnarde, the last chaplain, had a pension of £2 10s. awarded to him. The parish register commences in 1556. The living is a discharged rectory in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £4 11s. 5½d.; gross income, £246. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. There is no glebe within the parish except the garden and churchyard; but a small close in Middleton-One-Row, and about sixty acres in Hurworth Moor, belong to the living. The rector is entitled to the tithes of the parish, with the exception of a modus of 1s. 8d. for land called Hungerels, said to have formerly belonged to Neasham Abbey. Rev. W. S. Temple, rector; Rev. John W. Smith, curate.

The Parsonage House stands near the church, and is occupied by the curate; the present incumbent residing at Over Dinsdale.

Here is a good school, erected in 1851, upon land given by Mr. Surtees, in exchange for the site of the old school.

THE SULPHUR WELL.—"For centuries," observes Mr. Fordyce, "the little parish of Dinsdale, 'far in a wild, remote from public view,' was comparatively unknown; but the accidental discovery of its mineral water brought its name into public celebrity as a favourite place of fashionable resort. In 1789, some workmen employed by William H. Lambton, Esq., in searching for coal at Dinsdale, had bored to the depth of 72 feet, chiefly through red rock and whinstone, when a spring burst forth with a tremendous force and sulphureous stench. The remarkable quality of the water having attracted attention, a hole was made in the ground, in the channel from the spring, for the purpose of bathing; and one of the workmen, who for many years had suffered from chronic rheumatism, was cured by drinking the water and using the bath. From this period till 1797, it was much resorted to by the neighbouring villagers, for whose use a cold bath was then built, and a warm bath was afterwards added. These, however, were soon found to be too small for the increasing number of visitors; and at length a commodious suite of hot and cold baths was erected on an extensive and convenient plan, affording every accommodation to invalids. They are situated in a hollow, close to the margin of the Tees, where the river changes its course from a northerly to an easterly direction. The spring is in a rock behind the bath, from which the water issues at the rate of twelve gallons in a minute, and is conveyed to two cisterns; the one as a reserve for the cold, and the other for keeping the water continually warm, and fit for bathing; an object which is accomplished not by steam, but by ordinary fire placed under the boiler. The general temperature of the water is 52 degrees."

Mr. Thomas Dixon Walker, surgeon, of Hurworth, found by analysis, that one gallon of the water contains—

The analysis of Sir Charles Scudamore, M.D., F.R.S., &c., gives the solid ingredients in a gallon of this water as follows :—

"It may with truth be stated," adds Dr. Scudamore, "that the Dinsdale water possesses very valuable properties. Its proportion of sulphate of soda is sufficient to give it a considerable aperient quality; and the muriates which it contains, contribute much to its medicinal power as an alterative. For whatever complaints the Harrogate water has acquired its just reputation, the Dinsdale spring may fairly put forth rival pretensions; and it is but truth to state, that its aperient qualities are rendered more certain than those of the Harrogate water, from its possessing a much larger proportion of the sulphate of soda. The muriates are in smaller proportions." The Spa and Baths are now occupied by Elizabeth Duncan. Invalids and others visiting the Spa, generally reside in the village of Middleton-one-Row, in the adjoining parish of Middleton St. George; a pleasant footpath, with seats at convenient distances, leads from this place to the baths.

Dinsdale Park Retreat for Mental Invalids.—An extensive hotel, erected here by the late Earl of Durham, was opened in 1829 by Mr. Henry Marshall, of Newcastle, and was subsequently taken by Mr. Thomas Forsyth, of the same town; but the magnitude of the establishment appears to have rendered it too onerous an undertaking to be carried on with success, and it was in consequence for some time unoccupied. It is a neat and substantial edifice, pleasantly situated on an eminence; and from its windows, fine views may be obtained down the Tees, and of the rich pastures, and well-cultivated grounds on its margin; farther to the south is a long-stretching plain, drolled here and there with villages, and extending to the Cleveland and Hamilton Hells; and to the west may be seen the mountains of Cumberland. "It is indeed," observes Granville, "one of the places so happily situated, and by nature as well as art so favoured, that, as a summer residence for invalids, even without the sources of any mineral waters at hand, a medical man, consulted by the wealthy of the neighbouring counties, can recommend it with confidence and pleasure." The building was erected from the designs of Mr. Bonomi, and contains above seventy apartments; amongst which there are spacious public rooms, consisting of drawing, dining, and billiard rooms. It is now devoted to the care and recovery of a limited number of persons of the higher and middle classes, whose state of mind requires seclusion and medical treatment. There are thirty acres of land attached to the house, seven of which are laid out in pleasure grounds, and the whole is devoted to the recreation and amelioration of the patients. The establishment, which is totally unconnected with the baths, is conducted by Dr. Mackintosh, formerly of Newcastle.

Biography—John of Darlington, archbishop of Dublin, was born at Dinsdale but assumed the name of the larger town in preference to that of his native village. He was a friar of the Dominican order, and employed his time in acquiring a minute and thorough knowledge of the Holy Scriptures: the fruits of his labours was a Concordance which he finished about the year 1270. It was known by the name of "the great," or the "English Concordance," and was, most probably, the first work of the kind ever attempted in this country. His reputation was so great, that he was appointed confessor to Henry III. In his time there arose a contest between the prior and monks of Trinity Church, and the dean and chapter of St. Patrick's, Dublin, respecting the election of an archbishop of that see; William de la Corner, a chaplain of the king, was chosen by the former; whilst the latter elected Fromund le Brun, a protege of the pope. John XXI. who then occupied the papal chair, in order to put an end to the debate, annulled both elections, and appointed John of Darlington, archbishop of Dublin. He wrote various other works besides his Concordance, and Matthew Paris records, that "the excellent vigour of his mind was displayed not in literature only, but likewise in council." He departed this life in 1284, and was buried in the Dominican Church, London.

HAUGHTON-LE-SKERNE PARISH.

This extensive parish, to which the chapelry of Sadberge is annexed, is bounded on the north by Aycliffe, Stainton, and Bishopton; on the north-west by Heighington; on the west by Darlington; on the south by Hurworth; on the south-east by Dinsdale; and on the east by Long Newton. It comprises the constableries of Haughton, Great Burdon, Little Burdon, Morton, Sadberge, Barmpton with Skirmingham, Coatham Mundeville, including Greystone and Humbleton, and Whessoe and Beaumont Hill. Its total area is 10,301 statute acres.

BARMPTON township comprises an area of 1,520 acres, the principal proprietors of which are E. G. Waldy, Esq., Archdeacon Croft, and others; and its annual value is £1,769. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway extends into this township. This estate and Skirmingham were the property of Durham priory at a very early period, and in the treasury at Durham are two very curious charters concerning them. After being for some time leased at small annual rents, one third of the manor of Barmpton was sold, in 1312, to Walter Gylet, from whose descendant it passed, in 1403, to Henry Lord Percy and others. The remaining portion of the manor became vested in the families of Tailbois, Skirmingham, and Lumley. In the latter part of the fourteen century, four messuages and seven oxgangs in Barmpton passed to Joan, daughter of Thomas de Eshe, whose descendants sold their property to William Smith, of Nunstainton; and Sir Edward Smith, Bart., sold it to the Lampton family, from whom it passed to the present possessors. The population of the township in 1801, was 126; in 1811, 127; in 1821, 105; in 1831, 90; in 1841, 104; and in 1851, 135 souls.

The Hamlet of Barmpton is situated in a deep valley on the eastern bank of the Skerne, about three miles north-east of Darlington.

Skirmingham, in this township, was formerly held by the Nortons, who sold it to the trustees of Richard Maddocks, of London, for £1,700. The Porters held a portion of it in 1600, and in 1684 we find the Salkelds of Cumberland named as proprietors. It is now the property of John Hutton, Esq., Elley-hill, which was held by the Ellisons in 1684, is now possessed by Wm. Bacon, Esq.

Directory.—The farmers are George Blair, Skirmingham; David Foster; Baker Greenwell; E. G. Waldy; and Thomas White, Elley-hill.

BURDON township comprises the constaberies of Great and Little Burdon, whose united area is 588 acres, and annual value £1,031 14s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 66; in 1821, 76; in 1831, 102; in 1841, 117; and in 1851, 96 souls. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway extends into this township. The tenure of the land here is leasehold under the Dean and Chapter of Durham, who are also the owners of the mines and minerals.

The Village of Great Burdon is situated on the road leading from Darlington to Stockton about two miles east-north-east from the former place, and consists of an inn, a few respectable farm-houses, and some cottages. It was one of the places restored to the priory of Durham by Henry I., and was also included in Bishop Flambard's charter of restitution. In the time of Bishop Hatfield, Olivia de Walworth and Goceline Surtees are mentioned as holding lands here. The Inglebys and Nevilles were afterwards proprietors; and various families have since held property here.

Little Burdon, situated to the east of Great Burdon, was formerly the property of the nuns of Neasham; and at the dissolution of the religious houses, its rents were valued at £5 5s. 4d. It was granted to James Lawson; and after having passed, in 1660, to Henry Stapleton and Mary his wife, and afterwards to Sir Henry Constable, viscount of Dunbar, it became the property of Richard Nelthorpe, Esq., who was attainted for high treason, when Bishop Crewe took the opportunity of seizing it as a forfeiture, and granted it on trust to his steward, Edward Arden, Esq.; but on the reversal of the attainder under William II., the bishop was compelled to restore the land with the arrears of rent. It is now the property of Morton John Davison, Esq.

COATHAM MUNDEVILLE township, including the manor of Greystones, comprises an area of 1,517 acres, and the property was rated for the county-rate in 1853 at £1,706. In 1801 it contained 172 inhabitants; in 1811, 151; in 1821, 184; in 1831, 175; in 1841, 188; and in 1851, 149. The Stockton and Darlington Railway passes through this township. This manor was held of the crown at a very early period by the Mundevilles, or Amundevilles; and Thomas de Amundeville, of Wotton, sold it to Gilfrid Russell, seneschal of Durham, who was, "upon his hopes of salvation, to provide and maintain one chaplain to celebrate mass daily in the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, of Cotum, for the soul's rest of Thomas de Amundeville, and his parents Ralph and Clarice, and of Richard Tingri, and of all the faithful departed;" with various penalties for non-observance. Russell afterwards released his right to the Bishop of Durham, from which time no further mention occurs of this chapel, the site of which is now unknown. The property here was afterwards much divided. The manor of Greystones, including Nesbit, otherwise Humbleton, is situated in the north-western portion of the township, and contains 564 statute acres. In ancient times it was the property of the priory of Durham; but it was subsequently held by the Kelynghalls; and after passing through various proprietors, is now the property of Mrs. Surtees, of Mainsforth, Mr. Mowbray Darling, and others.

The Hamlet of Coatham Mundeville is situated on the great north road four miles north of Darlington; and comprises a few respectable residences, an inn, and some tradesmen's shops. This township was formerly included in Stockton Ward; but by the provisions of the Act 9th George IV, c. 43, it was transferred to Darlington Ward.

Coatham Hall Garth, with a large and convenient house, which belonged successively to the Dalstons, the Nortons, and the Hodgsons, is now the property and residence of H. P. Smith, Esq. Coatham House is the property and residence of Mowbray Darling, Esq.

HAUGHTON-LE-SKERNE, a township, in the parish of the same name, comprises an area of 1,898 acres, and its annual value is £4,252. The population in 1801, inclusive of Morton Palms, was 308; in 1811, 398; in 1821, 466; in 1831, Haughton alone, 710; in 1841, 576; and in 1851, 474 souls. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway, and the Stockton and Darlington Railway, both extend into this township. From Boldon Book, we learn, that in Magna Halghton the villains held nine ox-gangs at 12d. rent each, and worked for the lord at certain times. Ten cottagers paid 5s. 6d., and each gave to the lord nine days' work in a year, and worked at the autumn tillage and in hay harvest. Walter de Halctou is mentioned as farmer of the demesne. Two tofts were in the bishop's hands. There were five tenants in Parva Halghton; and Adam de Selby held the demesne in farm. The pasture, with the sheep, were reserved by the bishop, but Adam had liberty to keep 100 sheep there as long as he was farmer. Burdon Mill paid 12s. for the mill-pond, which was on Haughton land. Some time after the date of Boldon Book, Little Haughton was granted by Bishop Pudsey to William, son of William, son of King Stephen." At the time of Hatfield's survey, Robert Plomer, John Ingilby, William Walworth, John of Morton, and Richard le Scrop, occur as free tenants; and there were seven bond tenants, who rendered various services and money payments. Property was long held here by the Ingebys, Wakerfields, and Graystones, and a small portion was possessed by the Earls of Westmoreland. Little Haughton continued the property of the Le Scrop family from the period of Hatfield's Survey till the reign of Elizabeth, when it was transferred by marriage to the Pudseys, of Barford. It afterwards passed by purchase to the family of Barnes, and subsequently by marriage to the Chaytors and Killinghalls. The principal landowners at present are Captain Colling, Francis James Crow, Esq., John Richmond, Esq., and others.

The Village of Haughton-le-Skerne is situated on the north bank of the river, about one-and-a-half mile east-north-east from Darlington; it is built on a dry and gravelly soil, and has a spacious thoroughfare. Here are several good residences, a post-office, three public-houses, with the customary tradesmen's shops. A corn-mill on the Skerne, was, some years ago, converted into a shoe-thread manufactory, and now affords employment to a number of persons.

The Church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, consists of a nave, chancel, and western tower, but no aisles. There was anciently a guild in this church, dedicated to St. Mary, for the use of which John Esh, in 1498, "took of the lord one cottage, with its appurtenances." A circular arch connects the nave with the chancel, which, with the communion table, are panelled with oak in the Gothic style. The pulpit and reading desk are of oak, as are also the seats in the nave. There is a gallery at the west end of the church; and an organ, purchased by voluntary subscription, was erected in 1841. The living, rectorial in the deanery of Darlington, and patronage of the Bishop of Durham, is valued in the Liber Regis at £53 6s. 8d.: gross income, £1,582. The glebe consists of upwards of 249 acres, of which the greater part lies in the township of Haughton, and the rest in Sadberge and Coatham Mundeville. The rector is generally entitled to tithes; and possesses a copyhold manor extending over a part of the township of Haughton. Rev. Dr. Sandinell, rector; Rev. James Simpson, curate.

The Parsonage is a spacious, convenient house, with an excellent garden and shrubbery.

Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, which was erected in 1825, and to which there is a school attached.

The National School will be found described in our account of the charities of the parish.

Haughton House is the residence of William Bewick, Esq., the highly talented historical and portrait painter. See page 372. Red Hall, the residence of Captain Collings, is situated on the south bank of the Skerne, and was erected in 1830, from a design by Wyatt.

Charities.—Mrs. Alexander, by will, dated February 10th, 1789, bequeathed £40 to the rector and churchwardens, the interest to be distributed to the poor of the village of Haughton annually on Christmas-eve. This sum having been applied in building cottages for the poor, 40s. a year is paid out of the rates to the churchwardens, who distribute it at Christmas, in sums of 1s. and 2s., to the poor of the township. Thomas Barker, in 1686, left 20s. per annum to this parish. For particulars, see page 369. A close in Sadberge, containing between two and three acres, and known by the name of the Charity Field, is charged with 9s. per annum for the poor of the parish. This sum, with the produce of Hall's Charity and Barker's Charity, amounting to £2 13s., is divided at Easter among the several townships of the parish (except Sadberge), in the following manner:—Haughton, 11s.; Barmpton, 10s. 5d.; Burdon, 7s. 11d.; Coatham Mundeville, 9s. 10d.; Morton, 4s. 8d.; Whessoe and Beaumont Hill, 9s. 2d.; these sums are distributed to poor persons at 1s. and 2s. each. Certain lands, called Richardson's Closes, in Sadberge, are charged with £1 7s. annually for the poor of the parish. This charity is now lost. Elizabeth Hall charged a field, called the Intack, with the yearly payment of 50s. for the poor. Of this sum, 26s. is laid out in bread, by 6d. in each week, and distributed at the church every Sunday afternoon; and the remaining 24s. is distributed in money at Easter. Schools.—A subscription was commenced, about the year 1768, for the institution of a day-school at Haughton; and, with the help of £50 from Lord Crewe's trustees, £145 15s. was raised. This sum remained in the rector's hands, at interest, till 1808, when it was expended, with Mrs. Alexander's Charity, mentioned above, in building poor-houses for the parish, on the rector's waste and part of the glebe. The sum of £4 10s. is paid half-yearly to the rector, by the churchwardens and overseers, for these cottages, together with 1s. per annum ground-rent; and a memorandum states, that £140 of the above money belongs to the school, and £40 to the poor. In the jubilee year (October 29th, 1809), a Sunday-school was established by subscription; and in 1815, a commodious school-house was built on the glebe, by leave of the bishop, including separate rooms for the boys and girls, and a dwelling for the master. The cost of this erection, including fixtures, was £368 17s. Some additions were afterwards made to the master's house, the expense of which, £48, was paid by the master; but £27 was repaid to him from money given by Mrs. Dobree, and other contributors. A small garden, and other conveniences, have since been added. The schoolmaster and mistress receive £7 per annum, as the interest of the above £140; besides an augmentation from the subscribers to the Sunday-school. All the children of the parish who apply are admitted to the day school, at a reduced quarterage, varying from 2s. to 5s. From fifty to seventy children are in attendance, who are taught reading, writing, and accounts, on the national system. They find their own paper; the master provides slates and pencils, and the rector furnishes many of them with books. The Sunday-school is attended by about 180 children.

MORTON, with MORTON PALMS, forms a township, comprising an area of 1,316 acres, and rated to the county in 1853 at £1,788 10s. The population was returned with that of Haughton till 1821; in 1831, it contained 83 inhabitants; in 1841, 73; and in 1851, 68. The Stockton and Darlington Railway extends into this township. Great Morton is situated on the south side of the road from Darlington to Yarm, and Morton Palms on the north. The former was possessed at an early period by the Surtees family; and, on the division of their property in 1552, was assigned to Marmaduke Surtees, whose son sold a third of it to Thomas and Henry Story. It is now held by Morton John Davison, Esq. From Hatfield's survey, we learn that John de Morton held lands here, supposed to be the same as those now known as Morton Palms. This estate was afterwards held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed to the Garths, Morlands, Blacketts, and Turners, coming ultimately to George Surtees, Esq., who is sole proprietor, with the exception of Maiden Dale Farm, which is the property of Joseph Forster, Esq., of Darlington.

The Village of Morton is three miles east of Darlington, and consists of a public-house and several cottages.

Directory.—The farmers are John Byers, Miles Coatsworth, Barbara Gibbon, Lane Gibbon, James Pallister, and James Shotton.

SADBERGE is a township in this parish, comprising 2,050 acres, the property of Captain Pennyman, John Richmond, Esq., John Harris, Esq., and others, and its annual value is £1,765 10s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 391; in 1811, 396; in 1821, 315; in 1831, 403; in 1841, 372; and in 1851, 371 souls. This township was a separate and independent wapentake from a very early period, and by some authors has been erroneously designated an earldom. It became annexed to the palatinate during the episcopacy of Bishop Pudsey, who purchased it, with the earldom of Northumberland, for life, for the sum of £10,000, from Richard I., when that monarch was preparing for the crusades. By the terms of this purchase, which were confirmed by King John and the succeeding monarchs, Sadberge was governed by the bishops, through distinct officers, as sheriffs, escheators, and coroner, who, though sometimes holding offices for both the county palatine and this lordship, were always appointed by distinct patents. During Bishop Bury's episcopate it enjoyed the privileges of a wapentake and was divided into two wards, distinguished by the names east and west, and containing Barnard Castle, Marwood, Cleatham, Eggleston, Langton, Middleton-in-Teesdale, Newbiggin, Stainton, and other places in the south-western extremity of the county. It is difficult to fix the exact extent of the jurisdiction of Sadberge; but the following villis and manors are expressly stated to have owed service to it:—Hurworth, Neasham, Morton, Middleton, West Hartburn, Trefford, Egglecliffe, Aslakby, Stainton-le-Street, Little Burdon and Coatham Mundeville, Seaton-Carow and Owton. Under the bishop's commission, the judge's itinerant held a court of assize at Sadberge, which appears to have been continued till at least the middle of the fifteenth century. There was also a county court, presided over by the Sheriff of Sadberge, and where causes were tried, fines of lands levied, &c.; this court existed till the commencement of the seventeenth century. There was a gaol for prisoners at Sadberge, and sundry manors and lands were held in it by the special service of maintaining the same, and supporting the prisoners. From the ancient records it appears that the burgages were held in free borough tenure, by service at the borough court, and the lands by military service and in soccage.

The Village of Sadberge occupies the summit of an eminence, on the road between Darlington and Stockton, and four miles east-by-north from the former place. There are several well-built houses in the village, three inns, and the usual tradesmen's shops. Here is also a tannery, which has been established for many years. All that remains of the ancient privileges of the place is the county pinfold, to which strayed cattle are sometimes brought from distant parts of the county.

The Chapel, dedicated to St. Andrew, occupies a portion of the site of the ancient castle, gaol, and court house, and consists of a low nave and chancel, which appear to have been built with the old square stones of the previous buildings. It contains 300 sittings, and has a cemetery attached. The chapel is in connection with Haughton-le-Skerne parish, hence called Haughton-le-Skerne-cum-Sadberge. On the next vacancy of the living Sadberge will become an independent rectory, in accordance with the provisions of an act of parliament, passed about twenty years ago. The living is a curacy, not in charge nor certified, in the patronage of the rector of Haughton, and incumbency of the Rev. David Piper.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here.

Charities.—A subscription was commenced in 1789, by the wealthier inhabitants of Sadberge, for the establishment of a School. Bishop Barrington gave £20 towards the erection of a school-house, and £5 yearly towards a Sunday-school, which is attended by all the children in the neighbourhood, and who are taught on the national system. The cost of the building was upwards of £63. A salary of £5 a-year is paid to the master, in addition to a small contribution from between twenty and thirty day scholars. There is an annual donation of £5 from the trustees of Lord Crewe's charities, who also contributed to the building.—Francis Harrison, Mrs. Davison, Thomas Barker, and others, by deed, dated 1730, gave £37, the interest to be distributed to the poor of Sadberge. This amount was placed in the hands of the late Sir John Pennymann, Bart., November 8th, 1770; but there is no record of any interest having been paid.—For Barker's charity and Buck's charity, see pp. 367-370. The sum received on account of these charities (£6 5s.) is distributed at a vestry meeting, with other charity money, in sums varying from 1s. to 3s. The price of a cottage, sold in 1786 for £14, and £20 bequeathed by the Rev. Matthew Soulby, in 1759, were delivered to the rector, Dr. Bandinel, who agreed to pay £3 yearly on account thereof, which is given away with the other charity money. This last named charity is called the Poor Stock.

WHESOE and BEAUMONT HILL form a township in this parish, the property of Sir Charles Hardinge, Bart., the heirs of the late Robert Sheraton, Mr. James Pallister, and others. It comprises an area of 1,412 acres, and its annual value is £2,112 3s. The population in 1801 was 77; in 1811, 82; in 1821, 90; in 1831, 123; in 1841, 118; and in 1851, 110 souls. The Stockton and Darlington, and the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railways pass through this township. The manor of Whesoe is held by lease or copy of court roll under the see of Durham. At the time of the compilation of the Boldon Book, there were here fourteen tenants, each holding an oxgang at 12d. rent, and certain prescribed services. When Hatfield's Survey was made, the services of the bond tenants had been commuted for monied rents, in all 20s. 8d. In 1430, the celebrated Roger Thornton, of Newcastle, died seised of a messuage and two oxgangs of land, each containing twenty-four acres. Lands were held here, for a considerable period, by the Parkinsons and Shepherds; and we find Sir John Lowther, the first Viscount Lonsdale, recorded as owner of Beaumont Hill in 1684.

Whesoe is situated on the west side of the great north road, and Beaumont Hill on the east, two miles north of Darlington. Harrogate, nearly the same distance north of Darlington, is a hamlet, consisting of Harrogate House, the residence of John Teasdale, Esq., an inn, and a few cottages.

HEIGHINGTON PARISH.

This parish, which comprises the townships of Coatsay Moor, Heighington, Midridge-Grange, Redworth, School-Aycliffe, and Wallworth, is bounded on the north by St. Helen's and St. Andrew's Auckland, on the west and south-west by Gainford, on the south by Houghton-le-Skerne and Darlington, and on the east by Aycliffe.

COATSAY MOOR, a township, situated about two miles south of Heighington, contains 434 acres, and its annual value is £277. Its population in 1801 was 9; in 1811, 17; in 1821, 12; in 1831, 13; in 1841, 10; and in 1851, 21 souls. The estate is leasehold, under the dean and chapter, and has long been held by the Lozelures, and their heirs the Wilkinsons; R. W. Wilkinson, Esq. being the present proprietor and lord of the manor. The township is divided into two farms, which are occupied by Mr. Thomas Applegarth and Mr. G. Parkinson.

HEIGHINGTON township is the property of various owners, and is held by freehold, leasehold, and copyhold tenure. Its area, inclusive of Broom Dykes and Houghton Bank, comprises 1,743 acres, and the valuation of the property for the county rate in 1853 was £3,013 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 543; in 1811, 502; in 1821, 557; in 1831, 767; in 1841, 695; and in 1851, 685. We are informed by Boldon Book that there were sixteen villians in Heighington, and five cottagers, who contributed certain payments in kind and various services. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, the free tenants had considerably increased, and the services of the bond tenants were commuted for payments. The property in this township has long been much divided.

The Village of Heighington stands on an elevated limestone-hill, which slopes gradually to the south, about six miles north-north-west of Darlington. The houses surround a large open square, in the centre of which is a pant, or water fountain, erected by the late vicar, the Rev. S. Gamden, and the cistern of which is capable of containing about 10,000 gallons. The village contains four public-houses, and the customary tradesmen's shops. A general auction sale is intended to be held here every half year, the first was held on the 10th October, 1854.

The Church, situated on the northern side of the village green, is dedicated to St. Michael the Archangel, and is of Norman foundation, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, and western tower. The basin for holy water remains in the wall within the southern entrance. The oaken pulpit is a unique specimen of oak carving, having five compartments with delicate tracery, and bears the following inscription round the mouldings:—“ORATE P' A' I B. S. AL(EXAN)DRI FLETTCHAR ET AGNETIS UXOR EJUS,” a request which proves very clearly that the pulpit dates from before the Reformation. There are galleries on the north and south sides, and at the west end. A new organ was erected by subscription in 1852, and the tower clock face was renewed in the following year. The tower, which contains three bells, dedicated respectively to Our Lady, St. Peter, and St. Paul, commands a very extensive view over a considerable portion of the counties of Durham and Yorkshire. There are several chaste and elegant mural tablets in this church, and two effigies, apparently those of females, lie in the churchyard. The living of Heighington was anciently a rectory, and was granted, during the episcopate of Bishop Kirkham, to the priory of Durham, for “the maintenance of hospitality and relief of the poor,” on condition of maintaining a perpetual vicarage, with an endowment of thirty marks per annum. It is now a vicarage, in the deanery of Darlington, and a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Durham, valued in the Liber Regis at £12 14s. 9½d.; gross income, £265. The corn tithes of Heighington belong to the ninth stall in Durham Cathedral, those of Redworth to the second, and those of Walworth to the eighth. The townships of Heighington and School-Aycliffe pay tithe of hay and small tithes to the vicar in kind. Redworth pays tithe of hay and all small tithes, excepting that certain belonging to Robert Surtees, Esq., and some others pay moduses or prescripts in lieu of hay tithe, amounting altogether to 5s. 7d. Newbiggins pays small tithes, and a modus of 5s. in lieu of hay. West Thickley pays 40s. in lieu of all vicarial tithes. Walworth pays small tithe, and a modus of 26s. 8d. in lieu of hay. Killerby, small tithe, and 8s. in lieu of hay. The dean and chapter have given, in augmentation of the living, a rent-charge out of Killerby tithes, £10; Aycliffe corn tithes, £50; a tithe-barn and ground at Heighington, £4; total annual value, £64. The parish register commences in 1570. The Rev. W. Beckett, B.A., vicar.

The Vicarage House is situated near the church; the glebe land consists only of the garden and premises adjoining, and the churchyard.

Here is a Methodist Chapel, erected in 1815.

Broom Dykes is a village, five-and-a-half-miles north-west from Darlington. Houghton Bank is a hamlet, about half a mile north-west of Broom Dykes.

Charities.—The School.—Elizabeth Jennison, by indenture, October 1601, granted to William Jennison and seven others, their heirs and assigns, the yearly rent of £11, upon trust, that they should dispose of the same for the yearly maintenance of such schoolmasters, teaching and instructing children within the parish of Heighington, in grammar and the principles of the Christian religion, as should from time to time be elected and confirmed according to prescribed rules; the dean and chapter to appoint the master, and the bishop to have the supervision of the school, and to have the power to remove the master for misconduct or neglect. The poor children were to pay 3d. on entering, and 2d. per quarter. £10 of the rent charge was to be paid to the master, and the remaining £1 to be distributed amongst the poor of the parish. In 1827, £101 2s. was paid for a close, called Brecking Hill, partly with £70 given by the Rev. Edward Kirby, vicar, and partly with £25 belonging to the poor of the township and of the parish of Heighington. Bishop Talbot, on October 3rd, 1724, demised to Exton Sayer, LL.D., and four others, for their lives, two closes, called the Waste and Halliwell Close, half a rood of land, and a school-house erected thereon, at the yearly rent of 4s. to be let at the best advantage, and the rent paid to the schoolmaster. In 1770, the Rev. Robert Blacklin was appointed master by the dean and chapter, and continued to receive the rent charge of £10, the rents of Brecking Hill (out of which £2 9s. was paid annually to the poor), and the land demised by the bishop in 1724. In 1808, complaints were made of his conduct as a schoolmaster, and that he had neglected the education of the children, and a sentence of ejection was read in the church. To this he paid no attention, but continued to receive the endowments of the school until 1810, when, in consequence of threatened legal proceedings, he gave up the leasehold premises; and Robert Surtees, Esq. of Mainsforth, by whom the rent charge of £10 was payable, withheld that payment. On possession of the leasehold premises being gained, Bishop Barrington, September 8th, 1811, demised the site of the school-house (which had fallen down) on the same terms as those of the lease of 1724; and in 1812, a school-house was erected by subscription, at a cost of nearly £300. At a meeting of the trustees, held January 24th, 1829, Mr. Blacklin agreed, on condition that he should receive £100 of the arrears of the rent-charge immediately, and £20 a year for his life, to resign possession of the lands, and give up his appointment to the dean and chapter. The school was enlarged in 1831. The present income of the school is derived from the rent charge of £10, first mentioned; the freehold premises purchased in 1627, producing about £20 per annum, out of which £2 9s. is charged for the poor; the leasehold premises demised in 1811, consisting of three fields, let at a rent of about £22, the school and a garden attached to it, which is occupied by the master rent free. For the income derived from the leasehold premises as above mentioned, all children of the parish, of the poorest class, by certificate from any of the trustees, are taught at 2d. per week, children of the middle classes at 4d., and those of farmers and more substantial persons at 6d. They are instructed in reading, writing, and accounts; and some of them were formerly taught the rudiments of Latin, but this is now discontinued. The average attendance is about 100. Thomas Dickinson, master.—Brabant's Charity: (See Brancepeth, page 234). The sum of 19s. (1s. being deducted for land-tax) is added to the annual distribution.—Colling's Charity: William Colling, Esq., by will, 6th February, 1842, gave to the vicar and churchwardens of the parish of Heighington, to be by them invested at interest, the sum of £100; such interest to be distributed yearly at Christmas amongst those of the poor people of the township whom the said vicar and churchwardens, or a majority of them shall think proper. The proceeds are given away as directed. Jennison's Charity: The sum of £1 yearly, demised by Elizabeth Jennison, as above stated, is received from the owner of the property charged, Mrs. Surtees, of Mainsforth, and is distributed with the other charities.—March's Charity: John March, merchant, of Newcastle, on June 5th, 1595, bequeathed £100, to be placed in the town chamber, and to be lent every second year to the honestest and least wealthy of the young men of the fellowship of merchants, or any other free burgess inhabiting the town, upon good security, with £10 interest for the use, half of which was to be distributed to the poor of Newcastle, and the other half to the poor of the parish of Heighington. Since 1660, the annual sum of £4 has been paid by the mayor and burgesses of Newcastle, in respect of this bequest, and is given away by the minister and churchwardens of Heighington, on New Year's Day, with the other charity money, in sums varying from 1s. to 5s.—Sundry Charities: The whole of the charity money arising from the sources above mentioned, with the exception of Colling's Charity, amounts annually to £8 8s.; of which £1 2s., part of the £2 9s. paid out of Brecking Hill, is appropriated to the poor of the township of Heighington only, and the remaining £7 6s. is divided among the other six townships of the parish in proportion to the rentals, and given away to poor persons of those townships by the respective churchwardens or overseers.

MIDRIDGE GRANGE township adjoins that of Midridge, in the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, and is said to derive its name from Middle ridge, as being situated on elevated ground, rising abruptly between two runners of water. It comprises an area of 928 acres, and the value of the property rated in 1853, amounted to £1,212 5s. The population in 1801 was 41; in 1811, 89; in 1821, 58; in 1831, 55; in 1841, 40; and in 1851, 54 souls. It is the property of the trustees of the late Earl of Eldon; and the tithes are paid to the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland. Midridge Grange is first mentioned in Hatfield's survey, when it and the lands were valued at £28 9s 8d. In later times it became the property of the Byerleys, one of which family, Colonel Anthony Byerley, who commanded a regiment in the service of Charles I., garrisoned his house at Midridge for the king, where his troops were long remembered as Byerley's Bulldogs. He compounded for his estates for £2,000, and, dying April 22nd, 1667, was succeeded by his son, Robert Byerley, who represented the county of Durham in the parliaments of 1685 and 1688, and was afterwards member for Knaresborough. On his decease, in May 1717, the estate was transferred by marriage to the Jervises, and afterwards to the O'Carrolls, the latter of whom sold it in 1811, to Lord Viscount Barrington. It afterwards became the property of the late Earl of Eldon. The township is about five miles south-south-east of Bishop Auckland, in the vicinity of the Stockton and Darlington Railway.

Directory.—John Wood, corn miller, Grange Mill; and the farmers are J. Cook, Thomas Gill, Red House; F. Hughf; and John Robson, Hawthorn.

REDWORTH, including Newbiggin and Old Thickley, comprises an area of 1,840 acres; and the principal landowners are Robert Surtees, Esq.; the trustees of the late Earl of Eldon; Sir George Musgrave, and others. The mines and minerals belong to the respective owners of the soil. In 1853, the property of the township was valued at £3,549 4s. 2d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 322; in 1811, 284; in 1821, 307; in 1831, 370; in 1841, 351; and in 1851, 322 souls. At the date of the compilation of Boldon Book, there were sixteen farmers and three cottagers; and at the time of Hatfield's survey, the whole vill was held by free tenures. Lands were formerly held here by the Redworths, the Heighingtons, and the Eures; and a pasture called Rowmore, was held by the Scrops.

The Village of Redworth is situated one mile north of Heighington, and five miles south-south-east of Bishop Auckland. It occupies the northern side of a lofty swell of limestone, and comprises Redworth House, the residence of Robert Surtees, Esq., two inns, a couple of farm houses, and a cluster of tiled cottages. Shackleton Hill, to the east of Redworth House, was thought by Hutchinson to be the remains of a Danish fort, but there is no evidence to bear out this supposition; it is now covered with trees.

Newbiggin is a hamlet, manor, and constablewick in this township, situated about half a mile north-west of Redworth. In Boldon Book and Hatfield's Survey, it is called the New Vill next Thickley; and was formerly possessed by the Nevilles, who granted it, with Scole-Acle, to the Bynchesters, from whom it passed to the Burnynghalls, and from them to the Crosyers, coming ultimately to the Surtees family, the present proprietors.

Old or West Thickley is a hamlet and constablewick, about a mile north-west from Redworth. It formerly belonged to the Tonge family, but is now the property of Sir George Musgrave, Bart., and of Robert Surtees, Esq.

SCHOOL AYCLIFFE township is the property of Robert Surtees, Esq., and contains 524 statute acres. Its population in 1801, was 41; in 1811, 34; in 1821, 37; in 1831, 32; in 1841, 25; and in 1851, 31 souls. The annual value is £660. This small township is supposed to have derived its name from a school established here at a very early period by the priors of Durham; and gave its name to a resident family, who are mentioned both in Boldon Book and in Hatfield's Survey. It was afterwards possessed by the Nevilles, the Bynchestres, the Forstres, the Smithsons, and the Morecrofts; becoming ultimately much divided. At Sun Pasture, in this township, is the junction of the Stockton and Darlington and Clarence Railways.

WALWORTH, a township, about three miles south-west of Heighington, and five miles north-west of Darlington, is the property of the Rev. E. H. Hopper and Mrs. Aylmer, of Walworth Castle. It is divided into two districts, called High and Low Walworth, and comprises an area of 2,132 acres. The annual value is £1,859 10s. In 1801, it contained 137 inhabitants; in 1811, 152; in 1821, 162; in 1831, 155; in 1841, 152; and in 1851, 142. The Hansards are the first recorded possessors of Walworth; and in their time there were two great courts held here in the year, viz., at Easter and Michaelmas, with other lesser courts every three weeks, the profits of which were 2s. per annum. It was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Ayscoughs, and was sold by them, in the sixteenth century, to Thomas Jennison, Esq., in whose family it remained till about the middle of the last century, when it was sold to Matthew Stephenson, Esq., of Newcastle, for £16,000. It was afterwards purchased by John Harrison, Esq., whose only daughter and heiress intermarried with Arthur Aylmer, Esq., general in the army; and the estate is now vested in his widow, who occupies the castle.

Walworth Castle was constructed from the ruins of a previous edifice, by Thomas Jennison, Esq., above-mentioned, and is a stately and spacious building, with a southern aspect, commanding fine views of the surrounding country. The grounds are well-wooded with beautiful trees, some of which are of great size and age. Amongst them are two very extraordinary horse chestnut trees, standing about thirteen yards apart, having branches of great weight and size touching and taking root in the soil in several places, like the famous Indian banyan tree. The branches of both trees meet, and cover an elliptical space of about 150 yards in circumference. Here is a very neat conservatory, which is kept in excellent order by Mr. Noble, the gardener.

HURWORTH PARISH.

This parish, which comprises the townships of Hurworth and Neasham, is bounded on the north by Haughton-le-Skerne, on the north-west and west by Darlington, on the south by a small portion of Sockburn and the river Tees, and on the east by Dinsdale.

HURWORTH township is principally the property of W. V. Wrightson, Esq., James N. Collyer, Esq., Robert Surtees, Esq., Rev. George H. Wilkinson, Mr. Pease, Thomas Wilkinson, Esq., and Mrs. Featherston. It contains 2,355 statute acres, and its annual value is £5,566 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 661; in 1811, 692; in 1821, 811; in 1831, 1,017; in 1841, 1,235; and in 1851, 1,154 souls. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway extends into this township. There are two brick and tile works at Hurworth-place, which were established in 1839, and are carried on by Sir W. R. C. Chaytor, Bart., and Mr. Robert Coates. Hurworth was the property of the Tailbois family at a very early period; and on the acquisition of Sadberge by the Bishop of Durham, they held of the see by the twelfth part of a knight's fee and suit once every three weeks at the court at Sadberge. On the demise of Robert Lord Tailbois without issue, in 1540 the manor and advowson were sold to Sir Leonard Beckwith, of Selby, Yorkshire, for £266. They were subsequently sold for £330 to Henry Lawson, Esq., and George Ward, gentleman; and, after passing through the hands of various proprietors, became the property of the gentlemen above-mentioned.

The Village of Hurworth is pleasantly situated near the river Tees, three-and-a-half miles south-south-east of Darlington, and about one mile east of Croft Bridge. It extends for a considerable distance along the Tees, and the view on the opposite side of the river comprises a well-wooded amphitheatre, of about four miles in circumference. Many of the houses are well built, and the village is remarkable for its salubrity. It comprises a post-office, four public-houses, a police-station, and several shops. The environs of Hurworth are adorned with several spacious and elegant family mansions.

The Church is dedicated to All Saints, and stands on the south side of the road through the village, close to the bank of the Tees. It comprises a nave, aisles, chancel and western tower, the latter being the only portion of the old church now remaining, the other portions having been rebuilt in 1831-2. The cost of the restoration, by which upwards of 500 additional sittings were obtained, was £1,905 10s. 4d.; a good clock, purchased by a separate subscription, was also placed in the tower. The eastern window of the chancel is of stained glass, and is divided into five compartments, containing representations of our Saviour and the four evangelists. On the western front of the tower, are three shields of arms; the one on the right Neville's, the centre, Tailbois's, and that on the left Dacre's. The churchyard extends to the brink of the cliff washed by the Tees, and commands a fine view of the surrounding country. The living was in the patronage of the lords of Hurworth till the sale of the manor to Lawson and Ward, in 1607. Lawson's moiety descended to the Jennisons, and was sold by them to Dr. Johnson, rector of Hurworth, from whose descendants it descended to William Hogg, Esq. The other portion, in 1708, was the property of the Byerleys, of Midridge Grange, and was alienated to the Carrs, of Cocken. It was afterwards possessed by Sir Ralph Milbanke, Bart., by whom it was conveyed to Robert Hopper Williamson, Esq., recorder of Newcastle; and it is now the property of his son, the Rev. R. H. Williamson, rector of Hurworth, who has also acquired Hogg's moiety. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £27 5s. 5d.; gross income £699. The parish registers commence in 1559. The rector is lord of a small copyhold manor, and the glebe consists of sixty-three acres.

The Parsonage House occupies a pleasant situation on the bank of the river, and has a good garden attached.

The Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship in the village and at Hurworth-place; and the Primitive Methodists have also a small chapel at Hurworth.

The National School, erected in 1831, is an elegant stone building, with ornamental turrets at the north and south angles, and is situated at the west end of the village. At a meeting of the inhabitants of Hurworth, held 22nd July, 1770, resolutions were carried for the establishment of a school, the room for which was built by subscription on the waste. Another subscription was also raised, amounting to £128. 7s. for the purpose of obtaining a donation from the trustees of Lord Crewe's charities, from whom a sum of £148 17s. 6d. was afterwards received. With £215 of this money, four fields were purchased in Melsonby parish, Yorkshire, containing rather more than nine acres. The Rev. John Theakston, the surviving trustee, on the 12th June, 1829, executed a conveyance of the possessions of this endowment to eight new trustees, for the education and benefit of the poor of the parish of Hurworth, in such manner as should from time to time be determined upon by the trustees for the time being; and it was provided that the rector, if residing within the parish, should always act as a trustee, although not otherwise formally appointed. The property now left for the benefit of this school is as follows:—The four fields in Melsonby, let to a yearly tenant at the rent of £21; a field in Hurworth, let for £4; a sum of £30 in the saving's bank, and £10 in the hands of Captain Colling, for which interest has been paid at four per cent., £1 12s.; making a total sum of £26 12s. The expenses of the school are defrayed from this income, from subscriptions and collections at an annual sermon, and the amount of weekly pence paid by the scholars. The master receives a salary of £66 per annum, and £8 for teaching a Sunday-school. All the children of the parish are admitted to these schools on application to the master, on payment of 2d. a week. Robert Strickland and Mary Stead, teachers.

There is a Temperance Society in the village; and in February 1855, a society, called the Band of Hope, was formed for the purpose of training young persons in the principles of the Temperance Society. The Band of Hope is under the management of Mr. Benjamin Webster.

Hurworth Place is a village in this township, situated at the north end of Croft Bridge, three-and-three-quarters miles south of Darlington, and opposite to the village of Croft, in Yorkshire.* This place has rapidly increased in size and population since the formation of the Croft branch of the Stockton and Darlington Railway. The Tees is here crossed by Croft Bridge, which connects the counties of Durham and York, and consists of seven arches. The bridge is maintained at the joint expense of the two counties; the blue stone, or boundary, is over the third arch from the Durham side, and bears the following inscription:—"DUN CONTRIBVAT NORTH RID. COM. EBOR. ET COM. DUNEL. STATV. APUD. SESS. VTRG<sup>E</sup>. GEN. PAC. AN DO. 1673." South-east of Croft Bridge, is the bridge of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway, which was erected in 1840, from designs furnished by Henry Welsh, Esq., C.E. It consists of four beautiful oblique arches; the angle of obliquity being 50 deg., and the span of the arch on the oblique face 60 feet.

Charities.—William Andrews, in 1783, left £20 to the poor of Hurworth, then vested in the churchwardens, and producing 16s. yearly interest. This sum is in the hands of Mrs. Chapman, of Neasham, who pays the above interest. Poor's House.—Anthony Robinson, with the consent of the rector, Dr. Johnson, on the 16th July, 1730, in consideration of £58, sold the Church-row House, with its appurtenances, in Hurworth, late in his occupation, to William Harrison, for the use of the poor of the parish, according to the usage and custom of the said Church-row tenants, under the yearly rent of 4s. This house, after being held by the overseers of the township, as a poor house, at a rent of £10 10s., was, after the passing of the New Poor Law Act, found to be so dilapidated, that a meeting of the parishioners was called, at which it was resolved to sell the property by auction. It was purchased by the rector, Rev. R. H. Williamson; and the building having been pulled down, the site was added to the churchyard. The amount received for the building was £165, which was invested in the public funds, and yields £5 12s. 2d. yearly, which, with 16s. received on account of Andrews' Charity, noticed above, is distributed in sums of 1s. each to all who apply, belonging to or residing in, the parish of Hurworth.

Biography.—William Emmerson, the celebrated mathematician, was born at Hurworth, on the 14th May, 1701. From his father, Dudley Emmerson, who was a schoolmaster, he received the first rudiments of his education, and from him he also received a small estate of sixty or seventy pounds a year. It was not till his twentieth year, that he first displayed a predilection for scientific studies, and he then placed himself under masters at Newcastle and York, for improvement. After his return to Hurworth he commenced a school, but soon gave it up; and about his thirty-second year, married a niece of Dr. Johnson, the rector of Hurworth. He appears from this time to have devoted himself entirely to mathematical pursuits, contenting himself with the income of his paternal property. In his forty-second year, he published his work on Fluxions; and this was followed by several other works, the last of which appeared in 1776. He was also a constant correspondent of the * Croft is a parish, township, and village, on the south bank of the Tees, in the wapentake of East Gilling, north riding of Yorkshire. The population of the township, in 1851, was 447. The prosperity and importance of the village of Croft are chiefly owing to its mineral water, called Croft Spa, which is much frequented during the summer months.

Ladies' Diary, the Miscellanea Curiosa Mathematica, and other periodical works. During the greater part of his life, he enjoyed strong and uninterrupted health; but, as he advanced in years, he suffered severely from the stone and gravel. As he grew weaker, the violence of the disease abated, and he died, apparently without much pain, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was buried in Hurworth churchyard.

NEASHAM township comprises an area of 1,575 acres, and its annual value is £1,625 3s. Its population in 1801 was 206; in 1811, 268; in 1821, 313; in 1831, 331; in 1841, 364; and in 1851, 295 souls. The landowners are William Grey, Esq., James Cookson, Esq., Rev. Samuel Rowland, Chapman Ward, Esq., and Thomas Wilkinson, Esq. The manor of Neasham was formerly held by the barons of Greystock, of the Tailbois family, and also twenty-four ox-gangs of land there of the bishop in soccage, under the service of keeping the fifth part of the gaol at Sadberge. The estate afterwards passed to the Dacres and the Howards. Lord St. John, of Basing, is recorded as the possessor of the manor in 1670, and he afterwards sold it to Sir William Blackett, Bart., from whom it passed, in 1698, to Charles Turner, Esq., of Kirkleatham, and it is now the property of Thomas Wrightson, Esq. The estate was sold to William Wrightson, Esq., by a descendant of the Charles Turner, Esq., above mentioned; and it subsequently passed to the Cookson family, with whom it still remains.

The Village of Neasham is situated one mile east of Hurworth, on the bank of the Tees, which may be crossed here by a ferry, or by a broad and safe ford. It contains three public-houses, a school, a post-office, several good and substantial farm houses, and a number of cottages. There was formerly a Benedictine Priory here, some traces of whose foundations may yet be discovered in a field near the ford at the west of the village. It is supposed to have been founded by the Greystocks; and its earliest charter is a confirmation by Henry II. Several grants of land were made to it by the Fitz-Ralph and Conyer families, and Bishop Pudsey was also a benefactor to the house. At the time of the suppression of the monastic institutions, the community consisted of six members, and the revenue of the priory was valued, according to Dugdale, at £20 17s. 7d.; and by Speed, at £26 9s. 9d. It was granted, 32nd Henry VIII., to James Lawson, having been surrendered into the king's hands in the preceding year, by Joan Lawson, the last prioress. It was transferred by marriage from the Lawsons to the Braithwaites and Jennisons; and was afterwards possessed by the Pearsons, the Cockers, and others. The present proprietor is Thomas Wilkinson, Esq., of Neasham Abbey, a large modern mansion, occupying the site of the old priory.

Neasham Hall, the seat and property of James Cookson, Esq., is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the river, and commands delightful views over the picturesque country by which it is surrounded.

SOCKBURN PARISH.

That portion of the parish of Sockburn which lies within the county of Durham, is bounded on the north-east by Dinsdale, on the north-west by Hurworth, and on the west, south, and east by the Tees. It thus occupies a peninsula, formed by the windings of the river. The other portion of the parish, comprising the townships of Girsby and Over Dinsdale, is on the opposite side of the Tees, and consequently in the north riding of Yorkshire.

DINSDALE (Over) township is situated in the wapentake of Allertonshire, and north riding of Yorkshire, and is the property of the Rev. William S. Temple and Mr. William Curry, each of whom claim the manorial rights of his own property. It comprises an area of 805 acres, and its rateable value is £972 10s. The population has fluctuated between 1801 and 1851, from 51 to 74 souls. This township was anciently possessed by the Conyers family; the Girlingtons also held lands here, and it afterwards passed to the Wards of Hurworth.

Directory.—John Leonard Hammond, Esq., Over Dinsdale Hall; and the farmers are John Emmerson, Dinsdale Grauge; John Pallister, Hall House; and William Wright, Low Moor Bottom.

GIRSBY, a township in the same wapentake and riding as Over Dinsdale, is principally the property of William Surtees Raine, Esq., Christopher Deighton, Esq., and the trustees of the late John Darnton, Esq. It contains 1,180 acres, and six farms. The population in 1851 was 101 souls. This township formed part of the possessions of the Conyers family, by whom it was alienated to the Talbots. There was anciently a chapel at Girsby; and the new parish church has been erected here.

The Parish Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a plain oblong building, with round headed windows, erected in lieu of the old church, situated at Sockburn. The parish register commences in 1588. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the deanery of Stockton, and patronage of the master of Sherburn Hospital. It is valued in the Liber Regis at £3 18s. 14d; gross income about £100 per annum. The glebe consists of a parsonage house, unfit for residence, and about a rood of garden land. Rev. William H. Elliott, M.A., vicar.

SOCKBURN, a township, in the parish of the same name, about seven miles south-east by south of Darlington, comprises an area of 653 statute acres; and its annual value is £902 13s. 4d. It is the property of Henry Collingwood Blackett, Esq., who is also lord of the manor. The population in 1801 was 34; in 1811, 37; in 1821, 43; in 1831, 50; in 1841, 42; and in 1851, 43 souls. The manor of Sockburn, is, as has been stated above, a long projecting peninsula, the most southern point of the county, around which the Tees sweeps with its swift clear waters; and, from its isolated position, long continued to maintain its secluded character. A narrow carriage road was the only approach to the church and manor from the north; whilst the inhabitants of the Yorkshire portion of the parish had no means of attending service except by fording or crossing the Tees in boats. The bridge, erected a few years ago at Dinsdale, as above noticed, has now obviated this difficulty. The Roman road from Sadberge into Yorkshire crossed the river at this place by a ford. Surtees, with his true feeling of nature, describes, in a few short sentences, the character of this sweet valley:—"Two families of ancient gentry, and the little convent of Neasham, possessed the whole of this green peninsula. The minute parochial divisions of the district prove its early settlement and cultivation. No fairer spot could attract the notice of a Norman soldier; and nowhere were his descendants more likely to transmit their possessions in deep hereditary peace. The knights of the Tees might mingle in the border warfare; but the bugle horn of the assailants could seldom startle the inmates of their quiet halls. Their mansions stood without tower or fort. Dinsdale had only its fosse; and Sockburn on its level lawn was guarded only by the circling sweep of the Tees. The sale of the estates to wealthy families, already possessed of hereditary seats, has occasioned, within this last century, the desertion of these ancient halls and quiet fields, which now breathe a spirit of even deeper retirement." The earliest historical event connected with the parish of Sockburn, as quoted in Lambard's dictionary from the chronicles of Lindisfarne, is, that while the see was in Holy Island, Highbald was consecrated bishop at Sockbyry, after the death of Cynwulfe, in 780. It is also related that Snaculf, the son of Cykell, before 1015, gave Sockburgh, Morton, and other places, to the prior and monks of Durham. Sockburn was the property of the Conyers family at a very early period, and we find that its church was given by them to Sherburn Hospital. It continued in the possession of this family till 1653, when William Conyers, Esq., dying without male issue, the estate was transferred by marriage to the Talbots, who alienated to Sir William Blackett, Bart., of Newcastle, and it is now the property of his descendants.

The family of Conyers is one of the oldest in the north, and claims, though of Norman name, to be older than the Norman conquest. Its founders were stout warriors, and one of them, Roger, was made by the Conqueror, constable of Durham Castle, and keeper of the arms of the soldiers therein; a post afterwards secured to him by bishop Carileph, and to his family in perpetuo. Another Roger Conyers, it was, who compelled the intruder, Comyn, who had seized on the temporalities of the see, and set the bishop at defiance, to submission; gave the bishop shelter in his house, and afterwards led him in triumph into Durham, where Comyn was glad to come down on his knees, and in humble penitence to sue to the prelate for pardon. "But the manor of Sockburn is most remarkable," observes William Howitt, "for being the location of one of those worm or dragon stories so prevalent in these northern counties. The manor is still held under the Bishop of Durham by knight service, and the following ceremony. At the first entrance of the bishop, the Lord of Sockburn, or his agent, meets him in the middle of the Tees when the water is fordable, otherwise on Croft Bridge, when he presents a falchion to the bishop, as an emblem of his temporal power, and repeats the following words:—‘My Lord Bishop, I here present you with the falchion, wherewith the champion Conyers slew the worm, dragon, or fiery flying serpent, which destroyed man, woman, and child; in memory of which, the king then reigning gave him the manor of Sockburn, to hold by this tenure, that, upon the very first entrance of every bishop into the county, this falchion should be presented.’ The bishop then takes the falchion in his hand, and immediately returns it to the person that presented it, wishing the lord of Sockburn health and a long enjoyment of the manor. In the ancient pedigree of the family of the Conyers, it is set forth, that—‘Sir John Conyer, who slew the monstrous, venomous and poysonous wyvern, ask, or worm, which overthrew and devoured many people in fight, and the scent of the poison was so strong, that no person might abide it, and hee, by pr’vidence of Almighty God, overthrew it, and lieth buried at Sockburn, before the Conquest; but, before he did enterprise, went to the church in complete armour; and offered up his son to the Holy Ghost. Which monuments are yet to see; also the place where the serpent lay is called Greystone.’ Unfortunately for the correctness of some of the details of this legend, the falchion bears on one side of the hilt, three lions of England guardant, which were not borne till the reign of King John, and could not well therefore have belonged to a hero before the Conquest; and the figure in the church shown as that of the veritable Sir John Conyers who slew the worm, is in chain armour, has his legs rocussed, and therefore does not date higher than the crusades; and, in fact, is said by Leland to be the effigy of Sir John Conyers, who married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Lord Bromfleete, in the reign of Henry VI.”

This legend, like many others of the same kind, has excited the ingenuity of antiquarians to discover its meaning. Pennant thinks it refers to some victory over the Scots; Hutchinson imagines the dragon slain by Conyers was some Danish rover, who was sacking and plundering the country; and Surtees observes, “It would be no difficult matter, perhaps, with less of theory than is admitted into very grave works, to connect the falchion legend of Sockburn with the real exploits of the constable (Roger de Conyers) at Bishopton, Comyn playing the part of Dragon.” After all, however, the legend may refer to some actual fact now lost in the obscurity of by-gone ages; and we may very well suppose that an overgrown serpent might really exist, only deriving abundant exaggerations and sundry attributes as wings and flaming breath, from the terror of the ignorant populace.

The Old Parish Church of Sockburn, a few ruins of which now remain, consisted of a chancel, nave, north and south porches. The north porch contained the tombs of the Conyers, and several monumental brasses of that family, besides a blue marble slab, sculptured with a cross flory, a sword, and a shield bearing the family arms. The greater portion of this edifice was taken down on the erection of the new church at Girsby.

DARLINGTON WARD.—SOUTH-WEST DIVISION.

This division of Darlington Ward comprises the parishes of Cockfield, Gainford, Middleton-in-Teesdale, Staindrop, and Winston; the parochial chapelries of Barnard Castle and Whorlton, and a portion of the chapelry district of Ingleton. "The parish of Cockfield," observes a recent topographer, "participates in the coal trade of the Auckland district; and that of Middleton-in-Teesdale has long been celebrated, like the dale of the Wear, for the productiveness of its lead mines. The aspect of the country, in this part of the division, is bleak and hilly, consisting, for the most part, of lofty fells, similar to those by which Weardale is hemmed in. The river Tees, however, presents a striking contrast to the placid course of its neighbour stream, hurling itself over precipices and through chasms which might fitly acquire for it the character of an Alpine torrent. Even as it approaches the sylvan and cultivated parts of the division, it continues, in times of flood, which are frequent and sudden, to rush over its rocky channel with considerable turbulence and force. The scenery of the country, however, after leaving the imposing and sterile heights of Middleton Fells, becomes rapidly more beautiful; and no part of the county is more fertile and highly cultivated than the remainder of this division. Barnard Castle (with its ruined fortress), Middleton-in-Teesdale, and Staindrop are the market towns; the eastern portion of the division enjoying the advantage of proximity to the markets of Darlington and Bishop Auckland. The introduction of railway traffic may be shortly expected to facilitate more extensive intercourse, and provide an easier outlet for the products of the south-west division. Several elegant and pleasant mansions adorn the face of the country; whilst the princely castle of Raby, and that of Streatlam, are associated with historical recollections, not only of the county, but of the kingdom itself." This division comprises an area of 79,854 acres, and its population, in 1851, was 14,276 souls.

BARNARD CASTLE PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north by the parish of Staindrop, on the north-west and west by that of Middleton-in-Teesdale, on the south-west and south by the river Tees, and on the east by the chapelry of Whorlton. It comprises the townships of Barnard Castle, Marwood, Streatlam and Stainton, and Westwick.

BARNARD CASTLE township contains an area of 4,007 acres, and its annual value is £11,942. Its population in 1801 was 2,966; in 1811, 2,986; in 1821, 3,581; in 1831, 4,490; in 1841, 4,452; and in 1851, 4,608 souls. The principal landowner is the Duke of Cleveland, who is also lord of the manor.

Annals.—The tract of country stretching along the northern bank of the Tees, between Middleton-in-Teesdale on the west, and Coniscliffe on the east, anciently formed a part of the honour of Gainford, and belonged to the crown, being independent of the jurisdiction of the bishops of Durham. It suffered severely from the devastations of the Conqueror; and, after his departure, Malcolm of Scotland led his army down Teesdale towards Cleveland, and gave everything to fire and sword. Whilst suffering from this accumulation of misfortunes, the forests of Teesdale and Marwood, the lordships of Middleton-in-Teesdale and Gainford, with all their royal franchises, liberties, and immunities were granted by William Rufus to Guy de Baliol, who came into England with the Conqueror.

Barnard Baliol, son and successor of Guy, was a man of bold, active, and enterprising spirit, and the builder of the fortress which bore his name. This mighty structure, whose extensive and imposing ruins still remain, was erected between the years 1112 and 1132; and beneath the shelter of its strong and massive towers, the town of Barnard Castle sprang into existence. A burgage tenure was granted to the inhabitants by the founder of the castle, by which the townsmen were endowed with privileges similar to those granted to the burgesses of Richmond by Alan of Bretagne; and, in return, the inhabitants paid a certain rent to their lord. On the invasion of the Scots, 3rd Stephen, this Barnard was one of the northern barons who met in council at Thirsk, and was sent thence to David, the Scottish king, to persuade him to retreat. Not succeeding in this, he betook himself to arms, and shared in the honours gained by the English army at the Battle of the Standard. He was afterwards taken prisoner, with King Stephen, at the battle of Lincoln, in 1142.

Barnard Baliol, son of the above, succeeded his father before 1167; for we find that, in that year, he was fined for neglecting to certify the number of his knights' fees. His lands were shortly afterwards seized by the crown, and he was obliged to pay £100 for their restoration. He confirmed the privileges of the burgesses of Barnard Castle by a charter, which is still preserved in the town chest, written on vellum, in a bold legible hand, with a pendant seal of yellow wax, bearing the remains of an equestrian figure, with a shield and extended sword; but the legend has been broken off.*

In 1174, the Scots, having laid siege to Alnwick Castle, Barnard de Baliol, Robert de Stuteville, and other barons, marched to its relief. A thick fog obscured their passage, and a halt was recommended; but Baliol exclaimed, "Let them stay that will; I am resolved to go on, though none follow me, rather than dishonour myself by staying here." His example inspired the rest with courage; they marched forward, surprised the enemy, and, after a short skirmish, took the Scotch king prisoner, and sent him to Richmond Castle. Barnard Baliol married Agnes de Pinchenii or Pinchney, and left issue three sons, Eustace, Guy, and Ingelram. He was a benefactor to several ecclesiastical foundations; and confirmed the grant of the churches of Gainford, Barnard Castle, and Middleton, to St. Mary's Abbey, York.

Eustace Baliol, who succeeded before 1193, had paid 100 marks for license to marry the widow of Robert Fitz-Piers, in 1190; and nine years afterwards, he paid 200 marks fine for neglecting the royal precept to go to the French wars. He granted several charters, and confirmed those granted by his predecessors. He left issue Hugh, Barnard, and Ingelram.

Hugh Baliol succeeded his father about the year 1212. He confirmed the charters of his predecessors, and granted to the inhabitants of Barnard Castle "all that common pasture, and all common lands in the east and north parts, from a certain rivulet which flows from Watescale, or Watershaw, and runs into Beckdam; and from the road which leads from Castle Barnard, and goes towards Stanhope."† Hugh Baliol married Agnes de Valencia, niece of Henry III., who had in jointure Middleton and Gainford. Alexander, King

* In the same box are deposited charters granted by Hugh, John, and Alexander Baliol, three documents referring to a chantry in the chapel, a letter from Prince Charles' council in 1616, and the silver seal of the burgesses.

† Stanhope here signifies Stonhope or Stone Hill, now Stainton.

of Scotland, in time of this Hugh, after having subdued all the fortresses in Northumberland for Louis of France, came before Barnard Castle, where Eustace de Vesey, on a reconnoitring party, was slain by a shot from a cross-bow; but it does not appear that the fortress was assailed. Hugh Baliol died in or before the year 1228, having issue three sons, John, Eustace, and Hugh, and a daughter, Ada.

John Baliol, the next possessor of Barnard Castle, on his succession, paid £150 relief for his possessions. He granted a fourth charter to the inhabitants, in which a second class of grantees are first mentioned, under the title of freeholders of the town; to whom, and the burgagers, the deed conveys a certain common pasture in Marwood, in exchange for lands which the grantor had enclosed in his park, and others which the burgagers had released to him and his heirs. This tract adjoins that granted by Hugh Baliol, and the two contained 9,700 acres of land. This John Baliol is said to have founded the hospital of St. John the Baptist, about the year 1230 (see Charities). This powerful baron was as faithful in his adherence to Henry III. as his father had been to John. He married Dervorguill, or Devergald, eldest daughter and heiress of Alan of Galloway, constable of Scotland, by Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Huntingdon, younger brother of William, King of Scotland. By this union he acquired a great accession of wealth and influence; and on the strength of it his son laid claim to the crown of Scotland. He was sheriff of Cumberland from 33 to 39 Henry III. inclusive, and governor of the castle of Carlisle. On the marriage of Margaret, the king's daughter, to Alexander, the young king of Scotland, their tuition was committed to John Baliol and Robert de Ros, of Wark; but within two years, they were both accused to King Henry, at Nottingham, of having abused their trust. Baliol made his peace with King Henry partly by the payment of a large fine, and partly by reminding him of the services of his father to King John. He was shortly afterwards sent as ambassador to France; and was present at the victory of Northampton in 1264, when he shared the defeat and imprisonment of King Henry and Prince Edward, at the battle of Lewes. Having regained his liberty, he devoted himself to the service of his royal master. The memory of John Baliol is rendered famous by the foundation of Baliol College, Oxford, which he commenced in 1263, and which was completed by his widow. He died in 1268, and was buried in the abbey of Sweetheart, in Galloway. He had issue four sons and four daughters.

Hugh Baliol, eldest son of the last baron, succeeded his father, but, dying without issue, the estate, in consequence of the death of the second son, Alan, passed to Alexander, the third son, who gave the inhabitants of Barnard Castle a charter confirmatory of their common right in Marwood. He left no issue, and was succeeded by his only surviving brother, John Baliol, who, it appears, had been educated at Durham School. We find that the powers of the lords of Barnard Castle were very considerable at this time. An itinerant judge was sent to dispense justice in their territory; there was also a chief bailiff of the liberty, a constable and a porter of the castle, and a forester. A coroner was also appointed by the lords of the liberty. They had free warren and chase over a large extent of moorland and waste, with the soil, mines, quarries, and other perquisites, from whence the munificent grants above noticed were derived. They had the return of writs and warrants awarded thither, so that no officer could enter the liberty, but by writ de non omittas: they had also the privileges of markets and fairs, the goods and chattels of felons condemned within their courts, and received a yearly rent, called the Brew-farm, from all the ale-house keepers, who were obliged to be licensed by the steward in open court. In England, besides his lordship of Barnard Castle, John Baliol possessed estates in several of the southern counties, as well as the barony of Bywell in Northumberland; in Scotland he inherited from his mother the lordship of Galloway, the castle of Botel in Kenmore, and Kirk Andrews; and in France he retained the hereditary possessions of his Norman ancestors. He married Isabel, daughter of John Plantagenet, Earl of Warren and Surrey; and, in 1291, he was one of the principal competitors for the Scottish crown. The dispute was referred to the King of England, as lord paramount, who adjudged the right to Baliol. On the forfeitures of his estates, Bishop Beck claimed Barnard Castle, as of the jura regalia of his palatinate; but the king, being determined to abridge the great power of this prelate, seized the palatinate, which he shortly afterwards restored in a mutilated shape, having taken from it the large possessions which it had acquired on the attainder of Baliol and Bruce. Edward gave Barnard Castle with its members to Guy Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick.

This Guy was one of the nobles whom Edward I., when dying at Burgh on Sands, enjoined not to let Gaveston return to England. On the ascendancy of that favourite, therefore, in the following reign, the Earl of Warwick joined Thomas, Earl of Lancaster and others, and took Gaveston prisoner at Scarborough; but, on the intercession of the king, the Earl of Pembroke undertook, upon forfeiture of all he had, that their victim should not escape, provided he himself were allowed to conduct him to a conference with the king. The rest seemed to consent; but, during the journey of Pembroke with Gaveston, Warwick came in the night with a number of armed men, and took the latter back to Warwick Castle, where he was beheaded. None of the parties in this transaction were ever punished.

Thomas, Earl of Warwick, son of Guy, was two years old at his father's death in 1315; and on his coming of age, "he was scarce ever out of some great and memorable employment," being present at numerous battles in France, particularly those of Cressy and Poitiers, and at the siege of Calais. In 41 Edward III, he was joined in commission with the Bishop of Durham and others, to supervise the Marches of Scotland; and he was one the founders of the Order of the Garter. Two years later, 1369, he went to Calais to assist the Duke of Lancaster and the Earl of Hereford, who were threatened by the French army, and whose troops were wasted by famine and plague. "On landing," says Dugdale, "he severely reprehended those noblemen for delaying to fight, saying, 'I will go and fight before the English bread which I have eaten be digested.' He accordingly drove the French before him, but on his return to Calais, fell a victim to the pestilence, and died November 13th."

Thomas, the second earl of that name, succeeded his father in 1369. He was appointed one of the governors of Richard II. during that monarch's minority; but the control which they exercised over the early extravagance of the king was not forgiven when he assumed the reigns of government; for Warwick was suddenly arrested, and banished to the Isle of Man; and his castle, town, and lordship of Barnard Castle, together with his manors of Middleton and Gainford, were granted to William Scroope, Earl of Wiltshire. In the following year, however, they were restored by Henry IV. to the Earl of Warwick, in whose family they remained till 1449, when, on the demise of Anne, Daughter of Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, and King of Wight, they devolved upon his only sister, Anne, who married Richard Neville, Earl of Salisbury, who thereupon acquired the title and estates of the Beauchamps.

The history of this extraordinary man, commonly called "the king maker," is identified with that of the time in which he lived. After his death at the battle of Barnet, in 1471, Bishop Booth made great efforts to procure a confirmation of the decision made in favour of the see in the parliament of Edward III., issued many instruments, and had repetition of the adjudication in his favour; yet the family of Warwick continued to hold Barnard Castle, which afterwards passed in marriage with Anne, one of the daughters and co-heiresses of the celebrated Earl of Warwick, to Richard, Duke of Gloucester, who ascended the English throne, in 1483, as Richard III.; previous to which Barnard Castle was one of his favourite seats. Tanner, in his Notitia, informs us that "Richard, Duke of Gloucester obtained a license from Edward IV., an. regni 17 (1477), to found a college in the castle here, for a dean and twelve secular priests, ten clerks, and six choristers, to the honour of Christ Jesus, the Virgin Mary, St. Margaret, and St. Ninian, and to purchase lands, &c., not exceeding the yearly value of 400 marks." The members of this college were to be "a body corporate, with all rights, powers, and privileges as such, and the said duke and his heirs to be perpetual patrons of the said college, to be called the college of Richard, Duke of Gloucester, at Barnard Castle, in the diocese of Durham." It is thought that this institution was never completed, though that some progress was made in the proposed buildings, as been inferred from the existence of several sculptured stones, bearing the name and crest of Richard, and built up in the walls of tenements. On the death of Richard, this lordship was immediately seized by his conqueror Henry VII., who restored it to Anne, widow of the Earl of Warwick, and mother of Isabel and Anne, wives of Richard III. and his brother the Duke of Clarence. But this appears to have been merely a means of acquiring them himself; for, on December 13th, 1488, by a special feoffment and fine, she conveyed them wholly to the king, entailing them on the issue male of his body, with remainder to herself and her heirs.

After belonging to several persons, Barnard Castle and its dependencies became, by marriage, as is supposed, the property of Charles Earl of Westmoreland. Upon his insurrection, it was seized and garrisoned for the queen by Sir George Bowes, of Streatham, who defended it against the main body of the insurgents for eleven days, and then surrendered it upon honourable terms, being allowed to depart with arms, ammunition, and baggage. By the suppression of this rebellion, and the consequent confiscation of the property of the Earl of Westmoreland, Barnard Castle reverted to the crown, and was leased to Sir George Bowes. It was afterwards granted by James I. to Robert Carr, Viscount Rochester, Baron of Brancepeth, and Earl of Somerset; but, on his attainder, they again reverted to the crown.

Soon after, they were, with Brancepeth and other estates, settled for the maintenance of the household of Charles, Prince of Wales, by demise, for 99 years, to Sir Francis Bacon, attorney-general, and others, with power to grant leases for 27 years, or three lives; and the survivors of the grantees assigned to Sir Henry Vane, Knt., for the unexpired remainder of the term. On March 14th, 1626, in consideration of a fine of £1,500, Charles I. granted to Samuel Cordwell and Henry Dingley, in trust for Sir Henry, the reversion of the assigned premises, together with all deer and wild cattle in the parks, and free-chase and warren, to be held of the crown by knights' service, under the yearly rent of £100 19s. 4d. In 1640, Sir Henry Vane obtained a grant from the crown of sundry privileges annexed to his manor of Raby and honour of Castle Barnard, which latter was created a barony by William III. This title was first conferred upon Sir Christopher Vane, on July 8th, 1690; and the Hon. Henry Vane assumed the title of Viscount Barnard in 1754. The castle and manor of Barnard Castle are still vested in his descendant, the Duke of Cleveland.

In 1614, there was a great snow, the deepest ever known, which did not yield till February 28th; nine people of this place and neighbourhood were lost; it was past travelling but in danger for man and beast; by report the snow was six yards deep in the country.

The plague broke out at Osmondercroft and Winston in 1686; and so great were its ravages in the neighbourhood, that Barnard Castle Magdalen Fair was cried down. In April 1645, the pestilence re-appeared, and carried off great numbers in the town and its vicinity.

After the rout at Newburn, in April 1642, 500 Scots were billeted upon the inhabitants of Barnard Castle, "and left a debt of £80."

On January 3, 1644, Francis Walker, of this place, was tried at the sessions at Durham, for saying, "The parliament are rogues, rebels, and traitors—God confound them and the devil confound them; and he wished the parliament house was blown up with gunpowder as it should have been once, and he hoped to see them all hanged one against another within a short time—that the parliament sought to be kings themselves, and that they would have him (the king) to be worse than either you or I, and that he the king could not say the horse he rode on was his own."

Cromwell is said to have visited Barnard Castle on October 24th, 1648, when he was regaled by the inhabitants with "burnt wine" and "short cakes," and on the following day proceeded to Richmond.

During a violent thunder storm, September 19th, 1729, a barn, with the corn in it, was set fire to, and consumed. A house in the adjacent village of Starforth was also struck, the walls and furniture being much damaged.

On July 11th, 1748, a fire broke out in the house of Robert Newby, a barber in this town, which destroyed two houses before it was extinguished. The Hon. Henry Vane sent his engine and apparatus to assist the inhabitants, and afterwards made a present of them to the town.

In March 1784, as some men were ploughing in the lands of Swaites' Hall, near Barnard Castle, they turned up several pieces of silver, which, upon examination, were found to be coins of Henry I.

During the night of October 18th, 1829, there was a strong gale of wind, accompanied by heavy and continued rain. The river Tees was swollen to much beyond its usual height during floods, and inundated many of the houses in the lower part of the town.

On August 25th, 1832, Barnard Castle and its neighbourhood were visited by a dreadful thunderstorm, accompanied by a whirlwind, which completely unroofed a thatched house, and laid the inmates senseless on the floor, but without hurting them. A large stack of hay was thrown down; and a person named Armstrong, who was breaking stones on the road, was lifted off his feet, and thrown to the ground without being much hurt. The whirlwind crossed the river Tees, tore up some large trees near Lartington Hall, and killed a calf in a field at Cotherstone. The Tees rose to a great height, and the road between Barnard Castle and Bowes was rendered almost impassable.

On the 9th March, 1885, the district between Barnard Castle and Brough was visited by a severe storm of snow and wind, which stopped the mails and stage coaches for more than a day.

Her Majesty Queen Victoria was proclaimed at Barnard Castle, on the 3rd July, 1837, by the steward, jury, and officers of the manor court, assisted by several of the respectable inhabitants of the town.

The Castle.—This ancient fortress, whose massive ruins occupy the summits of a series of precipitous rocks on the north bank of the Tees, once ranked amongst the most extensive and important in the north of England, and originally commanded one of the principal passages between Durham and Yorkshire. "The Castelle of Barnard," says Leland, "stondith stately upon Tese; the first area hath no very notable thing in it, but the fair chapelle wher be two cantuaries. In the middle of the body of this chapelle is a fair marble tumba, with an image, and inscription about it in French. Ther is another in the south waul of the body of the chapelle of fre stone, with an image of the same. Sum say that they were of the Bailiolles. The inner area is very large, and partly motid, and well furnished with towers of great lodging. Ther belongs 2 parkes to this castelle; the one is caulled Marwood, and thereby is a chace that berith also the name of Marwood, and that goith on Tese ripe up into Tesedale. Ther is but a hil betwixt the chases of Langeley and Marwood." The castle was unroofed and dismantled in 1630; and the gradual and progressive decay of more than two centuries has effected the demolition of nearly all but the outward shell of this once magnificent fortress. The gateway of the outer area is approached from the west side of the main street of the town; and the castle walls on this side are covered with the backs of houses. All traces of the chapel have long since disappeared; the space consists of an open field, in which a few small gardens are placed beneath the shadows of the ruined and crumbling walls. There is no appearance of towers or bastions in this part of the walls, which are carried along the very verge of the cliffs overhanging the street called Bridgegate, and surrounding the area on the east, south, and west. On the north and east, a deep fosse and strong wall separate this portion of the ruins from the site of the principal fortifications. It was here, probably, that the keep was placed, and the circumvallations have been more lofty than those towards the south. Near the north-eastern angle are the remains of "Brackenbury's Tower," an arched vault now open towards the interior area. In the centre of the north wall of the castle there is a gateway leading to the Flatts. It is situated beneath a circular arch, partly built up; and there are some remains of flanking buttresses, the whole having been defended by a semi-circular tower. The north-western angle of the castle is formed by "Bailiol's Tower," a circular erection of considerable height, and of excellent ashlar masonry. It contains a stone dome or vaulting, thirty feet in diameter, without ribs or central pillar, and not more than eighteen inches in height above the springing line. This tower has been kept in better condition than any other part of the castle, having been repaired and fitted up some years ago as a shot factory. It is now occupied by a person who cultivates the orchard in the interior, and who also acts as guide to visitors. The western walls of the castle overlook the bed of the Tees, and command a splendid view of the surrounding country. This part of the castle appears to have contained the principal apartments; and one of its most conspicuous features is a beautiful mullioned window, hung on projecting corbels. To the south of this window, the wall is supported by four lofty buttresses, and contains two pointed windows. On this side of the fortress there was a sallyport, leading to the bridge; and the wall near this place seems as if about to topple down the precipice immediately below. The entire circuit of the walls enclose an area of six-and-a-half acres. The Flatts are now cultivated; and present some of the most delightful scenery in the district.

THE TOWN OF BARNARD CASTLE.

BARNARD CASTLE is situated 25 miles south-west from Durham, 16 west-north-west from Darlington, 39 from Gateshead, 38 from Sunderland, and 224 north-north-west from London. Its population in 1851 was 4,357, of whom 2,088 were males, and 2,269 females. There was at the same period 644 inhabited houses, 8 uninhabited, and 11 in process of erection. The town, which is about a mile in length, is situated on the southern slope of a hill descending steeply to the river Tees, and is approached from the north-east by the Bowes and Sunderland Bridge turnpike road, which connects it with Staindrop, Bishop Auckland, &c. There is a broad street or suburb running from east to west, called Gallgate or Gallowgate, and, according to some authorities, the ancient town of Marwood stood here, previous to the erection of Barnard Castle. The street is supposed to have derived its name from having been in ancient times the place of execution for the barony. On an eminence, at the head of this street, where the roads to Staindrop and Middleton diverge, several stone steps and a broad pavement were dug up some years ago, by many supposed to be the remains of the market-cross of Marwood, but by others considered to be vestiges of the site of the engine once used for the decapitation of criminals. A close in the vicinity is designated in ancient records, Hankeslave, or Hang Slave. In the neighbourhood of the same place is an old chapel, called Bede Kirk, which is now occupied as a farm house; but is not mentioned in any of the ecclesiastical records, though it is conjectured to be a chantry, mentioned in the Valor of 1536, of the total annual value of £4 9s. The Cattle Market joins the western extremity of Gallgate, and is continued by the Horse Market and the Market Place, which, together, form the main street of the town. At the southern extremity of the Market Place, the Town Hall stands in nearly the middle of the street; and, opposite to it, the street called Newgate stretches to the east and joins the road to Westwick, Whorlton, &c. On the ground, at the north corner of this street, there formerly stood a sculpture in bold relief, representing an ecclesiastic beneath a canopied niche, with a crozier in his right hand, a book in his left, and a rampant boar on each side. It has, however, been removed to a place of greater security. A sculpture, with a boar passant, is built up in the wall of one of the houses in this street. Thorngate is a continuation of the main street to the south from the Town Hall, and appears to be the most ancient part of the town. Several of the houses are of stone and roofed with flags. In the wall of one of these, a low dwelling, with mullioned windows, is a stone inscribed "Richardus," in bold old English characters. The front of an arched passage in this house bears two shields, the bearings on one of which are obliterated; but the other bears the arms of Brunskill, an ancient local family. In the interior of the archway, three fragments have been inserted, which, if united, would read, "Broun. Abbat—cuj. a' i' e p' picie—tur Deus." Several old wainscot closets, in the interior of the house, are curiously decorated. An old building, said to have been a house of the Friars Eremites, of the order of St. Augustine, formerly stood on the opposite side of the street; and on a mullioned bow window in its front was inscribed, "Soli Deo honor et gloria." Some years ago, the front portion of the house was used as a chapel by Dissenters. It is now nearly all rebuilt, the only portion of the original structure remaining being a small pointed arch; the inscription has been built up in the interior wall.

Bridgegate, or Briggate, is a long narrow street which diverges from the foot of the Bank, the upper part of Thorngate, towards the west and north-west, and skirts the foot of the rocks which bear the ruins of the castle till it reaches the bridge. This street forms the only road into the town from the south, except a winding path around the west and north sides of the castle. King-street and Queen-street, formed within the last thirty years, adjoin Gallgate on the south.

THE BRIDGE, which connects Barnard Castle with the village of Startforth, on the Yorkshire side of the Tees, consists of two strong groined arches, that on the Durham side being somewhat higher than the other. Leland tells us that the bridge over the Tees, at this place, consisted of three arches. There is an inscription, now nearly illegible, on the battlement of the north arch, "E. R. 1569," which, if it be the date of its erection, suggests a conjecture that the two previous arches may have been so injured, or perhaps destroyed during the siege of the castle in that year, as to render their removal necessary, when the present more elevated arch might be substituted. During the great flood of 1771, the Tees was so high at Barnard Castle, that the arch on the Yorkshire side of the bridge not being large enough for the passage of so great a quantity of water, the battlement was forced down, and the water took its course along the street, drove away the causeway, washed away the soil down to the rock, and demolished eight dwelling-houses. The ground was so swept away that the end of the bridge was at least four yards higher than the rock, and persons passing into Yorkshire were obliged to go down a ladder.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious building, consisting of nave, aisles, transept, and chancel, with a square tower at the north-west corner. It stands near the angle formed by the junction of Newgate-street with the Bank, and will accommodate about 900 persons. The whole of the exterior walls are embattled. The tower was formerly surmounted with a leaden spire, which was removed, in consequence of its unsafe condition, in 1774, and the tower was raised to the height of sixty feet. It formerly contained four bells, the oldest of which was remarkable for the purity of its tone, and round its rim was the following inscription:—" Campana Sancti Trinitatis et omnium Sanctorum." These were sold in 1828, and a new peal of six bells were purchased in their stead. The weight of the present peal is 73 cwt. 2 qrs. 8 lbs. In 1818, the western entrance of the church was restored, and the whole of the interior was repaired and neatly pewed at the same time. The north aisle is formed by octagonal and cylindrical pillars, supporting circular arches of unequal span; and the southern one by octagonal pillars supporting pointed arches. The windows of the aisle are square, with mullioned compartments. The south porch of the transept, in which was anciently a chantry of Our Blessed Lady, has long served as the place of sepulture of the Boweses of Streatlam, several of whose escutcheons, with a helmet, a gauntlet, and a banner, decorate its walls. The entrance to the chancel is beneath a pointed arch, sculptured with leaves and human heads, and supported by pillars, with embattled capitals. The east window, rebuilt in 1816, consists of five lights, surmounted by a pointed arch; and instead of the two windows of the south a pointed one was inserted at the same period. The font is a large octagonal basin, of the black marble found in the Tees, sculptured on four of its alternate faces with a raised shield, the intermediate compartments containing a triangular device symbolical of the Trinity. There was anciently a chantry in the south transept, founded by Robert de Mortham, vicar of Gainford, in 1280, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. There were also five other chantries, the founders of which are unknown, viz., those of St. Catherine, St. Helen, and St. Margaret (the two latter were within the castle), with an endowment of £6 a-year; that of the Twelve Apostles, and the guild or fraternity of the Holy Trinity, with a yearly income of £6 18s. 8d. In the south transept there is a recumbent effigy of Robert de Mortham, in his ecclesiastical robes, bearing the chalice in his hands. Several other remains of antiquity are found in the church; and near the west end of the south aisle, on the side of a curious table monument, is a coloured effigy of George Hopper, of Black Hedley, Northumberland, dressed in a cocked hat, blue coat, and yellow breeches, of the fashion of the last century, holding a red rose in one hand, and an inscribed scroll in the other. In a niche in the wall of the chancel, there is a splendid monument of Malta stone, to the memory of Sir John Hullock, baron of the exchequer. It was erected in 1835, and consists of a statue of the Goddess of Justice, beneath which is an inscription upon marble, supported by a carved corbel, bearing the name and crest of the deceased. There are several other monuments and funeral brasses in the church, but our limited space precludes a more extended notice. The parish register commences in 1609. The living is a curacy, in the deanery of Darlington, not in charge; the vicar of Gainford, patron. The income of the curacy is derived from a stipend of £6 10s. paid by the vicar of Gainford; £10 per annum from the trustees of Lord Crewe's charity; £68, the rent of land at Holdsworth, in Marwood; £9, the rent of land at Northfield, in the parish of Startforth, purchased with Queen Anne's Bounty; with thirty acres at Bowes, and an allotment on Bowes Moor; the churchyard, and the surplice fees. The living has been augmented from Queen Anne's Bounty, and other sources; and the gross income now amounts to about £228 per annum. Rev. George Dugard, M.A., curate; Rev. Thomas Jones, B.A., sub-assistant curate.

ST. MARY'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH occupies what was formerly called the Union Hall, which was purchased about ten years ago, and converted to its present use. The interior is very neat, and will contain about 500 persons. The altar is surmounted by a beautiful fresco of the Crucifixion, copied by Mr. Harvey, of Barnard Castle, from the celebrated fresco, which adorns the Catholic Church, Lartington Hall. Rev. William Allen, priest.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL, a neat commodious structure, situated in Hall-street, contains a gallery, and possesses accommodation for nearly 600 persons. It was erected by subscription, in 1836, and has a Sunday-school attached, which is attended by about 150 children.

THE WESTLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL, situated on the Bank, is a good stone building, erected by subscription, in 1822, at a cost of £1,200, and will accommodate about 800 persons. An excellent organ was added to the chapel in 1847, at an expense of £190. The Primitive Methodists and Unitarians have also chapels here.

NATIONAL SCHOOLS.—These schools are situated in the churchyard, and are under government inspection. The Boys' School was founded by subscription in 1814, and the girls' in 1850; the former has an average attendance of 200, and the latter of 115 children. Both schools are supported by subscriptions and donations; the boys' school, however, receives the interest of £133, bequeathed by John Dent, of London, (See Charities) for the education of ten poor boys. John J. Bailey, and Ann Johnson, teachers.

Besides the National Schools, there are the Catholic Schools in Queen-street, the Wesleyan School, and Infant School on the Demesnes, seven boarding and day schools, in addition to which there are Sundays-schools attached to various places of worship.

THE TOWN HALL, situated in the Market Place, is an octangular building, around the basement storey of which there is a circular piazza, inclosed with an iron railing, and occupied by the sellers of eggs, butter, &c., on market days; the inner portion of the building being used as a prison. A room in the upper storey is apportioned to the transaction of the town's business and the meetings of the magistrates. An inscription records that the building was erected by Thomas Breaks, a native of Barnard Castle, in 1747. On the top there is a cupola, containing a bell, and surmounted by a vane.

THE DISPENSARY was established in January, 1835, and is supported by subscriptions and donations, a benefaction of £5 and upwards constitutes the donor a governor for life. In consideration of a donation of £240 to the building fund of the Whitham Testimonial, the institution is held in apartments provided for the purpose in that structure. Patron, the Duke of Cleveland; surgeons, Henry Benning and George R. Slader; treasurer and secretary, Thompson Richardson.

Besides the Dispensary, Bishop Auckland has an Indigent Sick Society, a Church Clothing Society, a General Clothing Society, a Lying-in Charity, a Branch of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, a Branch of the Darlington Auxiliary Bible Society, several Benefit and Building Societies, and an Agricultural Society, &c.

THE WHITHAM TESTIMONIAL.—A Subscription Library was established in Barnard Castle, in 1824, but soon became extinct; and was succeeded by a Mechanics' Institute, which was founded in 1832, chiefly through the exertions of H. T. M. Whitham, Esq., of Lartington, and other gentlemen of the district. This institution seems not to have been appreciated by those for whose benefit it was founded, and the income scarcely met the current expenditure. From 1839 to 1844, strenuous efforts were made, by reducing the outlay and other reforms, to impart stability to the society; and in the latter year, the president, H. T. M. Whitham, Esq., expressed a wish that some suitable building should be erected for the purposes of the institution. His demise, in November of the same year, suggested to Messrs. Cust, Monkhouse, and Brown, the propriety of erecting a testimonial to his memory, in the form of a building devoted to some of those benevolent purposes to which he was so much attached during his life. Acting upon this idea, they convened a meeting of the respectable inhabitants of the town; and a subscription was at once commenced for the proposed object. In a short time, £750 was raised in this manner; the directors of the Dispensary (in which Mr. Whitham had always taken great interest) gave £240, on condition of having accommodation in the building; and a ladies' bazaar realised £240 more, which completed the subscription. The building is situated in the Market Place, and presents an elegant stone front, in the Italian style. It consists of two storeys, the lower of which is rusticated, with a handsome central door-case, ornamented with Ionic columns, supporting an entablature and pediment. The upper storey consists of two Ionic columns, and pilasters at the angles, the full height of the storey, with a rich entablature, on which is inscribed the name of the gentleman in whose honour the building is erected. The interior contains a spacious lecture hall, library, and residence for the librarian; with a dispensary, surgery, and various offices. The Mechanics' Institute is now in a flourishing condition, having upwards of 200 members, and a library of 2,000 volumes. Rev. T. Whitham, chairman; John Badcock, Esq., treasurer; Thomas Atkin, librarian.

TRADE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Dyeing, stocking weaving, and tanning were formerly carried on in Barnard Castle; and the woollen and cotton trades have been both tried, but without any marked success. In the early part of the present century, the carpet manufacture was introduced, and since that period has maintained its position, as the staple manufacture of the place. The business is now carried on here by Messrs. Joshua C. Monkhouse and Sons, of Thorngate Mill, who employ a considerable number of workmen. Shoe thread is also extensively manufactured by Messrs. Ullathorne and Longstaffe, at the Bridge End and in Marwood. Messrs. Steele, tanners and curriers, have also a large establishment. Besides these branches of industry, the town contains smiths, machine makers, joiners, braziers, &c. The bank of Messrs. Backhouse and Co., of Darlington, Mr. J. C. Monkhouse, manager; the Darlington District Banking Company, Mr. Thomas Caldwell, manager; and the National Provincial Bank of England, Mr. George Pippet, manager, have each a branch at Barnard Castle. There is also a Savings Bank, established in 1816, of which T. Richardson, Esq., is actuary.

THE GAS WORKS, situated near the Castle, were erected in 1835, by a company of shareholders, at an expense of £2,500, in shares of £10 each. There are two gasometers, capable of containing 20,000 cubic feet of gas, and the town is supplied at 6s. per 1,000 cubic feet. William Watson, sen. secretary; William Willey, manager; Thomas Hodgson, clerk.

WATER SUPPLY, &c.—The local Board of Health was established in 1850, upon the report of the Inspector of the General Board of Health; the town having suffered severely from cholera, in 1849. The district under its jurisdiction comprises Barnard Castle, those parts of Marwood and Bridge End, adjoining the town, and the village of Low Startforth. The board have brought a supply of water to the town from Bowes Mountain, a distance of five miles, at a cost of £8,500, and laid down a complete system of sewerage and drainage, at an expense of about £2,300. The board consists of fifteen members, elected from various parts of the district. George Brown, clerk.

THE DARLINGTON AND BARNARD CASTLE RAILWAY was commenced in July 1854, and is expected to be completed in 1856. The length of the line, which passes from Darlington, by Piercebridge, Gainford, Winston, Staindrop, and Newsham, to Barnard Castle, is fifteen-and-a-half miles; and the estimated cost of construction, &c., including law expenses, is about £7,000 per mile. The Barnard Castle terminus is near Gallgate. Secretary, George Brown, Esq.; contractor, John Anderson, Esq., of Gainford.

MARKETS, FAIRS, &c.—A market is held here every Wednesday; and annual fairs take place on Easter and Whit Wednesdays, for pedlary, &c., and on the eve and day of St. Mary Magdalen, for horses, cattle, and sheep. The show of cattle and horses, and the attendance of buyers and sellers at both fairs, are good. A fortnightly fair for cattle is also held on alternate Wednesdays. The tolls of the fairs and markets are farmed under the Duke of Cleveland.

COURTS OF LAW, &c.—The town was anciently governed by the lord's immediate officers, and courts were regularly held before their stewards. The Court Baron of the Duke of Cleveland is held in October every year. Mr. Binning, of Staindrop, is the present steward. Petty Sessions are held on the last Wednesday of every month, at which two or more of the following magistrates attend:—Rev. G. Dugard, M.A., chairman; W. J. S. Morritt, Esq.;

and T. Edgar, Esq. Thompson Richardson, clerk. The Police Station is situated in Hall-street; John Knox, superintendent.

The Barnard Castle County Court for the recovery of debts under £50, comprises in its district Cleatlam, Cockfield, Eggleston, Forest and Frith (with Harwood), Gainford, Headlam, Hilton, Ingleton, Langley Dale, and Shotton, Langton, Marwood, Middleton-in-Teesdale, Morton-Tynemouth, Raby and Keverstone, Raindrop, Streatlam-with-Stainton, Wackerfield, Whorlton, Winston-with-Newsham, Woodland. Henry Stapylton, Esq., judge; Messrs. W. and W. Watson, assistant clerks; John Lax, under bailiff.

On the passing of the Reform Bill, Barnard Castle was appointed one of the polling places for the southern division of the county of Durham.

THE TEESDALE POOR LAW UNION comprises an area of 174,162 acres, of which 95,907 are in Yorkshire; and its population in 1851 was 19,813 souls. The union is divided into three sub-districts, viz: Staindrop, Barnard Castle, and Middleton-in-Teesdale. The Staindrop sub-district contains the parish of Cockfield, including the townships of Cockfield and Woodland; Staindrop parish, including Langley Dale and Shotton, Raby and Keverston, Staindrop, Wackerfield, Hilton, and Ingleton; part of Gainford parish, including Morton Tynemouth, Langton, Headlam, Gainford, and Cleatham; Winston parish; and the township of Barforth, in Forcett parish, West Gilling Wapentake, north riding of Yorkshire. The Barnard Castle sub-district contains the township of Ovingham, in Forcett parish; the parish of Wycliffe; the township of Hutton Magna, in the parish of that name; the townships of Barningham, Scargill, and Hope, in the parish of Barningham; the parish of Brignall, the parish of Rokeby, the parish of Startforth, including the townships of Startforth with Egglestone Abbey and Boldron; the parish of Bowes, including the townships of Bowes and Gillmanby; and Lartington, in the parish of Romalldkirk, all in the north riding of Yorkshire; with part of the parish of Gainford, including the townships of Whorlton, Westwick, Barnard Castle, Stainton with Streatlam, and Marwood. The Middleton sub-district includes the remainder of Romalldkirk parish, comprising the townships of Cotherston, Hunderthwaite, Romalldkirk, Mickleton, Lunedale, and Holwick; and Middleton-in-Teesdale parish, including the townships of Middleton-in-Teesdale, Eggleston, Newbiggin, and Forest-with-Frith. The Union Workhouse, situated in Gallgate, is a good-stone building, erected in 1838, at a cost of £2,500, and will accommodate 158 persons. The inmates at present are eighteen men, twenty-five women, twenty boys, and eighteen girls; total, eighty-one. John Garforth, master; Elizabeth Garforth, matron; Thomas Kipling, surgeon; George Brown, clerk.

CHARITIES.—St. John's Hospital: This hospital is said to have been founded by John Baliol in 1229, but we possess no authentic documents relative to its foundation. It is included in the "Valor Ecclesiasticus," made 26 Henry VIII. (1536), and therein stated to be in the gift of the crown, and of the yearly value of £5 15s. 8d., subject to an annual payment to three poor women, to pray for the soul of the founder, of 3s. in money, and 3s. 4d. in coals. The present income is derived solely from property in Barnard Castle, which produces an annual rent of £331 8s. The hospital or bedehouse, is a low thatched building in Newgate-street, containing one room, in which two old women reside rent free, and receive 10s monthly between them. The appointment of a third bedeswoman has been withheld for many years, to increase the stipend of the other two. The sum of £1 5s. for coats or gowns is paid to them every other Christmas; and they also receive an annual supply of 20-horse loads of coals, from the estate of Low Hullerbush. Rev. George Dugard, custos.

Dent's Charity.—John Dent the elder, of Brightwell, Berkshire, on April 29th, 1706, assigned to the trustees certain premises in Stepney, for the education of poor boys born in the town of Barnard Castle. Previous to 1749, the sum of £188, raised by the sale of those premises, had been placed at interest, and is now in the hands of Benjamin Lee, Esq., who pays £5 6s. 4d. interest. This sum is paid to the treasurer of the National School; and ten poor children, nominated by the minister and churchwardens, are taught free of charge.

Glenton's Dole, and other Charities.—John Glenton, December 3rd, 1572, charged his lauds in Startforth with the payment of certain sums, amounting to 40s. per annum, for the poor of Barnard Castle. This payment was released in 1798, for twenty years' purchase. By will, in December 1668, Ambrose Brunskill, Esq., gave a house in Barnard Castle, value £5 per annum. This house having become ruinous, its site in Thorngate was let for £3 10s. a year, which rent was released for £70 in 1798. Mary Finlay, of Darlington, widow, June 26th, 1688, gave a third part of Broadgates, then producing £1 8s. yearly; and Thomas Barker gave £5, producing 6s. per annum. The amount of these two sums was released in 1798, for twenty years' purchase. The properties enumerated in the purchase deed were—1. To William Benning, for £34, a rent-charge of £1 14s. out of his burgages and tenements in Bondgate. 2. To Anthony Bazin, for £11 6s. 8d., 11s. 4d. out of Westwood House, Westwood Close, and Foxholes, in Startforth. 3. To Henry Ewbank, for £13 6s. 8d., his tenements in Thorngate discharged of 18s. 4d. issuing thereout. 4. To James Lonsdale, his tenements in Thorngate, discharged of 6s. 8d. thereout. 5. To Benjamin Bass, 6s. 8d. rent-charge out of his tenements in Thorngate. The whole of the above purchase money, and the proceeds from the release of Brunskill's property, amounting to £142, was laid out, with £140 raised on mortgage, in the purchase of the workhouse, on which an annual payment of £7 2s. was consequently charged. The commissioners for enquiring concerning charities, however, state that from some unexplained cause, only £3 12s. a year had been paid, which was apparently exclusive of £3 10s. from Brunskill's property. The sum paid is given away at Christmas and Easter, with the charities of Percival and others, in sums varying from 6d. to 2s. In 1840, the workhouse was sold to Mr. Bayles, subject to the above charge of £7 2s. yearly. The remaining purchase money arising from the sale of the old workhouse, viz. £260, was applied in partly liquidating the proportion of the township of Barnard Castle towards the expense of building the Teesdale Union Workhouse.

Hutton's Charity.—Matthew Hutton, gent. by will November 19th, 1796, directed his executors to lay out £120 in the purchase of lands and tenements, the profits and rents thereof to be disposed of in buying bread, to be distributed every Sunday, immediately after divine service, amongst the poorer sort of housekeepers or other poor people of the town of Barnard Castle. In October of the year 1780, two closes in Startforth, called Morton Gill Leazes and the Little Moor, containing respectively ten and four acres, were purchased with this money; and an allotment was since added making 18a. 2r. 7p., including one-and-a-half acres of underwood. A small cottage has lately been built on the property; and the whole is now let at a rent of £25 per annum. In conformity with the intentions of the donor, the value of a proportion of this money is distributed every Sunday, to thirty poor people, in bread.

Charities of Lord Vane and W. Hutchinson.—William Hutchinson, Esq., on July 30th, 1718, gave £20 to the poor of Barnard Castle; and William, Lord Vane, bequeathed £50 for the same purpose. These two sums form what is called the Widows' Bread Fund. Seven twopenny loaves are provided every Sunday, and given to seven poor widows attending divine service, who are selected by the minister and churchwardens.

Charities of Percival and others.—Robert Percival, merchant, of Newcastle, a native of Barnard Castle, by will, December 9th, 1729, gave £40; Christopher Lonsdale, March 11th, 1747, £40; Peter Waistall, August 29th, 1752, £100; and dame Elizabeth, widow of Sir William Bowes, in her lifetime, £30 to the poor of the parish. The whole of these sums, with the exception of £10 of the latter, was laid out on July 15th, 1785, in the purchase of a close at Startforth, which is let at £8 a year. This sum is divided amongst the townships in proportion to the church-rates, viz., Barnard Castle, £4 9s. 6d.; Streatlam and Stainton, £1 8s. 6d.; Marwood, £1 6s. 3d.; and Westwick, 15s. 9d.

Sanderson's Charity.—William Sanderson, by will, 175—, devised his land in Barnard Castle, called the Crook, in trust for two poor men of Barnard Castle and one of Eggleston, to receive and take the profits thereof to their respective uses for their natural lives, and after their deaths, to such other poor men as should be named and appointed to succeed them. The two recipients of this charity belonging to Barnard Castle, are elected by the Vicar of Gainford, the Rector of Romaldkirk, and the Rector of Middleton-in-Teesdale, and the one out of the township of Eggleston is nominated by the latter vicar. Care is taken to select those who have been in better circumstances, but reduced to poverty.

Waste Lands.—By the act 85 George III. it was enacted that Barnard Castle Moor, containing by estimation 6,000 acres; the Little Moor, 40 acres; and Glenton Green and the Baiting Steads, 20 acres, should be sold, and that out of the proceeds the commissioners should, in the first place, pay all the costs of surveying and selling the same, and of making a high road through the Little Moor; that the mortgage on the poor-house should be discharged, in lieu of which the overseers should pay £6 per annum to the minister, churchwardens, and vestrymen; and that the remainder of the money should be placed in the funds, and the interest, with the £6 above mentioned, distributed to such poor persons, male and female, as the lord of the manor or his agent, the minister, churchwardens, and vestrymen, and twelve other respectable inhabitants, should think fit; such poor persons not receiving alms or parish relief, and so as no one should receive more than £5 in any one year; and it was provided that the oldest poor persons resident within the said township should be preferred, if otherwise proper objects of charity.

Emmerson's Charity.—The Rev. Ezra Emmerson, by will, December 25th, 1732, gave £50 to be placed out at interest for the poor of Barnard Castle. This sum formed part of the purchase money of Northfield Farm, Startforth, bought by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, for the augmentation of the living of Barnard Castle; and £2 10s. is paid by the incumbent on account thereof, and distributed with other charities, as above.

TOWNSHIP OF STREATLAM AND STAINTON.—John Bowes, Earl of Strathmore, by will, July 8rd, 1815, directed that £25 a-year should be charged upon his Streatlam estate, for the poor of the township. No distribution has ever been made in respect of this legacy.

EMINENT MEN.—Barnard Castle has given birth to several eminent characters, amongst whom may be named Sir John Hullock, Knt., one of the barons of the exchequer; William Hutchinson, Esq., F.A.S., an eminent solicitor, and author of the "History and Antiquities of Durham," "A View of Northumberland, with an Excursion to the Abbey of Mailross in Scotland," "The Spirit of Masonry," "The History of Cumberland," and "An Excursion to the Lakes." He died in 1814. George Edwards, Esq., M.D., author of several works on political economy, was also a native of this place; but died in London, in 1823. Mr. G. Layton, author of "Castle Barnard, a poem," published in 1823. Mr. Kipling, a celebrated mathematician of the last century, was born here; and Mr. Ewbank, the well known writer on hydraulic engineering, is also a native of this place.

ENVIRONS.—"Few towns in England," says a recent writer, "can compete for beauty of scenery, with Barnard Castle. The country around is richly wooded, fertile, and highly cultivated; and the banks of the winding Tees, descending in gentle slopes, or projecting in overhanging precipices, form picturesque and graceful combinations with the rocky bed over which its foaming waters force their way." The Flatts, a beautiful woodland scene, on the west of the castle, commands several delightful views of that venerable ruin, the church and the town, the village of Startforth,* and the fields and pastures on the Yorkshire side of the river. The Mains is a fine level pasture close to the Tees, and at its eastern extremity is the Abbey Bridge, a beautiful structure of one bold arch, with embattled parapets, covered with ivy. It was erected at the sole expense of John S. Morritt, Esq., of Rokeby Park, in 1778. In the vicinity of the bridge, stand the ruins of Eggleston Abbey, from which the bridge derives its name. A portion of the east window still remains, and crumbling fragments of walls and arches remain to attest its former greatness.

KINIVIE is the name of a hamlet partly in this township, and partly in that of Marwood, three-and-a-half miles north from Barnard Castle. It contains a school, a public-house, and a few workshops.

POST AND MONEY ORDER OFFICE, MARKET PLACE: John Atkinson, postmaster.—Letters arrive from Bowes, &c., at 9 30 a.m., and are despatched at 10 25 a.m. From the east, north, and south, by way of Darlington, at 9 55 a.m., and are despatched at 3 50 p.m., and from the west, by way of Middleton, at 3 10 p.m., despatched 10 25 a.m.

* Startforth is a small but pleasant township and village, adjoining Barnard Castle Bridge on the Yorkshire side of the Tees. The parish, which includes the township of Roldron, comprises 3,000 acres, and contained in 1851 a population of 828 souls. It is included in the Teesdale poor law union. The church is situated in the village, and the living is a vicarage. The ruins of Eggleston Abbey are in this township.

MARWOOD township comprises an area of 3,675 acres, and the annual value of the property assessed to the county-rate in 1853 was £2,457 14s. 11d. The population in 1801 was 156; in 1811, 177; in 1821, 212; in 1831, 200; in 1841, 224; and in 1851, 205 souls. It forms the north-western part of the township of Barnard Castle, and adjoins the town on the west, part of which, with the Flatts, are included in it. Marwood anciently contained a town of its own name; but the erection of the castle and the town of Barnard Castle, with the various privileges bestowed upon its inhabitants, gradually induced its decay and its final disappearance. The chase or park of Marwood extended along the north bank of the Tees, and bordered on the southern verge of Langley. It was purchased from the grantees of the crown by Sir Henry Vane, and was dis-parked in 1628. It is now the property of the Duke of Cleveland, who is also the lord of the manor, John Bowes, Esq., and others.

STREATLAM AND STANTON township contains the village of Stainton, the castle and park of Streatlam, and a number of scattered houses. Its area is 2,907 acres, and its annual value £2,450 16s. 10d. The number of its inhabitants in 1801 was 272; in 1811, 232; in 1821, 251; in 1831, 324; in 1841, 378; and in 1851, 344. Streatlam and Stainton were given by Barnard Baliol in dowry with Agnes his niece, on her marriage with Sir John Trayne, whose daughter and heiress married Sir Adam Bowes, great grandson of Sir William Bowes, governor of Bowes Castle, Yorkshire. Sir William Bowes, grandson of Sir Adam, was created knight banneret at the battle of Poitiers in 1346. Sir Robert Bowes, his son, was made knight banneret at the siege of Rouen, in 1419, and was slain at the battle of Baugy Bridge in 1421. His son, Sir William Bowes, was knighted at Vernoyale in 1424. After the death of his wife, Jane, daughter of Ralph, Lord Greystock, he went abroad, and was chief chamberlain to John, Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, where he continued twenty years, after which he retired to his hereditary mansion, which he had caused to be re-built from a model sent from France, and died in 1465. He was long warden of the middle marches and sheriff of Northumberland. His grandson, Sir Ralph, was sheriff of Durham for more than twenty years; and his son, also named Ralph, was knighted on the field of Flodden, 1514. Sir Ralph was succeeded by Sir George Bowes, of Dalden, who left three daughters, and the entailed estate of Streatlam consequently passed to a younger branch of the family, descended from Richard Bowes, of Aske, whose son, Sir George Bowes, Knt., played a conspicuous part in the rebellion of the north, in which he opposed the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, and was, by special commission, made knight marshal north of the Trent, and, with his brother, Sir Robert, appointed ambassador in Scotland. He died at Streatlam, in 1580, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir William, on whose demise, in 1611, an entail, created by Sir George in 1569, came into operation; and Sir Talbot Bowes, his eldest surviving son by a second marriage, became possessed of Streatham and the other principal estates. It was arranged by Sir Talbot, with his brother Thomas, that the half of Streatham, Stainton, Cleatham, and Barford, should be enjoyed by Sir George Bowes, of Biddick, representative of the elder line; but he sold his right in the two first named places, for a perpetual rent-charge of £100 per annum, to Matthew Hutton, Esq., of Marske, from whom it was subsequently purchased by the widow of Thomas Bowes, Esq. Cleatham also, after passing through intermediate proprietors, was eventually united to the principal family estate. Sir Talbot was elected M.P. for Knaresborough eight times; he entertained James I. at Aske, and was knighted by him in 1617. He died without issue in 1637-8, when the family honours and estates devolved upon Talbot Bowes, Esq., the eldest son of Thomas, fourth son of Sir George's second marriage, who, dying in 1564, was succeeded by his next brother, Thomas. This gentleman, being imbued with the hereditary loyalty of the family, a heavy fine was inflicted upon him as a delinquent, on payment of which he received a certificate from the committee sitting at Newcastle, dated September 27th, 1649. He died in February 1706, and was succeeded by his fourth son, William, who was elected M.P. for the county of Durham in August 1679, and also in 1680, 1695, 1702, and in 1705. He was knighted in July 1684, and, in the following year was appointed master forester and chief warden of all the king's forests and chases in the lordship of Barnard Castle, Teesdale, and Marwood. He died in London, and was buried at Barnard Castle, on the 11th February, 1706. William Blakiston Bowes, his eldest son, succeeded Sir William, but died intestate in October 1721, and Thomas, his next brother, having also died in May 1700, the estates descended to George, third son of Sir William, who represented the county of Durham in the parliaments of 1734, 1741, 1747, and 1754. In 1745 he took an active part in raising forces to support the Hanoverian dynasty, against the Pretender; and died on the 17th September, 1760, when the property was inherited by his daughter, Mary Eleanor, who, in 1767, married John Lyon, Earl of Strathmore. In compliance with the will of his father-in-law, the earl assumed the name of Bowes, by permission of an act of parliament; and died on a voyage to Lisbon, March 7th, 1776, aged 89 years.* John Bowes, tenth Earl of Strathmore, was born April 11th, 1769; he was elected a representative peer of Scotland in 1796, 1802, and 1807, and in August 1815, was created an English peer, by the title of Baron Bowes, of Streatham Castle, in the county palatine of Durham, and of Lunedale, in the county of York. The Derwent infantry and Gipside cavalry were raised, during the French wars, at his expense, and were placed under his command. He died suddenly in July 1820, when the English barony expired with him, and the Scottish peerage devolved upon his lordship's youngest brother, the Hon. Thomas Lyon

* Andrew Robinson Stoney Bowes came to Newcastle an ensign in the 4th Regiment of Foot, and succeeded in marrying the daughter and heiress of William Newton, Esq., of Burnopfield, in the county of Durham. This lady, who possessed a fortune of £20,000, was treated most cruelly by her husband, and died without issue. He subsequently married the Countess of Strathmore, a most accomplished young widow, who had been left, by her lord's death, in the possession of immense property. In consequence of this he assumed the name of Bowes; and afterwards became high sheriff of Northumberland, and M.P. for Newcastle-upon-Tyne. In consequence of his cruelty to the countess, she obtained a divorce, but in a short time afterwards she was compelled to exhibit articles of peace against him, which resulted in his being sentenced to pay a fine of £300 to the king, to be confined in the King's Bench Prison for three years, and at the expiration thereof, to find security for fourteen years, himself in £10,000, and two securities in £5,000 each. He died within the rules of the King's Bench Prison, London, on the 16th January, 1810.

Bowes, who became Earl of Strathmore, Viscount Lyon, and Baron Glamis. Tanadyer, Scidlaw, and Stradichtie. His grandson, Thomas George Bowes, born September 28th, 1822, is the present inheritor of the Scottish titles and estates. The dowager Countess of Strathmore, widow of the tenth earl, was married on the 16th March, 1831, to William Hutt, Esq., the present member for Gateshead; and her son, John Bowes, Esq., of Streatlam Castle, is proprietor of the English estates of the junior branch of the Bowes.

Streatlam Castle.—The original structure is supposed to have been erected by the Baliols, and was, for many generations, the residence of the owners of the manor. It was re-built from the ground in 1450, by Sir William Bowes; and its strength may be inferred from the fact of its sustaining a siege of seven days, during the northern rebellion. On its capture by the rebels, every species of wanton excess and depredation was committed, and every thing carried away that could be removed. The present castle was erected on the site of the old one, in the beginning of the last century, and is an elegant stone building, with a southern aspect. It consists of a centre with square projecting wings, on each of which there is a cupola; and a handsome balustrade runs round the top of the structure. The castle, which contains several family portraits, and a heavy cuirass and helmet, said to have been worn by Sir George Bowes, is situated in a deep valley, and is surrounded by a park of about 400 acres, nearly one-fourth of which is planted with ash and sycamore.

Stainton, a village in this township, was formerly held by the Traynes, lords of Streatlam, from whom it passed to the Russells, and from them to the Headlams; one of the latter family. John Headlam, Esq., in 1526, conveyed all his lands in Stainton to Sir William Bowes, in whose family they still remain. The village contains a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, and a National School, the latter of which is attended by about forty children. John Witter, teacher. Divine service is performed in the school every Sunday afternoon, by one of the ministers from Barnard Castle. There was anciently a chapel of ease at Stainton, but no traces of it are now visible.

Westwick township is the property of William Frederick Westwick and other whose family have held it for many generations. Its area is 1,445 statute acres, and its annual value £1,506 16s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 93; in 1811, 95; in 1821, 97; in 1831, 98; in 1841, 67; and in 1851, 63 souls. The township, which contains no village, and whose population is chiefly agricultural, adjoins that of Barnard Castle on the east, and is bordered by the Tees on the south. Westwick Moor, containing about 824 acres, was inclosed about the year 1765. The tithes of this township belong to the rector of Winston.

COCKFIELD PARISH.

This parish, comprising the townships of Cockfield and Woodland, is bounded on the north by Lynesack chapelry, on the west by the parish of Middleton-in-Teesdale, on the south by the chapelry of Barnard Castle and the parish of Staindrop, and on the east by the chapelry of St. Helen's and. The parish comprises an area of 4,416 acres. The township of Woodland is completely separated from that of Cockfield by the chapelry of Cockfield and the township of Langley Dale, in the parish of Staindrop.

COCKFIELD township is the property of the Duke of Cleveland (who is also the manor), P. H. Stanton, Esq., John Bowes, Esq., John Dean, Henry Coates, the trustees of the Burton poor, Mr. James Danson, Miss Ord, Mr. George Alderson, Miss Margaret Alderson, Rev. H. O. Be, and others. The amount of property assessed to the county-rate, was £1,518 18s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 461; in 1811, 461; in 1821, 533; in 1831, in consequence of the employment of labourers in railway works, it had increased to 790; in 1841, it was 994; and in 1851, owing to the partial working of collieries, and the cessation of labour at a large stone quarry, it had decreased to 647 souls. The manor of Cockfield anciently belonged to the Vavasours. In the fifth year of the episcopate of Bishop Hatfield, Henry Vavasour died seised of it, holding of the bishop in capite, by homage, fealty, service at the court, and a quarter of a knight's fee. Wm. Vavasour, in 1375, died seised of the manor, with the advowson of the church, and a certain mine, Carbonum Maritimum, in the same manor; value twenty marks, when let to farm. In Bishop Langley's time, we find it possessed by Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland, who had purchased the rights of the Vavasours. In 1569, fifteen persons from Cockfield followed their lord in the Rising of the North, three of whom died by the hands of the executioner after its suppression. This estate, like the other possessions of the earl, was forfeited to the crown; and in the early part of the reign of James I. was granted by the monarch to Henry Lidley, of Halden, in the county of Kent, Knt. It subsequently became vested in the modern lords of Raby; and the Duke of Cleveland is now lord of the manor.

Cockfield Fell is a large tract extending northward from the village to the Gaunlees, and is about two miles in width from east to west. Coal has been worked on it from an early period, and Vavasour's mine here is the first inland colliery upon record. The coals, however, have been nearly all worked out. One of the most peculiar features which occur in the coal-field of the county

Bowes, who, is the great Greenstone Dyke, which enters the county from the Tanad-east, a little above Preston-upon-Tees, and passing by Bolam, intersects the coal-beds on Cockfield Fell, from which circumstance it has commonly been called the Cockfield Fell Dyke. Its effects on the seam of coal are thus described by the late H. T. M. Witham, Esq. :—" Although innumerable examples of the changes caused by the action of volcanic dykes have been already described by various authors, yet I have read of none whose influence has been more powerful or more extensive than that produced by the great Cleveland or Bolam Dyke upon the coal which lies under Cockfield Fell. This colossal dyke is too well known to geologists to require here any particular remarks. The distance of its course, running from S. E. to N. W., is computed to be about seventy miles, and yet how much farther it may go in either direction is as yet a matter of uncertainty. The breadth differs; but from its extent generally, the mass of volcanic matter injected must have been enormous. Under this common several seams of coal are worked. The coal, with the other strata, is thrown up to the south six yards by the dyke. In working towards it, when within fifty yards, the coal begins to change. It first looses the calcareous spar, which occurs in the joints and faces, and begins to look dull, grows tender and short, and also looses its quality for burning. As it comes nearer, it assumes the appearance of half-burned cinder; and approaching still nearer the volcanic mass, it grows less and less in thickness, becomes a pretty hard cinder, and only two feet six inches thick. Eight yards further, it is converted into real cinder; and more immediately in contact with the basalt, it becomes, by degrees, a black substance called by the miners douk or swad, resembling soot caked together, the seam of coal being reduced to nine inches in height. There is a large portion of pyrites lodged on the roof of that part of the seam which has been reduced to cinder. On each side of the dyke, between it and the regular strata, there is a thin gut or core of clay, about six inches thick, which turns the rain-water on the rise side, and forces it to the surface, forming numerous springs as it traverses the country. The coal spoiled by the action of this greenstone dyke is as follows: twenty-five yards of bad, short coal, half reduced to cinder; sixteen yards of cinder, and ten of the sooty substance above-described, making, together, fifty-one yards. Should a similar effect have taken place on the rise side, of which (from what has already been wrought) no doubt can be entertained, it will make altogether upwards of 100 yards in breadth of coal, which the effect produced by this dyke has rendered quite unfit for ordinary colliery purposes. The dyke itself, at this point, is eighteen yards thick. Here then we have a most convincing proof, that the substance ejected into and through this immense crack, must have arrived at the surface in a state of most intense heat, and which, when cooling, shrunk and contracted, so as to produce on each side what is called the gut or core of six inches, now filled with clay as before-observed. Water-stones have occasionally been found embedded in the solid coal of the main seam. The greenstone of the dyke is of great value throughout the whole line for making and repairing roads, for which purpose it is quarried in every direction upon Cockfield Fell: it has been used for the above purposes upwards of seventy years, Mr. Dixon being the first person there who so applied it. Whilst mentioning the Whin Dyke of Cockfield Fell, I must observe, that there are here, as throughout the whole coal-field, numerous faults, all of which by the miners are called dykes: these are, perhaps, more difficult of explanation than the other, and as materially affecting the regular stratification of the coal, are of more importance to the mine-owner. These are those cracks and slips which throw the coal and other strata out of their regular bearing, either up or down. These cracks are generally not more than five or six inches wide, and the substance contained in them is an indurated impervious clay."

The Village of Cockfield is about six miles south-west from Bishop Auckland, and three north from Staindrop. It is irregularly built; and comprises a brewery, three public-houses, and the customary tradesmen's shops. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the neighbouring collieries.

The Church is an unpretending structure, consisting of a nave and chancel, without side aisle or tower, and will accommodate about 200 persons. The pulpit is of oak, ornamented with some antique carving; the font is a large octagonal bason of freestone; and the piscina still remains in the chancel-wall, near the communion table. The arms of Charles II. are sculptured on the north wall of the chancel; and near it is a painting of the royal arms, dated 1726. There is a gallery at the west end of the nave. The parish register commences in 1578. The living is a discharged rectory in the deanery of Darlington, with Staindrop vicarage annexed, and in the patronage of the Duke of Cleveland. It is valued in the Liber Regis at £9 18s.; gross income, £290. The glebe consists of eighteen acres of land; but the rectory house, an old thatched building north of the church, has long been an unfit residence for a clergyman. Rector, Rev. H. C. Lipscombe, MA., of Staindrop, for whom the Rev. Peter Barlow officiates as curate.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was erected in 1839, at a cost of £175, and will seat 120 persons. There is also a Primitive Methodist Chapel.

The Parish School, which is under the patronage of the Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, and the Rev. H. C. Lipscombe, is attended by fifty boys and twenty girls, and is efficiently conducted by Mr. Robert Rand. There is also a Sunday-school.

Charities.—George French, of London, in 1686, bequeathed a freehold house in the Back Row, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, to the poor of the town and parish of Cockfield for ever. The house is let in tenements, at rents amounting to £8 8s. a year; but the premises are out of repair, and the rents have been long irregularly paid. When received, they are divided, at May-day and Martinmas, in sums varying from 2s. 6d. to 4s. or 5s., amongst the poor of Cockfield, according to a list made out by the churchwardens. John Hutton, by will, July 16th, 1657, gave 20s. per annum for ever to the poor of the parish; the overseers to dispose of it according to the monthly cess for the poor. For some years it has been received by the overseer of Woodland, and applied wholly for the benefit of that township. The tenant of a small farm called Fold Garth, in Woodland, belonging to the Duke of Cleveland, pays 5s. yearly to the overseer of Woodland, who gives it with the proceeds of the last-named charity, to one poor widow not receiving any relief from the township.

Biography.—Cockfield has given birth to two eminent and ingenious men, George and Jeremiah Dixon, the former of whom was a good mathematician, a mineralogist, a painter, an engraver, chemist, land surveyor, &c. Although possessed of these various qualifications, he remained in private life, being employed in the north in various coal-works, &c. His brother Jeremiah was educated in mathematics by Mr. Ripling at Barnard Castle, and was selected by the Royal Academy of Woolwich, as a fit person to be sent out to St. Helena, for the purpose of observing a transit of Venus. He was also employed to set the limits and bounds of the provinces of Maryland and Pennsylvania, in America.

WOODLAND, a township in this parish, though, as before remarked, separated from Cockfield by Lynesack chapelry and the township of Langley Dale, consists of a bleak and sterile district, which contained, in 1851, 46 inhabited houses. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 102; in 1821, 155; in 1831, 223; in 1841, 241; and in 1851, 240. The annual value of the township is £685 16s. 4d. Woodland was anciently the property of the Earls of Westmoreland, and is now possessed by the Duke of Cleveland (who is also lord of the manor), John Bowes, Esq., George Brownless, Esq., and others. Coal abounds in this township.

The Villages of Woodland consists of a few scattered houses, situated on an eminence, four-and-a-half miles north-west of Cockfield, and six miles north-by-east of Barnard Castle. Here is a Methodist Chapel, and a school, supported by the Duke of Cleveland, the rector of Cockfield, and John Bowes, Esq. Divine service is performed in the school every Sunday afternoon or evening, by the curate of Cockfield.

Woodland Colliery, the most westerly coal mine in the county of Durham, is near the outcrop of the coal seams, and is carried on by the assignees of the late Rev. W. L. Prattman. The colliery is about a mile north of Cockfield Fell Dyke, and something less than two miles south of the Hett Dyke. The coal is a continuation of the Auckland district.

GAINFORD PARISH.

This parish was formerly very extensive, including, as it did, the chapelries of Barnard Castle, Denton, and Whorlton, and occupied, with the exception of the intervening parish of Winston, about eighteen miles of the north bank of the Tees, between Pierce Bridge on the south-east, and High Shipley on the north-west. At present, it is bounded on the north by the chapelry of St. Helen's Auckland, on the north-west by the parish of Staindrop and chapelry of Ingleton, on the west by Winston parish, on the south-west and south by the Tees, and on the east by Denton chapelry and Coniscliffe parish. The parish of Gainford, as at present constituted, comprises the townships or constableries of Gainford, including Selaby, Langton, Headlam, part of Cleatlam, Morton-Tynemouth, Bolam, Summerhouse, and Pierce Bridge. The two last-mentioned places, though in the parish of Gainford, are in the south-east division of Darlington Ward, and form a portion of the Darlington Union.

BOLAM, a township in this parish, though locally situated in the north-west division of the ward, and in the Hamsterley sub-district of the Auckland Union, comprises an area of 989 acres, and its annual value is £960 6s. 3½d. Its population in 1801 was 95; in 1811, 121; in 1821, 121; in 1831, 115; in 1841, 129; and in 1851, 125 souls. The township is intersected by the Cockfield Dyke (see page 437), which is quarried for the roads. From Hatfield's Survey, we learn that the tenants of Bolam paid 5s. annually to the farmers of Midrige Grange for leave to water their cattle at Wydhop-pool. The family of de la Pole formerly held a large estate in the township, by rents and services under the Percies. An inquisition taken on the death of Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland, states that he held forty acres of land in Bolam, of the Earl of Warwick. In 1510, Richard, Lord Lumley, died seised of this estate. By letters patent, granted in June, 1561, Richard Pursglove, the last prior of Guisborough, founded a school and hospital at that place, and endowed them with his lands, tenements, rents, and services in Bolam. This property, which consists of about 400 acres, still belongs to the institution, and gives to the six bedesmen of the hospital, in right of their life interest, the privilege of voting for members of parliament, for the southern division of the county of Durham. The Crawfurds, Garths, Raynes, Southern, Trotters, and Wranghams, formerly held estates here. The present landowners are the wardens of Guisborough Hospital, G. B. Wharton, Esq., Robert Surtees, Esq., the Duke of Cleveland, Rev. William Heslop, Rev. J. Birbeck, Thomas Peacock, Esq., Mr. William Gascoigne, Mr. George Morley, Mr. Robert Sanderson, and Mr. John Sowerby.

The Village of Bolam is four-and-a-half miles north-north-east of Gainford, and seven north-west of Darlington. It is situated on an eminence, commanding some good views of the neighbouring country, and comprises a chapel of ease, erected about twenty years ago, in which service is performed on Sundays by the vicar or curate of Gainford. A school, for the education of the children of the village, was erected here, in 1854, by G. B. Wharton, Esq.

CLEATLAM, a township, partly in the parish of Staindrop, contains 1,097 acres; the annual value is £1,166 10s. 4d., and the landowners are John Bowes, Esq., John Smith, Esq., Miss Moses, John Barnes, Esq., and Lady Strathmore. It contained in 1801, 73 inhabitants; in 1811, 103; in 1821, 126; in 1831, 94; in 1841, 95; and in 1851, 107. The principal estate here is one of the hereditary possessions of the Bowes family, who also acquired other property from a family named Ward. The collegiate church of Staindrop, and the chantry of St. John the Baptist, in St. Andrew's Auckland, had lands in Cleatlam, in which were also the estates forfeited by Sir John Somerset.

The Village of Cleatlam is situated on an eminence, three-and-a-half miles north-west from Gainford, and two miles south-by-east from Staindrop.

GAINFORD is a township in the parish of the same name, and the property of the Duke of Cleveland, William L. Raine, Esq., Christopher Craddock, Esq., Thomas Smarthaite, Esq., John F. Elliott, Esq., John S. Goodger, Esq., Thomas S. Edger, Esq., Mr. Robert Elliott, and others. Its area is 2,274 acres; and the value of property assessed to the county rate in 1853 was £3,785 15s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 445; in 1811, 431; in 1821, 500; in 1831, 524; in 1841, 585; and in 1851, 669. This township anciently gave name to an extensive manor and territory, comprehending all that side of the county of Durham in which it is situated; and Simeon of Durham informs us, that the church and vill, which had been built here, by Egfrid, bishop of Lindisfarne, were by him given to the see of St. Cuthbert. Camden mentions the occupation of this place by the Danes; and, according to the ancient chroniclers, Gainford was one of the places which Bishop Aldune mortgaged to the Earls of Northumberland, and were never restored to the see. Bishop de Carileph having offended William Rufus by espousing the cause of his brother Robert, the king granted the forest of Teesdale and Marwood, together with the manors of Marwood and Gainford, to Guy Baliol, who had come into England with the Conqueror. This manor continued to be a separate honour, with Barnard Castle, held by that family till the attainder of John Baliol; when, notwithstanding the bishop's right of forfeitures in the county, these places were seized by the king, and granted to Guy Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, to be by him held in capite of the crown. The lands in this township were subsequently granted and distributed in comparatively small freeholds. The present proprietors are those above mentioned. The manorial rights of Gainford were purchased from the crown, about the year 1684, by Sir Henry Vane, and are now possessed by the Duke of Cleveland.

The Village of Gainford is situated four miles south-east of Staindrop, about nine miles from Darlington, and the same distance from Barnard Castle. It occupies the declivity of a hill, which slopes gradually to the Tees; and in its western part is one of those open spaces or greens, so characteristic of this part of the county, and around which the principal houses of the village are situated. Gainford is well supplied with excellent water from several springs in the neighbourhood. The county police have a station here, under the Barnard Castle division; and there is a post office, three inns, and the usual tradesmen's shops. The railway between Darlington and Barnard Castle passes near the village, the line crossing the Tees twice in the neighbourhood.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary, is supposed to occupy the site of the one mentioned in the grant of Bishop Egfrid; and several fragments of sculptured crosses, &c., are built up in its walls. The erection of the present church is ascribed to the community of St. Mary's Abbey, York, about the middle of the 13th century. It is situated on the south side of the village green, and consists of nave and aisle, chancel, and a square western tower, containing three bells and a good clock. The tower is open to the nave, and is supported by pointed arches, and similar ones, of unequal span, resting on cylindrical pillars, separate the nave and aisles. The chancel opens from the nave under a plain pointed arch, supported by brackets, beneath which are traces of the masonry on which the beam supporting the rood-loft formerly rested. There is a rich sepulchral stone in the floor of the chancel, sculptured with a chalice, and other emblems. A fragment of another sculpture lies near it; there are also several other monumental stones and brasses in various parts of the church and churchyard. There was a chantry in this church, dedicated to the patron saint of the parish: its income was valued at £2 9s. 4d. It was of course suppressed at the dissolution of the religious houses; and its last incumbent, John Betson, received a pension of £4 per annum. Guy Baliol, after acquiring the lordship of Gainford, gave its church two ox-gangs of land, and the tenth of the demesne of his manor, with the churches of Stainton, and of Stokesley, in Yorkshire, to the abbey of St. Mary, at York, for the benefit of the soul of King Henry, Henry's father, King William, his mother, Queen Matilda, his brother, King William, and his son William; as also for his own soul, and that of Dionisia, his wife, Barnard Baliol, his nephew, and of all the faithful departed. After the dissolution, the living of Gainford, including the great tithes of the whole parish, and the advowson of the vicarage, was granted by the crown to Trinity College, Cambridge, the vicar presenting to the dependent chapelries. The parish register commences in 1560. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Darlington, valued in the Liber Regis at £36 6s. 0½d.; gross income, £1,020 per annum. Patrons, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge; vicar, the Rev. George Macfarlan, M.A.

The Vicarage House adjoins the church, and has been considerably enlarged by the present incumbent.

St. Osmund's (Catholic) Church is a neat building in the early English style, and consists of a nave measuring inside fifty-nine by twenty-five feet. The east window is a triplet, surmounted by a trefoil window; and contains representations of Our Saviour, St. Osmund, and St. Thomas Aquinas. The side windows, the two west-end windows, and porch windows, are all single lancets, and are filled with figured glass, on the outside of which is a second glass of rough plate. The stained glass is by Mr. J. Gibson, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. The roof of the church, which is open, is beautifully painted a scroll pattern; monograms of the Blessed Virgin, and other appropriate emblems, alternating in each bay. Along the ribs is painted the Litany of Loretto, and on the couples and cornices, various verses of the Psalms in scrolls. The chancel end of the roof is considerably more enriched, and is appropriated to emblems of the Passion of Our Lord, and the symbols of the Evangelists, which are in gold and colours. The decorations are by Mr. Henderson, of Newcastle, late of Edinburgh. The shafts of the chancel roof terminate on large carved figures of angels, richly decorated; and on the altar are coloured figures of the four Evangelists. The altar is open and supported on foliated pillars; the illuminations on the back are particularly chaste and beautiful. The reredos is highly decorated, as is in fact the whole of the chancel. The pulpit is of Caen stone, on the front of which are two well carved angels bearing on a scroll the words—"Blessed are they who hear the word of God and keep it." This beautiful structure has been erected through the liberality of the Rev. T. Witham, of Lartington Hall; the corner stone was laid on the 2nd March, 1854, and the church was solemnly opened on the 26th June, 1855, on which occasion the Bishop of Hexham officiated. Attached to the church there is an excellent presbytery, or residence for the priest.

The Independent Chapel, a neat stone edifice, in the early English style, was opened on the 1st January, 1850. It is lighted on the sides by eight lancet-headed windows, at the south end by two of a similar kind, and a large three-light window over the door. The weathering of the gables, finials, and label moulds are very neat, and the roof is elevated and strong. The side walls and angles are supported by buttresses of hewn stone, which give a strong and substantial appearance to the building. The pulpit is part of an octagon, with Gothic-headed panels, and moulded framing. The chapel will accommodate about 130 persons, and was erected at an expense of £350. It is warmed by hot water and fitted up with gas, and will accommodate about 300 persons.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was erected in 1834, and enlarged in 1851; it contains 190 sittings.

The Parish School is a substantial building of considerable age, and stands near the entrance of the churchyard. Henry Greswold, vicar of Gainford, who for many years gave an annual donation of £6 to the school, on October 12th, 1601, gave £100 to John Raine, Henry Eden, Cuthbert Swainston, and Cuthbert Raine, to be laid out in the purchase of lands or an annuity, the proceeds to be paid towards a yearly salary for the schoolmaster, for teaching the poor children of the parish. In January, 1804, the representatives of two of the obligees paid in £25 each, which, together with £39 10s. 6d., an ancient poor stock, was laid out in the purchase of £156 0s. 3d. Three-per-cent Consols, in the names of the Earl of Darlington and R. E. D. Shafto, Esq. The remaining £50 had been previously paid up, and invested on mortgage of the tolls of the turnpike road leading from Barnard Castle to Stockton, producing £2 10s. interest yearly. The schoolmaster receives this sum, and £2 10s. 2d. as his proportion of the dividends from the above stock, for which he instructs in reading, writing, and accounts, six children recommended by the churchwardens, from any part of the parish exclusively of the chapelry of Barnard Castle.

The village contains a respectable boarding school, for the education of young gentlemen, conducted most efficiently by the Rev. William Bowman, assisted by three resident tutors. This gentleman has erected a small gasometer for his establishment, but allows parties the use of it at a certain rental. There is also a girls' school.

The Literary Institute and Newsroom was established in November, 1852, and now contains a library of nearly 600 volumes, and a newsroom well supplied with the metropolitan and local papers, periodicals, &c. It occupies a building in the western part of the village, consisting of a large room for public lectures, a library, and suitable offices; the whole erected, from designs furnished by Mr. T. Gibson, architect, of Newcastle, at an expense of upwards of £400. President, Rev. George Macfarlan, M.A.; treasurer, Thomas Raine, Esq.; secretary, Mr. M. W. Davison.

Gainford Hall stands at the west end of the village; it is supposed to occupy the site of the ancient manor house, and appears never to have been finished. Its appearance at the ends is that of three tall gable-ended houses joined together. The south entrance is highly decorated with fluted pilasters and other ornaments. Over the doorway in the north front are the arms and name of John Cradock, 1600, and the initials I. C., M. C., and B. C. The rooms are wainscotted, and the windows square and mullioned. The hall is the property of Captain Cradock, and is occupied by Mr. Thomas Raine.

Selaby Hall, an elegant mansion, is delightfully situated to the north of the road leading from Gainford to Barnard Castle, about half-a-mile north from the Tees; and the estate, which is well wooded, contains about 750 acres. It was formerly the seat of the ancient family of Brackenbury, one of whom, Robert, second son of Sir William de Brackenbury, was appointed, with thirty others, in February, 1342, to array all the defensible men in Darlington Ward to oppose the Scots. Sir Robert Brackenbury, whose name is familiar to the readers of Shakspeare, was proprietor of Selaby. He was the second son of Thomas Brackenbury, of Denton, and was lieutenant of the tower during the reign of Richard III., to whom he appears to have been faithfully attached, and died with him on Bosworth Field, when the estate passed to his nephew Richard, fifth son of Anthony Brackenbury, of Selaby, bailiff of Gainford. He was gentleman usher to Queen Elizabeth, and frequently employed in many important transactions by the sovereign. The family failing in issue male, Selaby was transferred by marriage to the Marshalls, of Newcastle-on-Tyne; and afterwards to the Freemans, of Batsford, Gloucestershire. It is now the property of the Duke of Cleveland.

Alwent, a little to the south of Selaby, contains about 310 acres, and was anciently held by a family bearing the local name. It passed at an early period to the Nevilles, and afterwards to the Brackenburys, Marshalls, Thompsons, and others; it is now held by the trustees of the late Earl of Strathmore, and John Chapman, Esq.

Snow Hall, situated on a fine declivity near the Tees, about a mile east of Gainford, was formerly the residence of the Raines and Wrights; from the latter of whom it passed to the Sherwoods, with whom it still remains. East or Low Greystone, a little to the north, was formerly a part of the same estate, but has for some years belonged to the Elliotts.

Charities.—Besides the parish school, elsewhere described, this parish possesses the following charities:—Some person unknown, in 1639, gave to the poor of Gainford £20; Robert Burrell, in 1665, £18 13s. 9d.; and Mary Swainston, in 1738, £2. The poor stock, invested as stated in the account of the parish schools, is supposed to have arisen from these donations; and a moiety of £1 17s. 4d., from the dividends thereof, is given away at Christmas and Easter amongst the poor of the parish (except those of Barnard Castle), one-fourth being appropriated to each quarter, in small sums of 6d. to 1s. each. Four other sums of money, amounting to £26, were lent out; but no interest has been paid on them for many years.

HEADLAM township contains 780 acres, and its annual value is £1,104 0s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 89; in 1811, 175; in 1821, 232; in 1831, 109; in 1841, 117; and in 1851, 129 souls. This township, at a very early period, was the property of the Headlam family; and we find that it subsequently formed part of the forfeited estates of the Earl of Westmoreland. The property was afterwards much divided, and is now held by the Duke of Cleveland, William Clarke, Esq., John Hett, Esq., Miss Colpitts, Mr. Christopher Wilson, the executors of Thomas Maude, Esq., and others.

The Village of Headlam is pleasantly situated on the south side of an eminence, two miles north-west of Gainford, and three-and-a-half east-by-south of Staindrop, and is watered by a small stream, which, after supplying the hall ponds, pursues a south-easterly course, and falls into the Tees at Carlbury. In the middle of the village are the remains of an ancient chapel, now converted into a stable!

Headlam Hall, the residence and property of the representatives of the late John Hett, Esq., occupies a retired situation at the east end of the village, and appears to have been erected in the time of Elizabeth or of James I. In ancient times the Birbecks resided here. The house and grounds command views up and down the valley of the Tees, extending on the south to the Yorkshire hills, and on the west and north-west including the woods of Raby and the distant hills of Teesdale.

LANGTON township comprises an area of 1,061 acres; the annual value is £1,175 6s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 78; in 1811, 65; in 1821, 90; in 1831, 107; in 1841, 99; and in 1851, 95. Langton was one of the unrestored places resigned to the earls of Northumberland by Bishop Aldune, and afterwards belonged to the Nevilles. It is now the property of the Duke of Cleveland.

The Hamlet of Langton is about two miles north of Gainford, and three east-by-south of Staindrop.

Langton Grange was for some years occupied by the dowager Countess of Darlington, afterwards by Captain Watts, and is now the residence of Archibald Cochrane, Esq.

MORTON TYNEMOUTH, a small township containing 399 acres, is said to derive the name of Tynemouth from having at one time been the property of Tynemouth priory. Its annual value is £498 17s. It contained in 1801, 23 inhabitants; in 1811, 28; in 1821, 31; in 1831, 19; in 1841, 28; and in 1851, 28. This was one of the villis resigned by Bishop Aldune to the Earls of Northumberland, but it appears to have reverted to the see of Durham; for we find that Bishop Kellaw granted to Thomas de Greystanes five messuages, 45 acres of arable, and one of meadow in Morton nigh Kyllerby, to hold by the thirtieth part of a knight's fee. The estate was held by the families of Graystones, Morton, Alwent, and Birkbeck, and was purchased in the latter part of the seventeenth century, by the Cradocks, in which family it still remains; Christopher Cradock, Esq., being the present proprietor. The Duke of Cleveland is lord of the manor.

PIERCEBRIDGE township forms a portion of Gainford parish, though, like Summerhouse, it is in the south-east division of Darlington ward; but it is a member of the Darlington sub-district of the Poor Law Union. It comprises an area of 920 acres; and the value of the property assessed to the county-rate in 1853, was £1,184 6s. 6d. The population in 1801, was 193; in 1811, 231; in 1821, 236; in 1831, 278; in 1841, 224; and in 1851, 235 souls. The principal land owner is the Duke of Cleveland, who is also lord of the manor. Piercebridge was one of the places resigned to the Earls of Northumberland; and, as it afterwards formed a portion of the possessions of the Novilles, thirteen of its inhabitants joined the insurrection of the last earl, two of whom suffered death.

The Village of Piercebridge is beautifully situated on the banks of the Tees, five-and-a-half miles west-by-north of Darlington; and is supposed to derive its name from Priest-bridge; the bridge over the Tees, previously of wood, being said to have been built of stone by two priests of the neighbourhood. It includes an open green; and the road passes through it to the bridge, below which is an ancient corn-mill. There are two schools, and a post-office receiving-house; the houses are mostly cottages. The bridge, which here crosses the Tees to Cliffe, is of three arches. Previous to the great flood of November 1771, the timber, piles, and foundations of an ancient bridge were visible at a short distance further down the river; but were torn up and washed away on that occasion. Piercebridge occupies the site of a Roman station, to the east of which, the great Roman-road, the Watling-street, entered the county from Yorkshire, and passed on in the direction of the present road to Legs Cross, towards Binchester (see page 207). Several writers agree in placing the station Magis at Piercebridge. A part of the western vallum remained till 1822, when it was demolished, and the stones used in the erection of farm-buildings, with the exception of a few that retained fragments of inscriptions; but the north and west sides of the mounds are still visible. This ancient work was evidently intended to protect the ford by which the road from the south passed towards Scotland; and Mr. Maclauchlan supposes that the station here, with Howbury Camp, that at Greta Bridge, and the commanding post at the ford of Baruforth, called Old Richmond, formed a line of defence to this part of the Tees. A great quantity of "Roman remains," consisting of coins, urns, and other antiquities, have been found in and around this station. A beautiful gold-coin was discovered April 6th, 1853, bearing the following inscription:—(Obv.)—"IMP TRAIANO AVG G E R D A C P M T R P." (Rev.)—"COS V P P S P Q R OPTIMO PRINC." It is now in the possession of Mr. M. A. Denham. There was formerly a chapel in the neighbourhood of the bridge, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, which is mentioned as early as 1315-6. It possessed a chantry of the annual value of £2 2s. 4d. There was also another chapel dedicated to St. Helen, but its origin and history are alike unknown. On December 2nd, 1642, the Earl of Newcastle, on his march towards York, was opposed for several hours at Piercebridge by Captain Hotham, with a small party of Fairfax's horse and two pieces of cannon. The royalists erected a battery on Carlbury hill, the parliamentarians on the opposite banks. Rushworth says, "The Earl of Newcastle did overpower the Lord Fairfax's force with great cannon." In this skirmish, Colonel Thomas Howard was killed, and several other officers of the royal party. The earl, after forcing the passage, continued his march to York; while Hotham retreated to Lord Fairfax's quarters at Tadcaster.

SUMMERHOUSE township is in the south-east division of Darlington ward, and in the Aycliffe sub-division of the Darlington Poor Law Union. Its area is 809 acres, and annual value £1,028 11s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 158; in 1811, 156; in 1821, 189; in 1831, 192; in 1841, 165; and in 1851, 177. This place formerly belonged to the Nevilles; but after the attainder, the estate was sold, and became the property of the Sandfords of Hewgill Castle, Cumberland. It was afterwards held by the Honeywoods and Baileys, from the latter of whom it was purchased by the Duke of Cleveland, the present proprietor.

The Hamlet of Summerhouse is situated on the turnpike road between Staindrop and Darlington, six miles west-north-west from the latter place, and two north-east from Gainford. It contains a public-house, a few tradesmen's shops, and a subscription school, capable of accommodating 70 children.

INGLETON CHAPELRY DISTRICT.

Ingleton chapelry district was formed by an order in council, bearing date January 13th, 1845; and consisted of the townships of Hilton, Ingleton, and Wackerfield; but by an order in council January 8th, 1850, the township of Killerby, in the parish of Heighington, was separated from the said parish, and united to this chapelry district. It is bounded on the north by the parochial chapelry of St. Helen's Auckland, on the north-west by the parish of Cockfield, on the west and south-west by a portion of Staindrop parish, and on the south and east by the parish of Gainford.

HILTON township comprises an area of 1,092 acres, and its annual value is £861. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 88; in 1811, 104; in 1821, 113; in 1831, 118; in 1841, 112; and in 1851, 101 souls. The manor of Hilton was formerly held of the Nevilles by the family of Bowes; and thirteen of its inhabitants taking part in the Rising of the North, three of them suffered death in consequence. The manors of Hilton and Bradbury were granted to Thomas Emmerson, Esq., for 1,000 years, under the yearly rent of £550. It afterwards passed to the Mannings, who sold it to the Marleys, and it was subsequently held by the Hiltons. The present proprietors are, the Duke of Cleveland (who is also lord of the manor), Christopher Cradock, Esq., Mr. George Wheatley, George Brownless, Esq., Mr. John Lodge, Mrs. Ann Sanderson, and others.

The Village of Hilton occupies a pleasant situation on an eminence, three miles east-north-east of Staindrop, and is principally inhabited by agricultural labourers.

Hilton Hall, the ancient seat of the Hiltons, is now occupied by Mr. J. Johnson Reed.

INGLETON township was one of those places included in the grant of Canute to the church of Durham. It was afterwards held by the Nevilles, as a member of the barony of Raby; and a portion of the land was held under them by the family of Bowes. The principal land owners at present are, Timothy Hutchinson, Esq., Rev. Peter Barlow, Mr. Christopher Middleton, Mr. John Wade, Mr. Thomas Smith, Mr. John Emmerson, Mr. William Emmerson, and others. The Duke of Cleveland is lord of the manor. The township contains 813 acres; and the annual value of property assessed for the county-rate in 1853 was £1,261, 11s. 3d. Its population in 1801, was 236; in 1811, 285; in 1821, 203; in 1831, 355; in 1841, 344; and in 1851, 305 souls.

The Village of Ingleton is situated on the high road between Darlington and Staindrop, three miles from the latter place; and contains a few public-houses, the customary shops, and a post-office.

The Chapel, dedicated to St. John, is a neat, plain edifice, in the early pointed style, and consists of a nave and chancel, the latter being entered by an elegant archway. There is a bell-turret and an entrance porch at the west; the chapel contains 206 sittings, the whole of which are free and unappropriated. The cost of erection, amounting to £480, was defrayed by subscription, and by a donation of £100 from the Church Building Society, and a similar sum from the Duke of Cleveland. A spacious burial ground is attached. The living is in the patronage of the Vicar of Staindrop; incumbent, the Rev. Martin Wright.

The Village School was rebuilt by subscription in 1816; after which it was partly pewed off, by the consent of the freeholders of the township, to serve as a place of worship for the Methodist body. It is still used as a Primitive Methodist Chapel; and the church Sunday-school is held in the same building.

KILLERBY township is completely isolated from the main body of the parish, being surrounded by that of Gainford. It contains 605 acres, and its annual value is £908 15s. 5d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 66; in 1811, 85; in 1821, 107; in 1831, 95; in 1841, 105; and in 1851, 93 souls. We learn from Boldon Book that there were formerly twelve villains and two cottagers here, who rendered divers services, money-rents, and payments in kind. At the time of Hatfield's Survey, we find that John de Killerby, John Robertson, and Hugh Herreson, held lands here. Killerby was afterwards possessed by a younger branch of the Brackenbury family, from whom it passed, in 1591, to the Birbecks, of Morton Tynemouth. It was subsequently the property of various families, and is now held by William Clark, Esq., Christopher Cradock, Esq., the Duke of Northumberland, Mr. William Wass, Messrs. William and Thomas Raine, Messrs. Henry and William Wade, and others.

The Village of Killerby is situated seven miles north-west of Darlington, and our east-south-east from Staindrop.

WACKERFIELD is a township to the west of that of Hilton, and the property of the Duke of Cleveland, Mr. George Wheatley, Mr. John Young, Mr. Brunskill, Mr. William Horsley, Mrs. Hall, and others. It comprises an area of 744 acres, and its annual value is £1,011 18s. 11d. In 1801 it contained 94 inhabitants; in 1811, 113; in 1821, 105; in 1831, 112; in 1841, 128; and in 1851, 136. This was also one of the places included in the gift of Canute, and was held of the priory of Durham in the time of Cardinal Langley, by fealty and 12d. rent. It was afterwards held by the Nevilles, as a member of Raby, and is now the property of the gentlemen above mentioned. The Duke of Cleveland possesses the manorial rights and privileges.

MIDDLETON-IN-TEESDALE PARISH.

Middleton-in-Teesdale is an extensive parish, forming the south-western extremity of the county of Durham, and comprises the four townships of Middleton, Eggleston, Newbiggin, and Forest and Frith. It is bounded on the north by Stanhope parish, on the west and south-west and south by the counties of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Yorkshire, on the east by Stanhope parish, and on the north-east by Lyesack chapelry. Eggleston Common, now a stinted pasture, forms the eastern portion of the parish. Middleton Common (now enclosed), Newbiggin Common (partially enclosed and the remainder stinted), Ettersgill Common, and Langdon Beck Common, extend along its northern boundary; and West and Back Commons are situated in the west and south-west. The whole of the extensive territory included in the parish of Middleton-in-Teesdale, which anciently consisted of a large forest and chase, was held, with the lordship of Barnard Castle, by the Baliols and their successors; and, like the other estates forfeited by the Earl of Westmoreland in 1569, it has become, with the exception of Eggleston, the property of the Duke of Cleveland. "The face of the country in this extensive parish," observes Mackenzie, "presents a striking contrast to those parts of the county already described. At the distance of a few miles above Barnard Castle, the view on the Durham side of the Tees begins to wear a desolate aspect; trees are only to be seen within a few fields of the river, beyond which steep and lofty fells continue to rise above each other, uncheered by a single hedgerow, the inclosures being universally loose stone walls. Still, the prospects on the south side of the river are beautiful for some distance, until at length the whole becomes one vast and cheerless scene of solitary wildness."

CAULDRON SNOOT, HIGH FORCE, &c.—The course of the Tees along the south-western border of this parish, displays a succession of natural wonders. The tour from Yadmoss to Cauldron Snout and the High Force is thus described by the ready pen of Mr. Sopwith:—"Pedestrian tourists, accustomed to mountain travelling, may readily find their way from the descents of Yadmoss to Cauldron Snout; but most visitors will do well to engage a guide, who may readily be procured by inquiry at any of the farms or 'onsteads.' From Harwood, access may nearly at all times be had on foot; but only in dry weather by horses. In either case it is a fatiguing journey of about three miles, chiefly over the steep and rugged sides of Harwood Fell. On gaining the summit of this lofty moor, an expansive but dreary prospect bursts upon the view. Wide and moss covered moors extend in a gradual slope to the Tees, which here winds its way through a wilderness of the most stern and desolate aspect. In the distance, a vast amphitheatre is formed by successive ranges of mountains in Yorkshire, Westmoreland, and Cumberland, and which, towards the north, seem blended like waves into each other. But the bright spot and redeeming interest of this prospect is the Weel, whose waters, spread in the hollow of a vast and dreary basin, present a beautiful contrast to the dark heath of the barren moors which surround it; while its wide and serpentine form give it the appearance of a broad river flowing through the midst of a desert. The Weel is a sullen lake, in breadth about half-a-mile, and three or four times that length, formed by the interception of the Tees by basaltic rocks, over which the water flows into a deep and rapidly descending gorge, and forms the waterfall of Cauldron Snout. On approaching the foot of the Weel, the rough road, over moss and ling, is suddenly more roughened by numerous projecting points and edges of basalt, which render either riding or walking both troublesome and somewhat dangerous. On descending the rocks, the visitor beholds the waters of the Tees rushing with impetuous force down a steep basaltic chasm of two or three hundred yards in length. Near the top is a wooden bridge, thirty feet long, over the fall, from whence the visitor may view the swift and foaming current beneath. The fall is interesting at any time, even in dry weather, the stream gambolling in its descent among the various channels which the rocks afford. But when the Tees is swollen with rains, it rushes down in one impetuous and unbroken torrent of almost resistless force, and, with its sides of frowning tower-like cliffs, forms a spectacle truly terrible and sublime. Following the course of the Tees by rugged banks for nearly five miles, the tourist reaches the well known cataract of High Force. The river, in traversing the mountainous country which has just been described, becomes rapidly augmented by various tributary streams, and, after its junction with Harwood Beck, assumes a wild and noble aspect. The fall of such a river, at fifteen miles from its source, over a precipice of upwards of fifty feet in height, may readily be conceived to be an object of the highest interest as regards remarkable and sublime scenery; and it is scarcely less interesting to the geologist from the clear development of the strata it displays.

"The river immediately above the fall is divided by a lofty rock with a greater and a lesser channel, the former of which in dry weather contains the whole stream, while at other times both channels are filled with impetuous torrents, which, rushing over the precipice, form a cataract on each side of the central mass of cliffs—

High o’er the river’s darksome bed.’

The principal channel is worn into a rugged descent at the edge, but the greater part, probably about forty or fifty feet, is quite perpendicular; and over this the descent of so large a body of water at all times insures a gratifying treat to all lovers of natural scenery. The lesser channel is considerably worn, so that, when dry, a person may, without much difficulty, climb up it, and examine the junction of the basalt with the adjoining strata. Hutchinson describes the main channel as having a perpendicular fall of eighty-two feet; but this is much over-rated. The height of the central rock is stated in the ‘Tour of Teesdale’ to be only sixty-three feet; the entire perpendicular height of the fall probably does not exceed fifty feet, and the inclining falls above may be fifteen or twenty feet more. Nearly one half of the entire depth of the adjacent rocks consists of basalt, which, in the middle of the stream towers up into a rugged, but picturesque summit. Except in high floods, this station may be easily gained, and from thence the spectator can look down and behold the rolling torrent precipitated into the abyss below. Being on the giddy verge of so lofty a rock, the rapidity of the stream, the thundering noise with which it mingles with the deep sullen waters below, and the clouds of foam which often reflect the iris’ lovely hues, altogether combine to produce mingled sensations of terror, astonishment, and delight. Having taken this inverted view of the Force, the tourist, by walking about 300 yards along the top banks on the north side of the river, will find a somewhat rugged, but not very difficult descent down the rocks and underwood, and from the sides of the river may command a view of the fall at various distances. Here lofty precipices on each side form a magnificent amphitheatre, on the sides of which may be traced the rapid rise of the strata in a north-west direction, and the basalt regularly ranging with other strata. The upper part and summit are more or less covered with brushwood and a few ash and yew trees; while, at the extremity of the vista, the ceaseless roar of the descending flood completes the majestic character of the scene."

THE LONDON LEAD COMPANY.—"The population of the parish of Middleton-in-Teesdale," says Mr. Fordyce, "is chiefly employed in lead mining, and in the smelting works connected therewith. The Duke of Cleveland is proprietor of the largest portion of the mines, and Timothy Hutchinson, Esq., of the remainder. Neither of these proprietors work the mines themselves, but let them to different mining adventurers at a render of a pecuniary composition in lieu of one-sixth of the ore raised. But in order to give encouragement to further exploration, Mr. Hutchinson had agreed to accept a reduced composition, on the basis of a render of one-eighth of the raisings from the whole of his mineral ground, with the exception of those portions of the veins under which levels had been previously driven. 'The Corporation of the Governor and Company for smelting down Lead with Pit Coal and Sea Coal' (usually styled the Lead Company, see page 100), are the chief lessees of the lead mines, the produce of which is converted into pig lead and de-silverised at their Eggleston smelting works. The refined lead of this company, produced from their Teesdale mines, is shipped from the Tees, and is very generally used in the manufacture of whitelead, for which it is found well adapted. The produce from these mines has recently been on the increase: and in the year ending October, 1854, about 4,000 tons of pig lead were realised. The mining operations of the lead company in the north of England have, for many years past, been conducted with a high regard to the promotion of the welfare of the numerous body of workmen employed; and it is a most satisfactory and pleasing fact to find, in these days of migratory labour, that the company's present operatives are the descendants of a line of people who for generations have served the same employers. Great attention is paid to the ventilation of the mines, and to the lodgment of the men and boys when engaged at a distance from their homes; and the substantial and commodious erections the company have fitted up for the accommodation of their workmen at Sharnberry, Lodgesyke, Manorgill, and, more particularly at their newly-opened mine at Little Egglesthope, in connection with the extensive underground levels at the mines, all supported with stone arches, indicate that the operations of the company are contemplated to be of a lasting character. The practical mine agents of the company are usually selected from the most intelligent and best conducted of their overmen, and these latter from those of a similar character among the workmen; thus affording to the youth in the company's employment a great inducement to their mental and moral improvement, and to the exercise of their skill and energies. The bargains to the miners are let quarterly, which gives the men a stake and interest in the places wherein they are engaged; and in arranging and fixing the bargains, the judgment and experience, not only of the agents, but also of their fellow agents engaged in the other mining districts of the company, are put in requisition by the company's superintendent. The agents are not allowed to engage in other business, or to supply any goods to the workmen; and the latter are left perfectly free in the disposal of their wages, except the company's discountenance of drunkenness can be considered an interference. The company, many years ago, built a store shop at Nenthead, in Alston Moor, which is let to a tenant on the express condition that he shall sell exclusively for ready money; but even there the workmen are left entirely unbiassed in the outlay of their earnings, and nothing in the shape of truck is allowed to exist. In Teesdale, the company's workmen, in 1848, established a corn society, for the purpose of obtaining a supply of grain and other articles of consumption at moderate prices; and, although the company aided them in this enterprise, yet every one is left entirely to his own discretion as to becoming a member of the society. The wages are paid in monthly advances on account, and the balance at the end of the year. All monies are paid direct to the workmen in the company's own offices, and no part thereof, on any account, in a public house, or through any interested medium. Medical attendance and medicine, for the workmen and their families, are provided at the cost of the company. In 1817, the company established a fund throughout their works, for aiding their men in sickness and old age, and yielding other benefits. For some years after its first establishment, the payments were so much in excess of the capital, as to induce a state of bankruptcy; but, through judicious arrangements, and the liberal aid of the company (who for many years contributed £450 annually to it), the fund has now attained a position for meeting all its liabilities. The present yearly contribution of each member is 30s.; and the allowances are, for sickness, 7s. per week; and for pension on attaining sixty-five years, 5s. per week; with £2 for funeral expenses, and £3 to the widow or family on the death of a member. The state of the funds undergoes a septennial revision by a professional actuary; and the benefits are increased or diminished by the fund committee (composed of the company's district agents and of men selected by and from the workmen at large) with his advice. In November 1853, the number of fund members was 884, and the invested capital amounted to £21,221 14s. 11d. In the promotion of education, the company have been among the foremost; their schools for their workmen's children in Middleton-in-Teesdale, and at Nenthead, in Alston Moor, having been erected in 1818 and 1819, at the instance of their late superintendent, Mr. Stagg. At these schools, the company provide and pay the masters, and find books, stationery, and every school requisite; and in return exact regularity of attendance from the age of six to that of twelve in the case of boys, and up to fourteen in the case of girls then remaining members of their parents' family, and a contribution of 1s. per quarter from the parents of each child taught, with the exception of orphans and the children of widows, who are taught free. Admission into the company's employment is made dependant upon a school character; and on passing a satisfactory Bible examination, each child is presented with a handsome Bible, having inscribed thereon 'The Gift of the Lead Company.' A free library has for many years existed, not only for the use of the scholars attending the schools, but of the whole of the company's workmen. It now contains about 1,000 volumes; and additions thereto are from time to time being made. In 1854, the company erected a reading-room at Masterman Place, for the use of their workmen; and it is intended that this room shall be heated, lighted, and kept in order at the cost of the company, leaving the men to provide books, periodicals, and newspapers from their own resources." Governor of the Company, John Masterman, Esq., M.P.; deputy-governor, Octavius Wigram, Esq.; superintendent, Robert W. Bainbridge, Esq.

EGGLESTON is a township, forming the western portion of the parish, and containing an area of 7,919 acres. Its population in 1801 was 306; in 1811, 335; in 1821, 404; in 1831, 623; in 1841, 617; and in 1851, 636 souls. The annual value is £2,335 11s. 7d. This manor formed part of the possessions of the Earls of Westmoreland; and, on the failure of the rising in the north, in 1569, it was confiscated to the crown. It was purchased from the citizens of London, in 1631, by John Child, Esq., of the Inner Temple, and Daniel Britain, citizen and vintner, who, in the following year, conveyed it to Tobias Ewbank, of Staindrop. It was afterwards the property of the Sandersons, and subsequently passed to the Hutchinsons, with whom it still remains. The moors and commons, with the exception of a small portion, called Folly, or Forgyll farm, have been enclosed and divided, in accordance with the provisions of various acts of parliament. The principal landowners are Timothy Hutchinson, Esq., Mr. Joshua Raine, Mr. John Gibson, Mr. George Todd, Mr. John Stephenson, Mr. Robert Barnes, Miss Dowson, Mr. Anthony Addison, Mr. Albert Raine, Mr. Thomas Robinson, Mr. John Robinson, the Rector of Middleton, and others.

The Village of Eggleston is situated about four miles south-west of Middleton, and six north-by-west of Barnard Castle. It is intersected by a small stream, which rises in the neighbouring hills, and communicates with Yorkshire by a bridge over the river. The London Lead Company have a smelting mill at a short distance from the village, erected under the direction of Robert Stagg, Esq., and so constructed and arranged that the lead-ore requires no lifting, but descends from process to process, until it is brought out as lead at the lower part of the mill. Here is an ancient chapel of ease, a neat building, consisting of nave and chancel, and capable of accommodating 150 persons. The living is a curacy, not in charge, nor certified, but endowed by a grant from Queen Anne's Bounty. The rector of Middleton, who presents to the living, pays an annual stipend of £6 to the curate; and, by an order in council, dated April 17th, 1844, the ecclesiastical commissioners were empowered to make an annual grant of £27 to the chapelry of Eggleston, the net income of which was to be £100. The Rev. W. Brown, B.A., is the present incumbent. There is also a Wesleyan chapel, and two schools, in which nearly 100 children are educated. The schools are supported by the benevolence of Timothy Hutchinson, Esq., Mrs. Hutchinson, the Duke of Cleveland, and the London Lead Company.

The Eggleston Mechanics Institution, established about ten years ago, holds its meetings, &c., in the school-room, and possesses a library of upwards of 400 volumes. Rev. W. Brown, president; Mr. William Pinkey, secretary.

Eggleston Hall, the property and seat of Timothy Hutchinson, Esq., is an elegant stone mansion, situated to the south-west of the village, and surrounded by tastefully arranged pleasure grounds, which form a striking contrast with the bleak hilly region in the immediate vicinity.

Charities.—For an account of Sanderson's Charity, one of the recipients of which must be an inhabitant of this township, see page 427. In the Savings Bank at Barnard Castle there is a sum of £20 lodged, which is stated to have been left many years ago by a lady, the interest to be given to the oldest poor widow at Eggleston. The interest, amounting to 17s. per annum, is distributed in accordance with the intentions of the donor.

FOREST and FRITH is an extensive township, commencing about four-and-a-half miles north-west from Middleton, and terminating on the borders of Westmoreland, near the source of the Tees. It consists of three parts, known as Ettersgill, Middle Forest, and Harwood Parts, whose united area is 17,270 acres. The property assessed to the county-rate was valued, in 1853, at £1,366 7s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 460; in 1811, 601; in 1821, 723; in 1831, 760; in 1841, 884; and in 1851, 904 souls. Harwood is a large district, occupying the western extremity of this township, where there are many lead mines, in which great numbers of the inhabitants are employed. There is a chapel of ease here, which was rebuilt in 1849; and a school rebuilt in 1853. The two form but one building, the wall of which is surmounted by a bell gable, dividing the one from the other. The cost of the chapel was £240, which though plain and unpretending in its appearance, is strictly ecclesiastical in character. The school is a continuation of the chapel westward, with a transept at the west end; and the cost of its erection was about £100. The chapel is dedicated to St. James, and divine service is performed in it every Sunday. There is another chapel at Forest, dedicated to St. Jude, which will accommodate about 300 persons. It is a neat Gothic structure, with an excellent parsonage house, both of which were erected by the Duke of Cleveland, who also allows £100 per annum towards the support of a clergyman. The Rev. J. L. Low, M.A., is the officiating minister, and performs duty also at Harwood once on each Sunday. There is a school at Low Forest, supported by a small quarterly payment from the children, and liberal contributions from the Duke of Cleveland and London Lead Company. About half a mile above the High Force there is a Baptist Chapel, erected by subscription, and capable of accommodating 160 persons. The poor's stock in this township is stated in the parish books at £39 10s.; but nothing of it now remains, nor has any interest been paid since 1780, when £33, previously in the hands of Margaret Bowes, was paid in and carried to the general township account.

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP OF MIDDLETON-IN-TEESDALE.

MIDDLETON-IN-TEESDALE township contains 10,434 acres, and extends from the river Tees on the south to Bollihope and Westenhope Commons, in the parish of Stanhope, on the north. Its annual value is £3,037 18s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 706; in 1811, 988; in 1821, 1,263; in 1831, 1,824; in 1841, 1,770; and in 1851, 1,849 souls. The principal landowners are the Duke of Cleveland (who is also lord of the manor), Anthony Todd, Esq., John Hill, Esq., Timothy Hutchinson, Esq., Mark Sherlock, Esq., Thomas Hobson, Esq., Joseph Thrip, Esq., Mr. James Hindmarsh, Mr. Isaac Collinson, Mr. Anthony Todd, jun., Mr. John Dent, Mr. James Longmires, Mr. William Brabham, the London Lead Mining Company, Mrs. Elizabeth Ainsley, Mr. John Watson, Rev. John H. Brown, and several others.

THE TOWN of Middleton is situated on the north bank of the Tees, 10 miles north-west of Barnard Castle, 12 miles south-west of Stanhope, and 253 north-north-west of London. It possesses no regular streets, the houses being scattered in rows, or singly, along the sides of the hills, on which the town is built. One part of it, however, Masterman Place, situated in the south-east portion of the town, is regular and ornamental. It was erected in 1823 by the Lead Company, under the direction of their managing agent, Robert Stagg, Esq., from designs furnished by J. Bonomi, Esq., of Durham; and consists of several rows of neat and convenient cottages, surrounded by a spacious garden, a portion of which is appropriated to each dwelling. The first occupants of those cottages took possession in May 1824, accompanied by bands of music, &c.; and, as vacancies occur, they are filled up by the company from amongst their most deserving workmen, each of whom pays a rent of £3 per annum for his cottage, and 10s. for his garden. Additional cottages have recently been erected, which are also let on the same principle.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Mary, is situated on a rising ground, on the north side of the town, and near the eastern bank of the Hudshope Beck. It is an antique structure, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, and a small tower, containing three bells; the latter stands a short distance north of the church. The principal entrance is by a south porch, under a pointed arch; an oblong and a cylindrical pillar form the aisle, and support an elliptical and two circular arches; the font is an upright cylinder of stone; the piscina remains in the wall near the north door of the chancel; and there is a pointed niche in the south wall, near the communion table. Several relieves of crosses are placed above the vestry door and the principal entrance to the church. At the entrance to the churchyard stands an ancient cross, consisting of a small round pillar, surmounted by a sun-dial, and rising from the centre of a square base, on each side of which there are three or four steps. The church, with "two oxgangs of land, a toft, and a croft," were part of the possessions of St. Mary's Abbey, York, the abbot of which formerly presented at the nomination of the Baliols, for the Bishop of Durham's institution. At the forfeiture of the Earl of Westmoreland, the right of presentation was vested in the crown. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Darlington, valued, in the Liber Regis, at £25 17s. 1d.; gross income, £600. The parish register commences in 1578. It is in the patronage of the queen, and incumbency of the Rev. John Henry Brown, M.A.

THE RECTORY HOUSE stands on an elevated site, north of the church, and has been nearly rebuilt by the present rector. The glebe, containing about fifty acres of land, is situated to the west of the town.

The Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans have also places of worship here.

THE PARISH SCHOOL.—By indentures of lease and release, dated March 18th and 19th, 1729, Christopher Stephenson and Mary his wife, Robert Haggart and Elizabeth his wife, and Margaret and Grace Robinson, which said Mary, Elizabeth, Margaret, and Grace, were the sisters and co-heiresses of William Robinson, deceased, conveyed to Edward Oxned and Joseph Bainbridge, and their heirs, a messuage and three closes, called Jacob Croft, Lenny Croft, and Kirk Close, all in Middleton, in trust, after the decease of the first-named parties, to apply the rents and profits for the endowment of a free school at Middleton. The property now belonging to the school consists of two closes, containing about three acres, let to a yearly tenant at £13 10s. rent; about five acres enclosed from the Fell, and allotted to the school under an inclosure act, let at 80s. a-year, the landlord paying the poor-rates; and about five or six acres of Fell, let at 6s. The school and house of the master having become much dilapidated, were repaired about the year 1833, partly with a sum of money obtained by the rector from the National School Society, and partly from his own resources; the buildings continued a long time unfinished, but were at length completed. The gross amount of the master's income, besides the use of the school-house and a small garden, is £15 6d. per annum, for which sixteen boys (eight in respect of what remains of the original endowment, and eight in respect of money laid out on the school-house), appointed by the rector and overseers, are instructed in reading, writing, accounts, and the church catechism, without any charge except for coals. He has also about thirty pay scholars; and the free children, if desired, are instructed with the others in drawing, geography, and mensuration.

Besides the parish school, and the Lead Company's school, the latter of which has been noticed in the sketch of the company at page 455, there are several private schools, which will be found in the Directory.

INSTITUTIONS, SOCIETIES, &c.—The Mechanics' Institution, established in 1847, holds its meetings in the Town Hall, and numbers about forty members, who possess a library of about 4,000 volumes. It is patronised by the Duke of Cleveland. There is also a Subscription Library, which is supported by the monthly payments of its members. A Floral and Horticultural Society has been established here for some time; and, in addition to these, there is a Parochial Clothing Society, a Fuel Society, for distributing coal to the poor of the township; two Miners' Refuge Clubs, a Benefit Club, a Court of Foresters, and a Savings Bank. A Market is held here every Saturday, at which a few samples of corn are sold; but Barnard Castle is the principal corn market of the district. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in April, and the second Thursday in September; but the cattle, sheep, and horse fair has been discontinued since the establishment of that at High Force. Middleton is one of the polling places for the southern division of the county. The Bridge across the Tees was erected by public subscription, and is a handsome structure of one arch.

THE TOWN HALL, situated at the west end of the town, was erected by the late Duke of Cleveland for the convenience of the markets. A railing round the lower storey encloses the stalls of the butchers; and the upper storey contains offices for the duke's agents, the Savings Bank, the Mechanics' Institution, &c.

CHARITIES.—Besides the parish school, the following charities belong to this parish:—Parish Land.—A parcel of land, containing 6a. 1r. 6p. belongs to the parish, though it is not known how acquired. A building, formerly used as a workhouse, stands upon it, and is now let in tenements, the rents being paid to the parish, and divided amongst the townships.—Thomas Perkin, of Hudgill, by will, February 9th, 1711-12, charged his house and close, called Hudgill Close, containing about three acres, with a yearly payment of 6s. to the poor of Middleton township, 10s. to those of Newbiggin, and 1<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>s. to those of Forest. On the Charity Commissioners' Inquiry, in 1828, no payment had been made for fourteen or fifteen years; and they wrote on the subject to the then proprietor, Mr. Thomas Robinson, who declared his intention to resume payment when called upon by the parish officers. The money, however, is still unpaid.—Under date of April 15th, 1719, in one of the parish books, there is an account of poor stock belonging to the township of Middleton, amounting to £28 15s. 4d., to which is added, "Left by Cuthbert Lind (de Poortree), £10, for which Dr. Allanson (the then rector, John Lind, and John Johnson, are trustees." In 1729, the stock at interest was £54, which, in 1764, was put out to interest in the hands of the trustees of the turnpike road between Appleby and Kendal. The interest, £2 11s. per annum, has been improperly carried to the general account of the poor's rate. The charities belonging exclusively to the townships of Eggleston, Newbiggin, and Forest and Frith, will be found noticed under their respective heads.

NEWBIGIN township comprises an area of 4,627 acres, and its annual value is £1,190 15s. 6d. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 281; in 1811, 294; in 1821, 416; in 1831, 507; in 1841, 516; and in 1851, 589. The principal land owners are the Duke of Cleveland (who is also the possessor of the manorial rights), Anthony Todd, Esq., Robert Lobsdale, Esq., Benjamin Lee, Esq., Messrs. Joseph and Robert Coatsworth, and others.

The Village of Newbiggin is situated on the north bank of the Tees, two-and-a-half miles north-west of Middleton. Here is a small Wesleyan chapel, and the Primitive Methodists have also a place of worship. The School possesses an endowment of £11. per annum, left by William Tarn, of London, in 1779, and for which the master supplies the school with fuel. The average attendance of scholars is about sixty. At Bowless Houses, there is a Primitive Methodist chapel, erected, about four years ago, on a site given by the Duke of Cleveland.

The Winch Bridge.—The river Tees is, near Bowless, crossed by the Winch Bridge. The original structure is said to have been the first suspension bridge in Europe; and its purpose was to afford a passage for the miners residing in the village of Holwick, on the south side of the river, to and from their works in the mines at Middleton. From long exposure to the weather, as well as from friction, this bridge became much dilapidated; and in August 1820, through the snapping of a chain, three men were thrown into the Tees, one of whom was killed. The bridge was soon afterwards repaired by the late Earl of Strathmore; but it was subsequently taken down, and a substantial foot-bridge erected in its stead by the late Duke of Cleveland.

Charities.—In addition to the school-endowment, this township possesses two charities; viz., £1 12s. 6d. per annum, the interest of £40, left by Cuthbert Lind to the poor of this township, which has been improperly carried to the account of the poor-rates; and the Poor Stock, amounting to £20, mentioned in the parish books as belonging to this township, but there is now no trace of it.

STAINDROP PARISH.

This parish, which comprises the townships of Staindrop, Raby and Keverstone, Shotton and Langley Dale, and a portion of Cleatlam, is bounded on the north by Cockfield parish and the chapelry of Lynesack, on the north-west and west by the chapelry of Barnard Castle, on the south by Gainford, and on the east by Ingleton. The townships of Hilton, Ingleton, and Wackerfield, previously portions of the parish of Staindrop, were, in 1845, formed into the parochial chapelry of Ingleton.

RABY AND KEVERSTONE township comprises an area of 2,752 acres, and its rateable value is £2,640 12s. 11d. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 218; in 1811, 201; in 1821, 203; in 1831, 247; in 1841, 284; and in 1851, 313. It contains several scattered farm-houses, Raby Castle, with its beautiful and extensive parks, and a number of cottages. That portion of the township called Keverstone is an elevated piece of ground, which commands a wide view over a delightful valley to the east. It was held by the Setons under the priors of Durham, till it was forfeited by Christopher Seton, during the episcopate of Bishop Beck. Edward I. granted it to Geoffrey de Hethpole, from whom it was purchased by an ancestor of the Duke of Cleveland. Raby formed part of a grant of King Canute in Staindropshire, and was also included, though not by name, in that of Prior Algar and the priory to Dolphin, son of Uchtred, Earl of Northumberland. We find it first mentioned as being the lordship of Meldred, the son of Dolphin; and his successor, Robert FitzMeldred, intermarried with Isabel, daughter of Geoffrey, and sister and heiress of Henry de Neville, who died without issue, in 1227. The founder of the Neville family was Gilbert, an admiral in the fleet of the Norman conqueror, whose grandson, Geoffrey, married Emma, daughter and heiress of Bertram Bulmer,* and gratitude for the possessions acquired by these marriages induced Geoffrey, the son of Robert Fitz-Meldred and Isabel his wife, to assume the surname of Neville. Raby remained in the possession of the Neville family till the disastrous rising of the north, on the failure of which it was seized by the crown, and remained vested in the sovereign till 1613, when it was granted, with Barnard Castle, &c., by James I., to his favourite the Earl of Somerset; but after a brief possession, they reverted to the monarch. They were subsequently purchased by Sir Henry Vane, and have descended from him, in a direct line, to their present possessor the Duke of Cleveland.

Raby Castle is situated about a mile north of the town of Staindrop, and is traditionally supposed to occupy the site of the mansion given by Canute to the church of Durham. The present edifice is, however, principally indebted for its splendour to John de Neville, who, in 1379, obtained a license to "make a castle of his manor of Raby, and to embattle and crenelate its towers, &c." The architecture of nearly the whole castle agrees with the style prevalent at that period; and, as most of the modern repairs and additions have been made in strict conformity with it, this structure is now considered to be one of the most perfect specimens of a feudal baron's palace to be seen in the north of England. It occupies the summit of a gentle slope; and, as its grey extent of towers rises before us, it stands in all its antiquity and vastness, a fitting abode of the once mighty Nevilles. It is surrounded by an embattled wall, which encloses an area of about two acres, into which there is only one entrance, by a gateway tower on the north, defended by a portcullis and flanking parapets. Inside the battlements, there is a spacious raised terrace, which passes entirely around the main building, the principal entrance to which is by a massive gateway on the west, strengthened by two square towers. From one of these a hanging gallery forms a communication with Clifford's Tower; and a second gallery extends eastward to a smaller turretted tower. Crossing the court-yard, the carriage drive is extended, by a modern alteration, into the hall. Bulmer's Tower, which forms one of the most prominent features in the east front, is said to have received its name from Bertram Bulmer, Lord of Bulmer and Brancepeth, whose estates, as we have seen, passed to the Nevilles by marriage with his daughter, about the year 1190. It is lozenge-shaped, and is supposed by several writers to be the remains of a more ancient castle erected by the Danes. Near the top of this tower, which stands separated from the rest of the building, and to which you ascend by eighty-nine steps, are two square-headed panels, which have, at a distance, the appearance of windows, but each of which contains an enormous B, the initials of Bertram Bulmer above-mentioned. The whole of this front of the castle presents a most imposing and warlike appearance. The south front is also very effective; but the central part was restored by * See Brancepeth, page 220.

Iuigo Jones in the Italian style, quite out of keeping with the other portions of this ancient structure. Carriages can pass through the large Gothic saloon or entrance hall into the interior court. Above the saloon is the Baron's Hall, which forms one side of the square of the inner area. It is of the most magnificent proportions—120 feet in length, 36 in breadth, and 34 in height, terminating in a circular tower. Two of the windows front the east, and the west end of the hall is crossed by a gallery for musicians, whose duty it was to enliven the feasts of the Nevilles and their numerous guests. Here, it is said, assembled in their time, 700 knights who held of that family.

Neville sees
His followers gathering in from Tees,
From Were, and all the little rills,
Concealed among the forked hills—
Seven hundred knights, retainers all
Of Neville, at their master's call
Had sate together in Raby's Hall.—Wordsworth.

The kitchen remains as in days of yore, and is "a magnificent and lofty square of thirty feet each way. Its roof is groined, supported by four semicircular ribs, which spring from the sides of the square, and leave a square ventilating shaft in the centre. There are five windows in the side walls, with a gallery passing all round before them, and four steps downward from them, but ending at a great height above the floor. The old fireplace and ladders render this the most perfect ancient kitchen in existence." The rooms in the castle are very numerous, and more modern in their proportion and distribution than one would expect within the walls of so ancient a building: several of the galleries and passages having been scooped out of the solid walls. Several improvements have been made in modern times, which have added greatly to the spaciousness and convenience of the apartments in general. One of the drawing rooms is thirty feet by twenty, and the adjoining dining room is fifty-one feet by twenty-five. "It is, in fact," observes William Howitt, "this complete adaptation to modern uses and splendour, which disappoints one in the interior of Raby. The exterior is so fine, so feudal, so antequely great, that when we step in and find ourselves at once in modern drawing-rooms, with silken couches and gilt cornices, the Nevilles and their times vanish. We forget again that we are at Raby, the castle of the victims (victors?) of Neville's Cross, and of Joan, the daughter of John of Gaunt, and feel that we are only in the saloons of the modern Duke of Cleveland." Several alterations were effected in 1850, when the Baron's Hall was new roofed and lengthened, and the old towers converted into bedrooms. The old chapel has also been recently fitted up for worship, and the windows filled with stained glass, by Mr. Wailles, of Newcastle. A handsome mausoleum was also erected, about the same time, on the north side of Staindrop churchyard, as a place of sepulture for the Vane family. The castle contains some excellent paintings, and a beautiful conservatory was erected in the gardens in 1850. "The park," says the writer above quoted, "has many fine woods, glades, and lawns, and gives prospects of fair beauty, but its aspect partakes of the character of the interior of the castle—newness. The trees are comparatively young. You see groups and plantations of a very modern date. The whole has the air rather of a place new made, than of one as old as the days of Canute, who is said to have built some part of the original house. You do not see those old, grey, and gnarled oaks around you that you see in the forests of Sherwood, Needwood, Chartley, and other parks. It seems as of some great revolution, as is the fact, had passed over it, and that in its days of change, the axe of the spoiler had laid low its ancient forests. The castle looks like a grey patriarch left amid a more juvenile race. Let us rejoice that the strong walls of the old Nevilles have defied the ravages of politics as well as of time, and that future generations may see in them a fine example of what the great old English noble was."

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP OF STAINDROP.

The township of Staindrop comprises an area of 1,751 acres, and the property was valued for the county-rate, in 1853, at £4,542 12s. 3d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 1,156; in 1811, 1,087; in 1821, 1,273; in 1831, 1,478; in 1841, 1,399; and in 1851, 1,420. Staindrop Moor has been enclosed and divided in pursuance of an act of parliament obtained in 1764. It contained about 500 acres, which were distributed amongst the adjoining proprietors. Snotterton, supposed to be the Cnapaton of Canute, is situated about a mile west from the town of Staindrop, and was anciently a manor, though it now consists only of a farm, with a house, called Raby Grange, built in 1831, on the site of the old family mansion. The principal landowners are the Duke of Cleveland, T. Hutchinson, Esq., John Bowes, Esq., the executors of John Trotter, Esq., T. B. Lee, Esq., and others.

THE TOWN of Staindrop is situated on the turnpike road, between the city of Durham and Barnard Castle, 19 miles from the former place, and 16 from the latter. It is 32 miles by the turnpike road from Gateshead, the same distance from Sunderland, 12 from Darlington, and 244 from London. The town consists principally of one wide street, about half-a-mile in length, and contains several substantial houses, the residences of many respectable families. The Langley Beck, which is crossed by a bridge, near the east end of the church, passes it on the north, and separates it from Raby.

Staindrop is a place of great antiquity, being of importance in the time of Canute, who, in veneration of St. Cuthbert, gave Staindrop and Staindropshire, viz., Cnapaton (Snotterton), Scottum (Shotton), Rabi, Wacerfeld, Efenwowa (Evenwood), Alclet, Luterington, Elledun (Eldon), Ingletun, Ticelea (Thickley), and Mideltun, as an offering at the shrine of the patron saint of the north. These places were taken by Bishop Flambard from the priory of Durham, but were restored before his death; and in 1181 it was granted by Prior Algar to Dolphin, son of Uchtred, to be holden of him in capite, under the yearly rent of £4. The history of Staindrop, is after this event, interwoven with that of Raby, and in the ill-fated rebellion of the last of the Nevilles, forty-four of its inhabitants took part, seven of whom were afterwards executed. The name of the town is said to be derived from Stein Dorf, or Stein Thorp, stony village, a designation, the origin of which cannot now be discovered.

The Church stands at the east end of the town, and is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. It is a spacious and stately structure, consisting of a tower, nave and aisles, and chancel, the former of which is supported by lofty pointed arches. The original foundation of a church at Staindrop is considered to be coeval at least with the grant of Canute; the first incumbent is named in 1131, and the date of the nave, the earliest part of the church, is supposed to be about the year 1200. The principal entrance is by a south porch, above which is a sun dial; the doorway consists of plain mouldings, and the roof is strongly groined. The nave is separated from the aisles by four circular arches on each side, those on the south being decorated with the zigzag ornament, and supported by lofty pillars. The arches on the north side are similar to those on the south, but want the zigzag ornament. A pointed arch and screen separate the nave and chancel; the latter contains the ancient sedilia, the arches and trefoil heads of which are still in existence though the intervening shafts have been cut away. Extensive repairs and restorations were made in this venerable edifice in 1849, when a new roof was placed over the south aisle, and the lead work of the other parts re-cast; the northern and western galleries were taken down, and the organ placed on the floor, by which arrangement the beautiful arches supporting the tower were thrown open; the "pew lumber" was removed and replaced by seats more in accordance with the style of the building, and the floors were paved with encaustic tiles. By these alterations, &c., additional accommodation for seventy-five persons was obtained. A grant of £30 in aid of the undertaking was made by the Incorporated Society for the Enlarging, Building, and Repairing of Churches, on condition that eighty-six seats should be set apart and declared free and unappropriated for ever. The remainder of the expense, except £100, raised by church-rate for the roof, was defrayed by private subscription. This church contains many ancient tombs and monuments, the first of which that attracts the attention of the visitor, is that of Ralph Neville, the first Earl of Westmoreland of that name. It is an altar tomb of alabaster, beautifully ornamented, and surmounted by a figure of the earl in complete armour. Under his head is his helmet, supported by an angel, and at his feet a lion, and behind the lion two monks at a prie dieu. His second wife, Joan, daughter of John of Gaunt, lies at his left hand, and Margaret Stafford, his first wife, at his right. The whole work appears to have been formerly gilded and painted. At the north-west corner of the church, is a monument of Henry, fifth Earl of Westmoreland, and two of his wives. The south aisle appears to have been the burial place of the Nevilles; and near their tombs is a beautiful mural monument of marble to the memory of John Lee, Esq. The same aisle contains several inscriptions to the Blacketts, of Hoppyland; sepulchral stones of the Hutchinsons and others are in various parts of the nave, and within the altar rails several slabs mark the last resting places of different members of the Vane family. On the walls of the chancel are monuments to Henry, second Earl of Darlington, Katharine Margaret, Countess of Darlington, and Margaret, Countess of Darlington; and in the centre of the chancel is a beautifully-sculptured monument, of white marble, erected in 1843, to the late Duke of Cleveland by the Duchess Dowager. In the year 1843, Ralph de Neville obtained a license from Prior John Fossour and the convent, to found three chantries in the church of Staindrop, so that it appears that the convent had reserved the church in their grant to Dolphin; and, according to Dugdale's Baronage, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, under some exchange, by grant, dated the 25th June, 1372, had the advowsons of Staindrop and Brancepeth churches, but the advowson of the former shortly afterwards reverted again to the Neville family. Bishop Hatfield, by his license, dated the 24th January, 1378, empowered Ralph Neville, Earl of Westmoreland, to erect and found a college in Staindrop, for the perpetual maintenance of which, the earl gave and assigned two messuages and twelve acres of land, with their appurtenances, at Staindrop, for the habitation of the master, clerks, and poor persons, together with the advowson of the church of Latham, in Lancashire, which was a cell to Durham, and Brigham Church, in Cumberland, was also appropriated to this college to augment its revenue. According to the bishop's register, the college was instituted for the perpetual support of "one custos, eight chaplains, four secular clerks, six esquires, and six other persons;" the license does not confine the founder to number, or their quality. At the time of the dissolution the college income amounted to £170 4s. 6d. per annum in the whole, and £126 5s. 10d. clear. After the Dissolution the church remained in the possession of the crown until Charles I. created it a vicarage, at the petition of Sir Henry Vane, "and thereby authorised Bishop Morton to institute a proper clerk, who should have capacity of taking lands and tenements:" and Sir Henry was empowered to grant lands and buildings, rents and services, for its endowment. The living is a vicarage, not in charge, of the certified annual value of £44 5s., and is held with that of Cockfield. It is in the patronage of the Duke of Cleveland, in whom the great tithes of the whole parish are vested. Rev. H. C. Lipscombe, M.A., vicar.

Here are chapels belonging to the Independents, the Primitive Methodists, and the Wesleyans: the Society of Friends have also a place of worship.

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL is a good stone-building, and is well attended, thirteen of the boys being educated gratuitously. It was placed under government inspection in 1854: there is a good parochial library attached to the school. Joseph Lax, teacher.

THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTION, established in April 1852, is held at Mr. Heppel's, and consists of seventy members, who possess a library of 700 volumes on various subjects. John Dean, Esq., president; R. H. Bourne, Esq., honorary secretary.

THE STAINDROP FARMERS' CLUB, which has for its object the promotion of agriculture, is also held at Mr. Heppel's; and at its meetings addresses are delivered and papers read, illustrative, not only of the details of farming, but also of the position and prospect of national agriculture. Patron, the Duke of Cleveland; president, T. F. Scarth, Esq.; honorary secretary, John Dean, Esq.

THE STAINDROP GAS COMPANY was established in 1853, and works were erected at the east end of the town, in 1854, at a cost of £1,200. Gas was first supplied to the inhabitants in the September of the latter year at 5s. per 1,000 cubic feet, but the streets are not as yet lighted. The works contain one gasometer, which will hold 9,000 cubic feet of gas. R. H. Bourne, sec.

MARKET, &c.—Bishop Hatfield, on the 24th January, 1778, granted a charter for holding a weekly market in Staindrop, every Saturday, and annual fairs on the eve of St. Thomas the Martyr and the two following days. The fairs have long been obsolete. The weekly market is fairly attended, but the corn-market, which was revived about thirty years ago, has been discontinued.

Petty Sessions are held here every alternate Saturday, when some of the following magistrates attend:—Rev. H. C. Lipscombe, M.A., vicar; Thomas M. Maude, Esq., of Selaby Park; and T. E. Edger, Esq., M.D., of Gainford.

CHARITIES.—John Grainger, by will, in 1710, gave £300 for teaching poor children of Staindrop. The sum of £15 yearly, being the interest at the rate of five per cent, was a few years ago paid by Thomas Papillon, Esq., of Acrise, near Foklestone, in whose hands the principal was vested; and the schoolmaster in consideration thereof, instructed thirty children in reading, writing, and accounts without any charge. The interest, however, is not now paid, the bond for the same having been lost.

Sunday School.—A Sunday-school was established for the poor children of this parish about seventy years ago, by a subscription of the then Earl of Darlington, Mrs. Raby Vane, and others. The subscriptions were afterwards augmented by the late Duke of Cleveland; and the amount, £300, was placed in his hands, at five per cent interest. The school was formerly held in the vestry; but during the incumbency of the Rev. J. W. D. Merest, a large and commodious building was erected near the church as a school-room, having distinct portions for boys and girls. The average attendance is about sixty children. A salary of £6 6s. a year is paid to the master, and the rest of the income is applied in the purchase of books.

Brabant's Charity.—On account of this charity (see page 234), 19s. is received at Easter by the churchwardens; 1s. being deducted for land-tax. This money is carried to the general charity account.

Poor's Lands.—The following parcels of land have, for a great length of time, been let by the minister, churchwardens, and four-and-twenty for the time being, and the rents have been applied for charitable purposes in the parish; but it is not known from whom any part of the lands were derived. 1. A field, containing about three acres, called the Lee Close, let at the year's rent of £10 10s. 2. About seven acres of land, called the Ackwards, let at £34. 3. A garden, containing about three quarters of an acre, let at £7 14s. 6d. 4. An allotment, called the Moor Butts, set out upon the inclosure of Staindrop Moor, in 1764, to John Brownless, the churchwarden, in trust for the poor, in respect of their ancient lands. The allotment contains two-and-half acres, and is let out at £14 15s. A small parcel of land was sold in 1826; and the produce of the sale, £32 5s. 7d., is deposited in the bank at Darlington. The whole of these sums, with the proceeds of Brabant's charity amounting to £67 18s. 6d., are divided into twenty parts, as follows:—For Staindrop township, seven; Raby, five; East Quarter (including Wackerfield, Hilton, and Ingleton), four; and Langley Dale and Shotton, four. The Staindrop share is distributed soon after Easter, chiefly to widows and other persons not receiving parochial relief, in sums varying from 5s. to 10s. each. In Raby, the donations vary from 8s. to 10s. The township of Ingleton receives two-fifths of the portion assigned to East Quarter, and the remainder is equally divided between Wackerfield and Hilton: these shares are distributed in sums varying from 5s. to 25s. In Langley Dale and Shotton, the donations vary from 10s. to £2.

TOWNSHIP OF STAINDROP.—John Simpson, by will, dated April 5th, 1680, bequeathed to his wife, Ann Simpson, all his lands in Staindrop, subject to an annual payment of 20s. to the minister, &c., for the putting out poor children apprentices, or to be distributed at their discretion amongst the poor widows and fatherless children in Staindrop. Before the year 1794, this property had been divided; and 14s. part of the rent charge, is now paid by the Duke of Cleveland's steward, as charged upon a house belonging to him in grace; 4s. is paid by John Hodgson, shoemaker, in Staindrop, as charged upon a house belonging to him; and 2s. is paid by the representatives of the late Miss Lee. The whole is generally applied to the apprenticing a child of the township of Staindrop, or in clothing such child when put out.

Post Office, STAINDROP: Eleanor Brunskill, postmistress.—Letters arrive from Darlington at 8 52 a.m., and from Barnard Castle at 4 23 p.m. They are despatched to Darlington at 4 23 p.m., and to Barnard Castle at 8 52 a.m. Money Order Office open from nine a.m. to six p.m.

LANGLEY DALE AND SHOTTON township extends from two to four miles north-west of Staindrop, along the north side of the Staindrop Beck, westward from Raby Park, in which that part called Shotton is situated. Its area is 4,685 acres, and its annual value £1,972 15s. 6d. The population in 1801 was 143; in 1811, 160; in 1821, 198; in 1831, 217; in 1841, 185; and in 1851, 163 souls. This township was anciently a part of the estate of the earls of Westmoreland; and from "the Forest of Langleye," nineteen followers attended the last earl, in 1569, for which six were afterwards executed. The Duke of Cleveland is the present proprietor and lord of the manor. The Gaunless Smelt Works are situated in Langley Dale, and contain three smelting furnaces, two slag hearths, with blast, reducing furnace, one bone and two assay furnaces, &c. There are also two fire brick-kilns, and a brick-shed and drying floor, contiguous to the smelt mill. There is a small Methodist Chapel in this township.

WHORLTON PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, which possesses no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by Winston parish, on the west by a portion of the chapelry of Barnard Castle, on the south by the river Tees, and on the east by the parish of Winston. It includes the estates of Arlaw Banks, Etherley, Humbleton, Sledwick, Whorley Hill, and a portion of that of Stubb House, the remainder of which extends into the adjoining parish of Winston. The township of Whorlton comprises an area of 1,760 acres, and its annual value is £1,800 17s. 8d. In 1801, it contained 245 inhabitants; in 1811, 246; in 1821, 300; in 1831, 311; in 1841, 286; and in 1851, 290. Charles, Earl of Westmoreland forfeited Whorlton, with his other estates, on his attainder, in 1569; and it remained in the possession of the monarch till the reign of James I., when it was given, with Barnard Castle, to the citizens of London, in trust for sale; and the greater portion of it was purchased from the trustees by Messrs. Taylor and Lee, who sold it to Ambrose Johnson. It continued to be held by the Johnson family till 1725, when it was purchased by the Sandersons, and it was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Milburns, of Armathwaite Castle, Cumberland. The proprietors at present are P. A. Stanton, Esq., Sir C. Constable, Bart., Rev. A. W. Headlam, Miss Moses, Christopher Lonsdale, Esq., Rev. William Poole, John L. Dent, Esq., Mr. William Watson, Mr. Longstaffe, and others.

The Village of Whorlton occupies a beautiful situation, about three miles east-south-east from Barnard Castle; the Tees, with its over-hanging cliffs, thickly fringed with trees, passing near it on the south. On the opposite bank is the village of Wycliffe; and a fine range of country extends in every direction. Whorlton contains an endowed school, attended by about sixty children, two public-houses, and a few shops. The Tees is here crossed by a fine iron suspension bridge, which was erected in 1880-81, from designs and under the directions of the late Mr. Green, architect, of Newcastle. The span between the points of suspension is 180 feet.

The Chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1853, and is an elegant stone building, in the decorated style of Gothic architecture. It consists of a nave and chancel; the roof is of oak, open, and stained; the chancel floor is laid with encaustic tiles, by Minton; the seats are oak-stained and varnished, and will accommodate 150 persons. The entrance is by a southern porch, and at the south-west corner an octagonal turret, about fifty feet in height, forms a belfry. The pulpit and font are of stone, and are very neat. The total cost of erection amounted to £800, which was raised by public subscription, a rate of 2s. in the pound on a rental of £1,800, and a grant from the Church Building Society. The register of the chapelry commences in 1626. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Gainford, and of the certified value of £12 10s. The gross income of the living is stated at £118 per annum. The tithes were commuted, in 1850, for £257 a year, viz.:—to the incumbent curate, £75; to Archdeacon Headlam, £37; and to William Hutt, Esq., and his wife, the Dowager Countess of Strathmore, lessees of the master, fellows, and scholars of Trinity College, Cambridge, £145. Incumbent—the Rev. Arthur Headlam.

The Independents have a neat chapel here.

The National School is a good stone building, erected by subscription, in 1848, and is attended by about fifty children. It is under government inspection, and is efficiently conducted by Mr. Samuel T. Baldry, certificated teacher.

Sledwick estate was held from an early period by the Menvil family. In the sixteenth century it was the property of the Ashtons, from whom it passed to the Cloptons, and from them to the Townleys of Lancashire, who, in 1642, sold it to Sir John Clavering, of Callaley, Northumberland, for £2,870. It was afterwards possessed by the Withams of Cliffe, the Breaks, and the Allans, from the latter of whom it passed by marriage to the Pooles, with whom it still remains. Sledwick Hall is situated about half a mile to the west of Whorlton, and now serves as a farm-house. "It is," observes a recent writer, "one of those ancient and venerable dwellings which are still to be found in isolated and lonely places, scarcely reached by the revolutionary hand of modern improvement, but bearing in its grey old age the memorials of its former splendour." The hall was repaired and restored in 1854 ; but many of the interior decorations have been removed.

Stubb House is a handsome residence, to the east of Whorlton.

Charities.—Christopher Lonsdale, by will, dated March 11th, 1747, bequeathed £20 to Thomas and Richard Holmes, to be put out at interest by them and the survivor, and the interest to be paid yearly to the use of the poor of Whorlton, on Christmas-eve. About half an acre of land in the township is supposed to have been left many years ago, the rents to be given to the oldest poor inhabitant not receiving relief. This land produces £1 per annum, but money being wanted to rebuild the village school-house, the land was sold, and the money laid out upon the school, on account of which the master pays £1 annually to the oldest inhabitant.

WINSTON PARISH.

Winston parish contains but one township, which includes the villages of Newsham and Winston, the estates of Barford-on-the-Hill, Heighley (or Heighcliffe) Hall, Osmondcroft, and Westholme, and part of that of Stubb House. It is bounded on the north and east by Gainford parish, on the west by the chapelry of Whorlton, and on the south by the river Tees. The area of the parish is 2,961 acres, and its annual value is £2,679 11s. 1d. It contained, in 1801, 307 inhabitants; in 1811, 284; in 1821, 287; in 1831, 327; in 1841, 293; and in 1851, 301. The manor of Winston anciently formed part of the estate of the Fitz-Meldreds of Raby, and was granted, in 1313, by Ralph, Lord Neville, to Geoffrey le Scrope, of Masham, chief justice of the King's Bench. It continued in the possession of the Scrope family until the reign of Henry V., when, on the execution for treason of Henry Scrope, it was forfeited to the see of Durham; but being proved to be an entailed estate, Bishop Neville restored it to John, brother of Henry Scrope, and it continued in the family till the demise of Emanuel, Earl of Sunderland, whose estates were inherited by three natural daughters. By marriage with one of these, Winston came into the possession of the Bridgewater family, with whom it remained till the death of John, seventh Earl of Bridgewater, when the estates descended to his nephew, Lord Alford, whose family are the present possessors. The principal landowners are Earl Brownlow, Captain Grey, P. H. Stanton, Esq., Miss Elizabeth Moses, John Bourne, Esq., Lead-beater Smith, Esq., Mrs. Brocket, Lord Rokeby, Rev. W. Webb, and others.

The Village of Winston occupies the ridge of a hill overlooking the Tees, and contains a public-house, and a few tradesmen's shops. The Tees is here crossed by a fine stone bridge, of a single arch, which was long considered by architects the largest in Europe. It is the segment of a circle, measuring 112 feet span, 22 feet broad, and 20 feet between the parapet walls. The material employed is a hard blue ragstone, and the elevation renders the road nearly level with Yorkshire. It was erected in 1763-64, from the designs of Sir Thomas Robinson, Bart., of Rokeby; and when most of the bridges in the north of England were washed away by the great flood in 1771, Winston Bridge remained uninjured. The river scenery in this neighbourhood is very beautiful.

The Church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is situated on elevated ground to the east of the village, and close to the steep and lofty bank of the Tees. It was almost entirely rebuilt in 1846, including an open timber roof, and an octagonal bell tower and spire at the south-west angle of the building. The interior fittings, consisting of new pulpit, open seats, &c., have been completed by the present rector; and the old baptismal font, with its sculptured dragons, festoons of flowers, &c., has been preserved. The church consists of nave, chancel, and south aisle, and is entered by a porch on the south. It will accommodate about 170 persons. The parish register commences in 1572. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Darlington, valued in the Liber Regis at £9 18s. 1½d.; gross income, £557. The rector receives the rectorial tithes of Westwick, in the parochial chapelry of Barnard Castle. The Vicar of Gainford is entitled to the great tithes of Primrose Hill or Winston Demesnes; the Rector of Winston holding the vicarial tithes. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, the Rev. W. Webb, M.A.

The Rectory House stands a little east of the church, and is a neat and commodious building, with beautifully-arranged hanging gardens towards the river, commanding one of the most delightful views on the Tees.

The Parish School.—Lord Grewe's executors entrusted to the Rev. Thomas Eden, rector of Winston, the sum of £70, to be laid out in land for the use of a school in the parish, in which the master should teach as many poor children, at 8s. a-year each, as the rent would maintain; the boys to be nominated by the rector for the time being. The Rev. T. Eden bequeathed this sum to Sir Robert Eden and his heirs, to carry out the required objects. This money was for some time in the hands of Sir William Eden, Bart., of Windlestone, who allowed five per cent interest for it; and on his declining to do so, the principal was placed in the hands of the Rev. W. Webb, rector, by whom it was deposited in the bank of Messrs. Backhouse and Co., Darlington, at the ordinary rate of interest. The Countess of Bridgewater invested £304 11s. 4d. in the Three-per-cent Consols, the interest of which, with that of the £70 above-named, is paid to the schoolmaster, who, in consideration thereof, instructs twelve children (boys and girls) free, in reading, writing, and arithmetic. The school-house is an excellent stone building, erected by the late Lord Alford, and is attended by about thirty children.

Newsham is a small village, two-and-a-quarter miles south of Staindrop, and anciently belonging to the Earls of Westmoreland. Barford-on-the-Moor, or Barford-on-the-Hill, is an estate on the north-western verge of the parish, formerly held by the Bowes family. Westholme is another estate which was held by the same family. Osmondcroft is another of the possessions of the Boweses. Heighley (or Heighcliffe Hall) formerly belonged to the Scropes.

STOCKTON WARD.

Stockton Ward comprises an open, pleasant, and healthy district, occupying the south-eastern angle of the county of Durham. It is bounded on the north by Easington Ward, on the west by Durham and Darlington Wards, on the south and south-east by the Tees, and on the east by the German Ocean. The Ward from its south-eastern extremity at Middleton St. George, to its north-eastern point at Hartlepool, is about eighteen miles long; and from Stockton on the south-east, to the verge of Sedgefield parish on the north-west, is about ten miles broad; but its width diminishes nearer to the sea. This Ward is more level than the other parts of the county; the soil is fertile and well watered, besides the Tees and the Skerne, by the Billingham, Embleton, and Great-ham Becks. That part which adjoins the Skerne near Sedgefield, is low and marshy; whilst near the Tees, at the south-western extremity of the Ward, the country resembles, in character, as well as situation, the rich pasture lands around Darlington. "The Tees itself," says a recent topographer, "having left far behind the rocks and precipices of its early course, and wheeled its devious way around the meadows of Blackwell, Hurworth, Sockburn, and Dinsdale, continues its windings, by Yarm and Stockton, to the wide estuary by which it is disembogued into the sea; but, even below the latter town, its course is so tortuous as to have required artificial cuttings to facilitate the operations of commerce. The introduction of railway communication, which has brought the latent productions of the interior into active demand, has produced a corresponding revolution in this part of the county, by rendering its ports and shores available both for the transmission of that produce, and the reception of merchandise from abroad. The shores at the mouth of the Tees are now furnished with shipping places for the coal and iron of Durham and Yorkshire; and populous and bustling towns and villages occupy situations which were formerly marshy swamps. The long neglected bason of Hartlepool has also, within the last twenty years, been improved and extended to a degree approaching the marvellous." The parishes of Hurworth, Dinsdale, and the Durham part of Sockburn, which were formerly a part of the southwest division of Stockton Ward, were, under the provisions of the act 9 Geo. IV., c. 43, attached to the south-eastern division of Darlington Ward; as were also the townships of Sadberge, Morton Palms, and Coatham Mundeville, in the parish of Haughton-le-Skerne. On the formation of Durham Ward, the parish of Bishop Middleham, previously belonging to the north-east division of Stockton Ward, was constituted a part of the new district. Stockton deanery is, however, still co-extensive with its old boundary. The parish of Craike, in the wapentake of Bulmer, in the north riding of Yorkshire, was formerly a part of the county of Durham, and attached to the south-west division of Stockton Ward, and to the deanery of Darlington; but by the act 7 and 8 Vict., c. 61., every detached portion became for all purposes a part of the county by which it was surrounded. The market towns in Stockton Ward are Hartlepool, Sedgfield, and Stockton.

NORTH-EAST DIVISION.

This division of Stockton Ward includes the parishes of Billingham, Elwick Hall, Greatham, Grindon, Hart, Sedgfield, Stainton-le-Street, and Stranton, with the chapelries of Hartlepool, Seaton Carew, and Wolviston. It comprises an area of 61,991 acres, and its population in 1851 was 20,554 souls.

BILLINGHAM PARISH.

Billingham parish is bounded on the north by the parish of Greatham, on the north-west and west by a portion of Elwick Hall and Grindon, on the south-west by Norton, on the south by the same parish and the river Tees, and on the east by the estuary of the Tees. It comprises the townships of Billingham and Cowpen-Bewley.

BILLINGHAM township contains 3,139 acres, and its annual value is £4,284 5s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 336; in 1811, 491; in 1821, 395; in 1831, 401; in 1841, 782; and in 1851, 728. Nearly the whole of the property here is held under the dean and chapter of Durham, who also possess the manorial rights and privileges. The township is supposed to derive its name from some Saxon chief named Billing, who settled here in early times. It is a place of great antiquity, and memorable for a battle fought here by Eardulf, King of Northumberland. Egfrid, Bishop of Lindisfarne, gave Billingham, with other lands, to the church; and it is noted to be one of those places seized by Ælla during the conflicts for the Northumbrian crown. During the episcopate of Bishop Cuthbert, 900-915, Reingwald, a pagan king, made a descent on the eastern coast of Northumberland, and taking possession of the territories and towns of St. Cuthbert, gave the country between Castle Eden and Billingham to Scula, one of his generals. The Norman Conqueror restored Billingham to the church, and gave it to the prior and monks of Durham. In the records, there are several licenses and other documents connected with the letting of lands. A freehold was acquired by a family that assumed the local name, and who were descended from "John de Cowhird," husband of Bishop Kellaw's sister. This family afterwards settled at Crook Hall. At the time of the Northern Rebellion, twenty-two persons joined the insurgents from this place. The Andersons and Chapmans possessed freeholds in Billingham in the 17th century. The parliamentary sequestrators appear to have dealt very severely with the church property and its tenants in this parish. The tithes of Billingham were let for £62, those of Cowpen for £28, and those of Wolviston for £48 per annum. The estate of Captain Gascoine Eden was sequestered, and portions of it let to new tenants. A division of common fields was made in the 17th century, by commissioners appointed by owners and occupiers in Billingham. The Clarence and Stockton and Hartlepool railways extend into this township; and the station is about a quarter of a mile from the village, from which the railways diverge towards Port Clarence and West Hartlepool.

The Village of Billingham is pleasantly situated about two-and-a-half miles north-by-east from Stockton, on the turnpike road from that place to Sunderland.

The Church, which is dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is supposed to occupy the site of that founded by Eanred, and consists of nave, chancel, aisles, and tower, the latter of which is in the Anglo-Norman style. Several alterations and restorations were effected in 1845-6, by which means many additional sittings were obtained, and the edifice will now accommodate about 500 persons. The east window is of three lights, and is filled with rich stained glass. A new organ, situated at the west end of the nave, was erected in 1854, at a cost of £130. The parish register commences in 1570. The living is a vicarage, valued in the Liber Regis at £11 3s. 1½d.; gross income, £274. The rectorial tithes, amounting to £332, belong to the ecclesiastical commissioners. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham; Rev. Philip Rudd, vicar.

The Vicarage, which has recently been considerably improved, occupies an elevated situation north of the church, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding country.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a neat brick structure, erected in 1836, at a cost of £150, and contains 100 sittings.

The National School, situated in the centre of the village, was erected in 1852, partly by subscription, and partly by a grant from the National Society.

The dean and chapter of Durham allow £4 4s. per annum for the education of four poor children belonging to the parish. The school is under government inspection.

Bellasis is a hamlet in Billingham township, situated three-and-a-half miles north-east of Stockton, and was anciently held by a family bearing the local name. It afterwards belonged to the Lambtons and Edens, whose manor-house now serves as a farmstead.

Haverton Hill is a village in this township, situated near Port Clarence. Here are iron and glass works, the former of which is carried on by Mr. Stephen Robinson, and the latter by Messrs. Walton and Co.

Port Clarence.—The shipping places of the Clarence Railway is situated near the south-eastern point of Cargo Fleet Reach, and opposite to Middlesborough. At Port Clarence there are extensive iron works and three blast furnaces, worked by Messrs. Joseph Bell and Co.

Charities.—Ann Chapman, by will, November 9th, 1725, left £20 to the poor of the township of Billingham, the interest to be distributed at Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost, mostly to poor widows. The principal is considered as received on the church lands, £1 from the rent of which is divided at Christmas and Easter amongst four or five poor widows. There are certain lands in the parish, known as the Church Lands, now let to several tenants, at rents amounting to £53 a-year, the proceeds of which have been applied to the support of the church, at least from the year 1676. The amount, except £1 above-mentioned, is carried to the churchwarden's account.—Alice

Gardner, by will, October 22nd, 1790, bequeathed to the vicar and churchwardens of Billingham £20, to be invested in the three per cents, and the dividends to be distributed, on the 1st of January annually, amongst poor widows of the township not receiving parochial relief. The money was invested, and the dividends, amounting to about £1 14s. 4d., were received by Messrs. Sykes, Snaith, and Co., of Stockton, and transmitted to the vicar for distribution till 1825, when that house failed, since which time no dividends have been received.—Poor's Land: Robert Eden, Esq., of Windlestone, by will, December 26th, 1662, left £10 to the poor of the parish of Billingham; Mary Davison, of Billingham, October 14th, 1670, 40s.; Ralph Lawrence, of Cowpen-Bewley, June 12th, 1673, £10; John Eden, of Billingham, May 2nd, 1680, £10; and Eleanor Steer, of Wolviston, December 22nd, 1682, £20.—February 10th, 1686, Mr. Francis Buck "did give unto the poor in Billingham 10s. every year during the natural life of his sister, Mrs. Margery Eden, relict of Mr. John Eden." The poor money was afterwards laid out in the purchase of a cottage, a kiln house, and a close. There are in the township two houses, and a field of four acres, the rents of which have for nearly a century and a half been distributed to the poor. The fields are let by the churchwardens for £12 a year, one of the houses at £2, and the other to the overseers, who put in a poor person as occupant, and pay £2 15s. rent. Of the amount, the township of Billingham receives £8 1s. 6d.; Cowpen, £2 0s. 2d.; Newton, £2 13s. 2d.; and Wolviston, £4 0s. 2d. These several shares are distributed to the poor by the officers of each township, in sums varying from 2s. 6d. to 5s.

COWPEN-BEWLEY township forms the south-eastern portion of the parish, contains 2,396 acres, and its annual value is £2,412 15s. The population in 1801 was 128; in 1811, 120; in 1821, 132; in 1831, 137; in 1841, 196; and in 1851, 217 souls. The Stockton and Hartlepool branch of the North-Eastern Railway extends into this township, and has a station near the village. The land principally belongs to the dean and chapter of Durham, who also possess the manorial rights and the rectorial tithes, amounting to £148 3s.; the vicarial tithes belong to the Rev. Philip Rudd, and amount to £30. There are brick and tile works here, carried on by Joseph Farrow, Esq.

The Village of Cowpen-Bewley is situated on the road between Billingham and Greatham, five miles north-east-by-north from Stockton.

Saltholme, one of the largest farms in the county, is let for £1,800 per annum. The salt marshes extend along the north side of the mouth of the Tees, and several earthen mounds, now covered with herbage, mark the site of the old salt works once carried on here.

ELWICK HALL PARISH.

This parish, which comprises no dependant townships, is bounded on the north by Monk Hesledon and Hart, on the west by Sedgfield, on the south by the chapelry of Wolviston and Grindon, and on the east by Hart and Greatham. It includes the manors, granges, or farmholds of Amerston, Newton Hansard, Bruntoft, Close, Stotfold, and Poplar Row. The area of the parish is 4,321 acres, and it was assessed to the county-rate in 1853 at £2,411 15s. It contained, in 1801, 129 inhabitants; in 1811, 129; in 1821, 170; in 1831, 169; in 1841, 165; and in 1851, 187. The principal landowners are the Marchioness of Londonderry, C. S. D. Thelluson, Esq., Miss Ormston, Watson Alcock, Esq., and others whose names will appear as yeomen in the Directory. The land is principally held by freehold tenure, and the manorial rights are vested in the different proprietors. Hutchinson, writing of this parish eighty years ago, says, "In this parish there is neither town nor village, cottage house for the poor, surgeon or apothecary, midwife, blacksmith, joiner, house carpenter, mason, bricklayer, cart or wheelwright, weaver, butcher, shoemaker, tailor, or barber, schoolmaster or schoolmistress, ale-house, public bakehouse, grocer or chandler's shop, or a corn mill." By adding a public-house, situated near Embleton, a school, two cottages, a blacksmith's and a joiner's shop to the above description, we have the parish as it is in the year 1855.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St. Peter, is situated on the brink of a deep dene, through which runs a small brook, dividing this parish from the village and township of Elwick, in the parish of Hart, about nine miles north-by-east from Stockton. It consists of nave, chancel, side aisles, and low square tower; the latter is on the south side of the church, and contains the principal entrance. The east window is of three lights, including a portion of stained glass. In the south wall of the chancel is an antique sculpture, representing the Crucifixion, and above the communion table there is a metal tablet, representing the Last Supper. In the chancel there is a mural monument to the memory of Dr. Parker, a former rector; and another to Lady Park, wife of Sir James Allan Park, one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and mother of the present rector. The parish register commences in 1593. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £20 18s. 1½d.; gross income, £544. The glebe consists of two farms, containing together 345 acres, and the rector is generally entitled to tithes of all descriptions from the farms in the parish. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. James Allan Park.

Elwick Hall, the rectory, is a handsome mansion, situated on the north bank of the Dene, opposite to the church.

The Parish School was erected by subscription in 1851, and has an average attendance of 25 pupils. There is a house for the teacher annexed.

Amerston, adjoining the Embleton dene, was granted to Kepier Hospital by Gilbert Hansard, and, on the suppression of the religious houses, passed through the Cockburns to the Heaths, Deshickes, and Ashmall, coming ultimately to the Robinsons, the present possessors.

Burntoft was anciently possessed by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed to the Claxtons. It was transferred from the latter family by marriage to the Bulmers, who, in 1605, sold it to the Featherstonhalghs of North Auckland, and it afterwards became the property of the Pennymans, and the Salvins of Croxdale. Burntoft, The Toft, and Low Burntoft, now belong to the Marchioness of Londonderry.

The Close is the name of a farm on the south of Embleton dene, which was anciently the property of the Neville family, and was forfeited at the period of the Rising of the North. It was afterwards purchased from the crown by the Frevilles, who sold it to the Salvins of Croxdale, and it is now possessed by the Marchioness of Londonderry.

Newton Hansard manor is said to derive the latter portion of its name from the Hansards of Walworth, who were at one time its possessors. In the time of Bishop Hatfield, it was the property of the Dacres, from whom it passed to the Nevilles of Raby; and, after the attainder of that family, it was granted, in 1575, by Queen Elizabeth, to Thomas Calverley and Henry Anderson, Esqrs. In the following century, it was purchased by the Smiths of Burn Hall, who subsequently sold it to the Thellusons. It is now held by the Marchioness of Londonderry.

Stotfold was held in the 14th century, of the bishop in capite, by the Kilkenny family. It was afterwards purchased by the Nevilles, who sold it to William Selby, of Newcastle, from whose descendants it passed to the Carrs and Milbanks.

GREATHAM PARISH.

Greatham parish comprises the townships of Claxton and Greatham. It is bounded on the north-east and north by the chapelry of Seaton Carew and the parish of Stranton, on the west and south-west by the parish of Elwick Hall and the chapelry of Wolviston, on the south by Billingham, and on the east by the sea marsh in the estuary of the Tees.

CLAXTON township is principally the property of the trustees of the late Thomas Jobson, Esq., Mr. William Robinson, Mr. John Holburn, and Mr. Robert Chilton, each of whom claims the manorial rights of his own property. Its area is 866 acres, and the annual value is £842. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 42; in 1811, 46; in 1821, 88; in 1831, 32; in 1841, 52; and in 1851, 49 souls. This township was formerly held by a family that assumed the local name, and, on the failure of issue male, in 1484, it was transferred by marriage to the Elmedons, and afterwards in a similar manner to the Bulmers, from whom it passed, in 1632, to the Johnsons of Greatham and Seaton. It has since belonged to several proprietors, and is now held by the gentlemen above mentioned. Claxton is situated to the west of Greatham.

Directory.—The farmers are Christopher Jobson, Robert Lax, John Robinson (yeoman), High Claxton; Robert Swallow, and Robert Wheatley.

GREATHAM township comprises an area of 3,310 acres, and the property was assessed to the county-rate, in 1853, at £3,023 5s. The population in 1801 was 442; in 1811, 407; in 1821, 446; in 1831, 519; in 1841, 635; and in 1851, 651 souls. The principal landowners are the Master of Greatham Hospital, Mr. James Langley, Miss Wray, Mr. Henry Lamb, and Mr. Ralph Atkinson. The Stockton and Hartlepool branch of the North-Eastern Railway extends into this township, and has a station about half a mile from the village. This manor was formerly the property of the celebrated Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and on his forfeiture, in 1264, it was granted by the king to Thomas de Clare; but on Bishop Stichill's representation that the manor lay within the palatinate, he revoked the grant, and allowed the bishop's right to it, who soon afterwards founded the Hospital of Greatham. The present landowners are mentioned above. The Common fields of the township were divided in 1650.

The Village of Greatham is pleasantly situated on the ridge of a hill, about six-and-three-quarters of a mile north-east-by-north from Stockton, and two-and-a-half north-west from the estuary of the Tees. The annual feast held here, is called "Greatham Midsummer," at which races and rural sports are continued for two days.

The Church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was rebuilt in 1792, and consists of nave, chancel, side aisles, and western tower. It is now (October 1855) undergoing considerable repairs and additions, by which means increased accommodation will be gained. The seats in the chancel are appropriated to the master and brethren of Greatham Hospital, and at the west end of the church are places for the inmates of Parkhurst's Hospital. The parish register commences in 1566. The living, a discharged vicarage, in the deanery of Stockton, is in the patronage of the master of Greatham Hospital; and the gross income is stated to be about £186. The glebe consists of nineteen acres in Greatham township, which have right of four "gates" on the marsh. The vicar has also the undivided moiety of fifty acres in the township of Seaton Carew, and the moiety of a farm-house and stables in the village of Seaton, and of ten "stints" on Seaton Marsh. The master of the hospital holds the whole of the great tithes of Greatham; but the vicar has tithe of hay and all small tithes in the township of Claxton, and all small tithes but not hay tithe in the township of Greatham, except from the hospital lands, which are entirely exempt. Rev. John Brewster, M.A., vicar.

The Vicarage is a neat building, situated to the south-east of the church.

Here is a small Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1884, at a cost of £120, and will accommodate about 150 persons.

The Barrington School, situated in the centre of the village, was erected in 1831; it is efficiently conducted, and well attended. There is also an Infant School, which was erected by subscription in 1831.

Greatham Hall is the residence of Ralph Ward Jackson, Esq., to whose enterprising spirit the port and town of West Hartlepool owe their origin; and the second dock was consequently designated by his name.

Greatham Hospital.—This institution, which was founded by Bishop Stichill in 1272, is situated on the west side of the village, and was rebuilt in 1803-4. It is a square stone structure, with a large hall occupying the centre of the building, rooms for the brethren, and various offices. The master's house is a handsome edifice, with a pleasant garden, containing the chapel of the hospital, which was erected on the site of a previous structure in 1788. In taking down the wall of the transept of the old chapel, a stone coffin was discovered beneath the wooden effigy of an ecclesiastic. It contained a skeleton, with a chalice lying on the left side, as though it had fallen from the hands, which had been clasped upon the breast. The present chapel contains several sepulchral slabs and brasses to the memory of various masters of the hospital. The institution, on its foundation, was dedicated to "God, the Blessed Mary, and St. Cuthbert," and endowed with the manor of Greatham, and the advowson of the church there, for the reception and support of five priests, two clerks, and forty alms-men, who were to be selected from the episcopal manors of the bishopric. By the statutes, dated January 23rd, 1272, the pensioners were all to live in one house, and mess at one table; and, according to the sufficiency of the income, the number of poor were to be augmented or decreased. The founder granted forty days' indulgence to all persons who should contribute to this institution; and Bishop Beck added one chaplain, and one clerk, to the original number. Edward III. and Edward IV. confirmed the foundation charter; and the latter monarch granted to the master and brethren a weekly market and two annual fairs, towards their better support. This, being a lay-foundation (valued at £97 6s. 3½d. annually), did not come within the statutes of 27 and 31 Henry VIII.; though it appears that the king's visitors at the dissolution carried off some of the ornaments of the chapel. On the 20th July, 1610, King James I. refounded the hospital, which was for the future to consist of a master and thirteen poor unmarried men of advanced age, and to be called

"The Hospital of God in Greatham, in the county palatine of Durham." By the provisions of this charter, it was ordained that the master must be either a master of arts or bachelor of laws, and he and the brethren are constituted a body corporate and politic, with common seal, and power to receive or purchase lands. The Bishop of Durham is the patron, and has the appointment of the master, but the brethren are nominated by the master. The bishop is also empowered to repeal ancient statutes and make new ones. The manor and advowson of the church, with their rights and privileges, are secured with power for the master and brethren to grant leases for twenty-one years, or three lives, under reasonable reserved rents. "Every brother receives from the master, on his appointment, a deed, granting him an annuity of twenty-eight shillings with daily meat, drink, and fire, during his life, sickness or infirmities notwithstanding, so that the grantee performs and maintains all the statutes and ordinances ordained or to be ordained according to the foundation of the hospital; and there are certain rules to which the brethren, on their appointment to the hospital, subscribe, thereby engaging to attend the services of the church and chapel when not prevented by illness, and to conduct themselves with decency and propriety. Before the year 1819, there were only dwellings for six in-brethren, the remaining seven being out-brethren; but at that period, the Earl of Bridgewater, master, at his own expense, added apartments for the latter. The brothers receive a yearly pension of £8, a cloak every alternate year, their diet according to a scale adopted in 1819, and a sufficient quantity of coal for consumption in their rooms. The Rev. John Brewster, vicar of Greatham, is the present chaplain of the hospital, and it is his duty to read prayers every morning in the chapel. His salary is £60 per annum; and £40 a year is paid to the steward who collects the rents, makes the disbursements, and keeps the accounts of the charity. The residue of the hospital estates, after deducting the above payments, and other necessary expenses, is paid to the account of the master. At the time of the Charity Commissioners' report, the revenue amounted to £1,486 5s. 3½d.; the expenditure was £601; leaving a net revenue to the master of £885 5s. 3½d. Great changes are in contemplation with regard to the working of this charity, and, when carried out, will go far to increase its usefulness. The Hon. Augustus Barrington, D.C.L., is the present master.

Parkhurst's Hospital.—In 1761, Dormer Parkhurst, Esq., the master of Greatham Hospital, began to erect alms houses, for six poor widows or spinsters, a little to the north of Greatham Hospital. They were finished in the following year, and are neat separate apartments, with a small garden plot to each. They are endowed with about twenty-seven acres of land, in Stockton parish, which, at the time of the foundation, let for £30 per annum, but now produces £97 a year. The inmates are to be chosen from the town of Greatham, being fifty years of age, and legally settled there; or, in default of such person within Greatham, from the neighbouring townships. Each sister receives one pound every month, 4s. at Christmas, 2s. at Easter, and 2s. at Whitsuntide. They also receive £1 5s. each in lieu of coal, and a stuff gown every Christmas. The following gentlemen are the present trustees of this charity:—James Langley, Esq., Grove House, Greatham, treasurer; Rev. J. Brewster, vicar; Rev. R. Webster, vicar of Kelloe; Mr. Henry Lamb; and Mr. R. Atkinson, Greatham.

Charities.—Francis Barker, June 24th, 1754, paid £10 to Ralph Bradley for the use of the poor of Greatham. In 1800, this money was laid out in repairing two houses belonging to the parish; and 10s. is distributed yearly at Candlemas, by the overseers, equally amongst all the poor widows of the parish. Matthew Carr, by will, January 28th, 1818, bequeathed £100 to the minister and churchwardens, in trust, to be placed out on good securities, and the interest to be given to the poor at Christmas. In October 1819, £90 (legacy duty having been deducted) was laid out in the purchase of £100 four-per-cents, which, in July 1824, was sold out for £100 15s. 6d. This was placed in the Savings Bank, at Stockton, and produces £3 per annum interest, which is divided equally amongst all the poor widows in the township at Christmas. Poor's Cottage.—A piece of land, containing about four acres, is supposed to have been left by Thomas Barker, uncle of the Thomas Barker above-mentioned, and is held by the parish officers under a lease of three lives, renewed occasionally by the master and brethren of Greatham Hospital, at 7s. annual rent. It is let for £11 10s., of which 6s. is disposed of in bread, given to the poor of the parish at Candlemas; and the residue, after deducting the hospital rent, is distributed at Whitsuntide and St. Thomas's Day, in sums varying from 8s. to 6s. Samuel Rand, M.D., master of Greatham Hospital during the Commonwealth, by indenture, October 12th, 1669, gave £100 to Thomas Peers, to be disposed of to the poor of Greatham according to the discretion of the minister and churchwardens for the time being. In respect of this sum, £6 per annum is received from the tenant of Sir William Pennymann, owner of lands in Thornton, Yorkshire, and has been disposed of time out of mind, for the benefit of children placed out apprentices or going into service. The premium paid with each apprentice is £8. Widow's Dole.—There is a monthly distribution of 4lbs. of dough, ready for baking, given at Greatham Hospital to twenty-six poor persons or families. It commences every year in November, and continues to the commencement of the wheat harvest, when the distribution ceases.

GRINDON PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north-east by Elwick Hall, on the north and west by Sedgfield, on the south-west and south by Bishopton and Redmarshall, and on the east by Norton. It comprises the townships of Grindon and Whitton.

GRINDON township contains 8,416 acres, and its annual value is £2,000 14s. 8d. Its population in 1801, was 325; in 1811, 230; in 1821, 255; in 1831, 309; in 1841, 285; and in 1851, 267 souls. This township has no village of its own name, but includes the village of Thorp-Thewles, and the manors of Fulthorp and Wynyard. Fulthorp is first mentioned in 1337, when Roger Fulthorp held half the manor by the twelfth part of a knight's service. It was long the property of this family, from whom it was purchased in 1596, by Thomas Blakiston, who, in 1616, granted it to Arthur and Humphrey Robinson, who sold it to the Davisons of Blakiston, with which estate it passed to the Russells, of Brancepeth. Thorp-Thewles was anciently held by a family bearing the local name. Matilda, daughter of Godefrid de Thorp, and Roger de Stotfaldia, her husband, about 1200, granted part of their lands in the town fields to Stephen de Elwick, who "gave to God, the Blessed Mary, St. John the Baptist, St. Goderich, and to Ralph the prior and the monks of Finchale, all his lands in Thorp in perpetual alms, for the support of hospitality, and the maintenance of three poor persons daily, rendering yearly to John de Ketton and his heirs a pound of cumin, and making foreign service." Subsequently, we find the Hiltons, Blakistons, and Bulmers, recorded as proprietors here. In the sixth year of the episcopacy of Bishop Pilkington, a license was granted for Francis Constable, Esq., whose family had acquired "Bulmer's lands" in Thorp-Thewles, to alienate to John Swinburne, Esq. of Chopwell. It afterwards passed to the Kendall family, who were its possessors for several generations. It is now the property of the marchioness of Londonderry. The Village of Thorp-Thewles is situated on the turnpike-road between Durham and Stockton, sixteen miles from the former and five miles from the latter place.

The Old Church, dedicated to St. Thomas à Beckett, is a plain structure, consisting of nave and chancel, and stands in a field a little to the east of the road between Durham and Stockton. The south porch is called Fulthorp's porch, and contains some sculptured slabs. This edifice, having become much dilapidated, a new church was erected and consecrated at Thorp-Thewles in 1848, since which period the old church has ceased to be used as a place of worship; but the church-yard continues to be reserved as a place of interment for parties possessing a family burial ground. The New Church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is in the early English style, and consists of a nave and chancel, with 175 sittings, 120 of which are free and unappropriated. The parish register commences in 1566. The living, a discharged vicarage, in the deanery of Stockton, is valued in the Liber Regis at

A School, in connection with the church, was erected in 1844, at the expense of the Marchioness of Londonderry.

Wynyard Park, the property and seat of the Marchioness of Londonderry, is situated two miles from the village of Thorp-Thewles, and contains an area of about 2,500 acres, in which are formed several artificial lakes. Near the main avenue, and on the highest part of ground in the park, stands an obelisk, 120 feet in height, erected to commemorate a visit in 1827 from the Duke of Wellington, the old commander and companion in arms of the late Marquis of Londonderry. On one of the entablatures is inscribed "WELLINGTON, THE FRIEND OF LONDONDERRY." The mansion is delightfully situated in the centre of the home park, near a large artificial lake, which is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, and is in the Grecian style of architecture. It was erected by the late marquis, under the direction of Mr. Wyatt, architect, on the site occupied by the former mansion, which was destroyed by fire on the night of the 19th February, 1841. The damage from this calamity amounted to £150,000. The principal entrance of the present mansion, on the north front, is beneath a massive Corinthian portico, considered the finest in the north of England. "Passing through the front hall," says a recent topographer, "the visitor enters the statue gallery; a magnificent apartment, 120 feet in length, 80 feet wide, and 60 feet high. This gallery, which forms the centre of the building, is octagonal, and is surrounded by a dome, with a lantern of beautiful stained glass in the centre. Around the walls are forty-eight jasper columns, having each a base of statuary marble, black and gold marble sur-bases, and plynths of Egyptian green. The doors from the gallery are supported on either side by pillars of Sienna marble. The works of art in the gallery include the Laocoon, the Apollo Belvidere, and many others of great beauty. To the south of the gallery, and forming the south front of the mansion, are the reception rooms, a magnificent suite, 300 feet in length, which, whilst opening into each other, by folding doors, afford an uninterrupted and magnificent vista terminated by the conservatory. In this suite of rooms are the billiard-room, the library, the vestibule (which contains some fine Canaletti's and other paintings; the drawing-room (the walls of which are panelled with large mirrors, and the ceiling elaborately gilt), and the great ball-room, which adjoins the conservatory. The conservatory is stocked with numerous orange and lemon trees, and a great variety of choice exotics, and rare and costly flowers. On the north side of the mansion are the breakfast-room and the great dining-room; the latter contains portraits, chiefly by Sir Thomas Lawrence, of several members of the family; amongst others is that of the late marquis, on horseback, in the uniform of the 10th Hussars, as in his celebrated charge at Benevento, in which he overthrew a superior force of the enemy's cavalry. There is also a portrait of the Marchioness of Londonderry, leading by the hand Lord Seaham when a boy; one of Sir Henry Vane Tempest, her ladyship's father; also one of the late Lord Castle-reagh, in his coronation robes. Within the mansion, at the north-west angle, is the chapel, which is fitted up with rich and solid Spanish mahogany, of a beautiful grain, and of chaste and neat design. Around the walls are Corinthian columns of white marble. The stained glass windows were executed by Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle. The ceiling, with its deep cornices, are massively gilt. The chapel, as well as the statue gallery, and the north entrance hall, are flagged with polished marble; the floors of the reception room are of polished oak, inlaid with satin wood and rosewood borders. The doors are of the finest Spanish mahogany, and the furniture and ceilings of the principal rooms are elaborately gilt. Adjoining the mansion to the north-west, the memorial room, a spacious apartment, is in course of erection, wherein will be deposited the papers and writings of the late marquis, together with his various orders, and the numerous objects of interest which he has acquired during his eventful career. The apartment is upwards of 40 feet in length, 28 feet wide, and 21 feet high. Twenty marble pilasters of the Corinthian order extend from the floor to the ceiling. Niches with plate glass doors, are placed between the pilasters for the reception of the trophies, &c., belonging to the late marquis. Above the niches are panels in the wall, intended to contain groups of figures in bas-relief; the interior walls are plastered with Parian cement, and the cornice, beams, and ceiling painted and richly gilded. From the mansion, a broad-terraced walk conducts to the gardens, which cover many acres of ground. The front, or flower garden, is flanked in its whole length with an extensive range of glass houses, containing pines, grapes, figs, peaches, and many other fruits, and rare and curious exotics and flowers. A broad gravel walk or drive, arched over with trellised work, and clustered with roses, jessamines, and other flowers, leads from the garden to the orchard, and to the dairy—a pretty rustic building. To the south of the gardens, and sloping down towards the lake, are the extensive pleasure grounds, which are intersected by numerous drives, &c. The soil, which is a strong loam, has lately been completely drained, and by a judicious following up with artificial and other manures, is improving greatly in quality and appearance." Wynyard appears to have been successively possessed by the families of Capel, Denthorp, Lisle, Wykes, Langton, Conyers, Claxton, Jennison, Davison, and Tempest. It was conveyed in marriage to the Marquis of Londonderry, and on his demise, in March 1854, became the property of the marchioness.

Charities.—George Fleetham, by a codicil to his will, June 14th, 1816, gave £80 to the Vicar of Grindon, in trust, to be invested in government or real securities; the dividends to be applied in schooling, clothing, putting out apprentices, or otherwise for the support and benefit of four poor children of the township, under the age of fourteen years. After deducting the legacy duty of £8, the balance was invested in the Three-per-Cent Consols; and the dividends, amounting to £2 12s. 10d., is paid to the master of the school at Thorp-Thewles, who, in consideration thereof, instructs three poor children of the township, appointed by the resident clergyman. There were two other charities, but they have been for some time lost.

Biography.—Charles William Vane Stewart, Marquis of Londonderry, was born in Dublin, May 18th, 1778. At the age of fourteen, he entered the army as ensign in the 108th Foot, was appointed to a company in 1794, and joined the expedition under the Earl of Moira. He afterwards became lieutenant-colonel, and accompanied Sir Ralph Abercrombie's expedition to Holland. In September 1808, he was appointed aid-de-camp to the king, with the rank of colonel; and soon afterwards occupied for a time the situation of under-secretary of state in the war department. From this appointment, he retired to assume the command of a brigade of hussars, under Sir John Moore, in Portugal, where he was to act with the rank of brigadier-general. He served through the whole campaign, and on arriving at Corunna, January 13th, 1809, was sent home to report on the progress of events. Not many months elapsed, however, before he returned to the Peninsula as adjutant-general to the army under Sir Arthur Wellesley, a post which he continued to hold till May 1813. For his services at this period, and for his exertions at Talavera, he received the thanks of the House of Commons, February 5th, 1810, and in July of the same year, became major-general. In 1813, he was appointed envoy extraordinary, and minister plenipotentiary to the court of Berlin, and was promoted to lieutenant-general in June 1814; in the latter year he was appointed ambassador to Austria; and was constituted one of the plenipotentiaries of Great Britain to the congress of Vienna. On the 12th August, 1822, on the death of his half brother, Robert, the second Marquis of Londonderry, then premier, Lord Stewart succeeded to the dignities conferred on their father in the peerage of Ireland. In 1834, he attained the rank of general in the army, and, in June, 1843, became colonel of the 2nd Life Guards. He died on the 1st March, 1854, aged 76, and was interred at Long Newton.

WHITTON township is principally the property of the representatives of the late Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., George Head, Esq., Miss Davison, Mr. Dent, and Mr. Beckwith. It comprises an area of 742 acres, and the annual value of the property assessed to the county-rate, in 1853, was £886. The number of inhabitants in 1801, was 38; in 1811, 45; in 1821, 59; in 1831, 75; in 1841, 52; and in 1851, 50. The Clarence Railway extends into this township. From an early period lands have been held here by Sherburn Hospital; the Chipchases, Watsons, and Shawes also appear as freeholders at various periods.

The Hamlet of Whitton is about five miles north-west-by-west of Stockton.

Whitton House is the property and residence of George Hutchinson, Esq., whose family is supposed to be descended from Uitonensis, who came over with Harold Harfager, and settled at or near Bishop Middleham, then a strongly fortified place. They became proprietors here in the seventeenth century.

HART PARISH.

The parish of Hart comprises the townships of Dalton-Piercy, Elwick, Hart, Nesbit, Thorp-Bulmer, and Throston. It is bounded on the north and north-west by Monk-Hesledon parish, on the south-west by Elwick Hall, on the south by Stranton, and on the east by the German Ocean. The parochial chapelry of Hartlepool was formerly held by the vicars of Hart; but, in 1807, it became a perpetual curacy. The townships of Nesbit and Thorp-Bulmer, which form the most northerly portion of the parish, are in Easington Ward. Nesbit township is also attached to the Easington Poor-Law Union.

DALTON PIERCY township, the most southern portion of the parish, contains 987 acres, and its annual value is £760 12s. The population in 1801, was 70; in 1811, 68; in 1821, 75; in 1831, 79; in 1841, 78; and in 1851, 91 souls. Dalton was sold, in 1870, by Henry Lord Percy to Sir John Neville, of Raby, and was forfeited in 1569 by the last Earl of Westmoreland. It afterwards became much divided, and is now the property of Mr. James Jobson, Queen's College, Oxford, B. M. Stafford, Esq., and F. A. Milbank, Esq.

Red Lion, a hamlet in this township, derives its name from two public-houses on the Sunderland and Stockton-road; it is eight miles north-by-east from the latter place.

Charity.—The sum of £20 given to the poor of Dalton-Piercy by some person unknown, was, in 1786, vested in Mr. Chilton. "It is now," say the commissioners for inquiring concerning charities, "in the hands of Robert Colman, of Hart-on-the-Hill; and there is a memorandum in the township books, signed by Mr. Colman, acknowledging that he had £20 in his hands, which he received from Mr. Chilton. It is understood that the yearly sum of 20s. is distributed by Mr. Colman amongst poor persons in the township, according to his own discretion. It seems, however, desirable that this small sum should be disposed of in a more public manner." On the demise of Mr. Colman, since the commissioner's inquiry, the property of Hart-on-the Hill was sold to Mr. Stafford, Seaham, ELWICK township forms the south-western portion of Hart parish, and comprises an area of 1,500 acres. The annual value of property assessed for the county-rate, in 1853, was £1,229 13s. It contained in 1801, 170 inhabitants; in 1811, 179; in 1821, 213; in 1831, 232; in 1841, 238; and in 1851, 250. The principal landowners are Robert Darling, Esq., the trustees of the late John Martindale, Esq., the Rev. R. H. Williamson, Mr. Shafto, and others; each of whom claims the manorial rights of his own property. Elwick is mentioned in records belonging to the Nevilles, Lumley, and other proprietors of Hart. The corn tithes are commuted for £42.

The Village of Elwick, which is about nine miles north-by-east from Stockton, and is separated by a deep dene from the neighbouring parish of Elwick Hall, and contains a mill, a tile manufactory, two public-houses, and the usual shops. The annual feast takes place on the Sunday and Monday after Old St. Magdalen's Day.

CARRIER: Anthony Corner, to Stockton, on Wednesday and Saturday, and Castle Eden, &c., on Thursday and Friday.

HART township contains 2,589 acres, and its annual value is £3,476 10s. Its population in 1801 was 219; in 1811, 228; in 1821, 231; in 1831, 243; in 1841, 276; and in 1851, 297 souls. The Hartlepool Railway extends into this township. The whole district between the mouth of the Tees, and a little to the north of the modern limit of Stockton Ward, was anciently known by the name of Hartness; and, with Hart and other rich manors, was held, before the Norman conquest, by Fulk de Panell. It was given by William the Conqueror to Robert de Brus, a Norman knight, whose son married the daughter and heiress of Fulk de Panell. Hart remained in the possession of the Brus family till 1306, when the ninth Robert de Brus, having asserted his claim to the Scottish crown, was declared a rebel and a traitor by Edward I.; and his manor of Hart, the borough of Hartlepool, and all his other property in the bishopric of Durham, were granted to Robert, Lord Clifford, and his heirs for ever, saving the rights of the church of St. Cuthbert. The estates were held by the Cliffords for many generations, and were at length purchased in 1586, by John, Lord Lumley, of Lumley Castle, for £5,350. After remaining in possession of the Lumley family till 1770, they were sold by Richard, fourth Earl of Scarborough, for £72,000, to Sir George Pocock, K.B., from whose descendant, George Pocock, Esq., they were purchased, about 1838, by William Harry, then Marquis, and afterwards the Duke of Cleveland. Hart township is now the property of Frederick A. Milbank, Esq., who is also the lord of the manor.

The Village of Hart occupies the brow of an eminence, eleven miles north-by-east from Stockton, and commands a fine view of the town of Hartlepool. Here is a tile works carried on by Mr. George Baker, of Newcastle.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, stands at the north of the village; and consists of nave, side aisles, chancel, and tower. Within the entrance porch, which is on the south, are a number of grotesque heads, considerably mutilated. At the south end of the church is placed a curious antique font, formed of the limestone common in the neighbourhood. The base, the shaft, and the basin, are all octagonal; and ornamented with sculptured figures of saints, cherubs, foliage, &c. A large circular arch divides the nave from the chancel: the latter has three windows; one at the east end and one at each side. There are a few mural monuments in the church, to the memory of the Ellerker and Scurfield families. The pews were repaired in 1827; a handsome organ has recently been erected, and the church will accommodate 250 persons. Robert de Brus, in 1129, gave the churches of Hart and Stainton, with their chapels, to Guisborough priory; and Bishop Kellaw confirmed the grant. In the reign of Edward I., the vicarage of Hart was valued at £40; equivalent to nearly £500 in the money of the present day. The parish register commences in 1577. The living is a vicarage in the patronage of the crown, valued in the Liber Regis at £11 17s. 1d.; gross income, £247. The glebe consists of about seventy-two acres, and the vicar is entitled to the tithes of certain farms called "the Three Thorps." Rev. William Gorst Harrison, M.A., vicar.

The Vicarage is at the west end of the village, and was enlarged and improved a few years ago.

The School was erected in 1828, by the late Duke of Cleveland, and has an attendance of about twenty scholars. It is without endowment, being supported by the payments of the children.

Charities.—Robert Bromley, by deed, November 24th, 1668, gave to the poor of the lordship of Hart the sum of £20, the interest to be applied towards putting out apprentices. The principal, with other money given to the poor by a person named Barker, is supposed to have been laid out by Edward Ellerker, steward of the estate, in building three cottages on land now belonging to F. A. Milbank, Esq. Another sum of £35, the gift of some person unknown, was, in 1786, vested in Mr. Ellerker, and produced £1 15s. a year. One of the cottages was fitted up as a school by the late Duke of Cleveland; another was inhabited by a pauper placed there by the overseers; and the third was let to a blacksmith at 20s. a year. Nothing appears ever to have been given to the poor, or applied in putting out apprentices, in respect of this charity. The cottage used as a school-room is now occupied by the master of the new school, rent free, and the other two by the blacksmith, who pays to F. A. Milbank, Esq., 20s. per annum for his shop, and 25s. for the cottage behind.

NESBITT township, which is locally situated in the southern division of Easington Ward, comprises one farm, whose area is 326 acres; and the annual value of property was estimated, in 1853, at £174 9s. 4d. The population in 1801 was 5; in 1811, 6; in 1821, 9; in 1831, 10; in 1841, 12; and in 1851, 11 souls. It is the property of the trustees of the late Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., who also possess the manorial rights and privileges.

In 1360 Hugh de Teesdale died seised of lands in Nesbyt, held of the Nevilles and Bulmers. It was afterwards the property of the Wilberfosses, Radcliffes, Welburys, Butteries, Bromleys, and Spearmans, from the latter of whom it was purchased by Anthony Wilkinson, Esq., for £6,900.

Directory.—Swinburn Ellison, farmer, Nesbit Hall.

THORP-BULMER is a township in this parish, though locally situated in the south division of Easington Ward. Its area is 903 acres, and its annual value £1,108 5s. 4d. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 24; in 1811, 84; in 1821, 24; in 1831, 28; in 1841, 21; and in 1851, 31. The Hartlepool Railway extends into this township. Thorp was anciently the estate of the Bulmers, from whom it derived its additional designation; but on the attainder of Sir John Bulmer for high treason, in 1537, it passed to the see of Durham, and was given by Bishop Tunstall to his nephew, Bryan Tunstall, and his heirs. It afterwards became the property of the Lawsons, and was subsequently divided amongst different proprietors. It is now held by William Grey, Esq., and Dr. Patterson, each of whom claim the manorial rights of his own property.

The Hamlet of Thorp-Bulmer is five miles north-west from Hartlepool.

Directory.—Matthew Brown, Bernard Jordison, and William Miller, farmers.

THROSTON township is principally the property of F. A. Milbank, Esq., who is also the possessor of the manorial rights and privileges. Its area is 1,575 acres, and its annual value £3,756. The population in 1801 was 58; in 1811, 48; in 1821, 71; in 1831, 70; in 1841, 101; and in 1851, 240 souls. The Hartlepool branch of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway extends into this township. Throston has always been a portion of the Hart estate, and passed with it through its successive proprietors.

The Hamlet of Throston is two-and-a-half miles west-by-south from Hartlepool. A brick works is carried on here by Mr. George Baker, of Newcastle. At Egypt, adjoining Hartlepool, there is a church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity; Rev. Lewis Paige, incumbent. For particulars, see history, &c. of Hartlepool.

HARTLEPOOL PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

The chapelry, town, and royal borough of Hartlepool, is situated on a rocky peninsula, whose cliffs, on the north-east, east, and south, are washed by the German Ocean; on the south-west and west, it is bounded by the large inlet forming its harbour; and on the north-west, a narrow sandy isthmus connects it with the parish of Hart. It comprises an area of 990 acres, and the value of property assessed to the county-rate, in 1853, was £18,670 6s. 8d. In 1801, the population was 993; in 1811, 1,047; in 1821, 1,249; in 1831, 1,380; in 1841, 5,256; and in 1851, 9,503, of whom 4,800 were males, and 4,703 females. There were at the latter period 1,466 inhabited houses, 28 uninhabited, and 29 building. The municipal borough of Hartlepool is co-extensive with the chapelry, through which the North-Eastern Railway passes.

HISTORY.—From Venerable Bede, we learn, that Hieu, who is said to have been the first woman in the province of the Northumbrians that took upon her the habit and life of a nun, founded the monastery called Heruteu, about the year 640; but she soon after removed to Calcecestr (Tadcaster, Newton Kyme, or Ingleby Abberforth), and there fixed her dwelling. She was succeeded in the government of Heruteu, by Hilda, daughter of Hereric, nephew to King Edwin. This lady, having been converted to Christianity by the preaching of Paulinus, the first bishop of the Northumbrians, resolved to quit the secular life; and for this purpose, withdrew into East Anglia, where she continued for a whole year, with the design of proceeding to France, to enter the monastery of Chelles, near Paris; but being afterwards recalled home by Bishop Aidan, who gave her the land of one family on the north side of the river Wear, she for some time led there the religious life. She was afterwards removed to Heruteu, where she began to reduce all things to a regular system, according as she had been instructed by learned men; for Bishop Aidan, and other religious men that knew her and loved her, frequently visited and diligently instructed her, because of her innate wisdom and inclination to the service of God. "Her prudence," says Bede, "was so great, that not only indifferent persons, but even kings and princes, as occasion offered, asked and received her advice; she obliged those who were under her direction to attend so much to reading of the Holy Scriptures, and to exercise themselves so much in works of justice, that many might be there found fit for ecclesiastical duties, and to serve at the altar." So venerated was her character, that she has been ever since considered the patron saint of Hartlepool.

Penda, King of Mercia, being resolved on the destruction of the entire Northumbrian people, Oswio, their king, made a solemn vow to heaven, that if he defeated Penda, he would build and endow a monastery, and consecrate his daughter, Elfleda, to the service of God in the religious state. Oswio was victorious; and, in compliance with his vow, Elfleda, who was scarcely twelve months old, entered the monastery of Heruteu, then under the government of the Abbess Hilda. Two years afterwards, in 658, Hilda removed with Elfleda to Streaneshalch (Whitby), where she had obtained a grant of ten hides of land from Oswio, and there founded a monastery. Hilda died on the 17th November, in the year 680, aged sixty-six years. From this period no further traces are to be discovered of the monastery at Heruteu, until the year 800, when the Danes, in one of their descents on the eastern coast, destroyed Tinmouth and Hartness. In 865, the nuns of St. Hilda, who had fled from Hartlepool to Tynemouth, suffered martyrdom; and for ages, the very site of their convent was a matter of conjecture; until a discovery of recent date, which will be noticed under the head "Extinct Monastic Edifices," decided the question.

The first mention of Hartlepool by name occurs under the date July 13th, 1174, when Hugh, Count de Bar, nephew to Bishop Pudsey, landed at Hartlepool with a body of Flemings, consisting of 40 knights and 500 foot soldiers, to assist William the Lion in his invasion of England; but, on learning that the Scottish king was a prisoner at Alnwick, the infantry were sent back to their own country. From this fact it is evident that Hartlepool must have become a port of some consequence. In 1180, Bishop Pudsey purchased the wapentake of Sadberge, and from that period, the "prince prelates" of Durham claimed that Hartlepool should be held of them as chief lords of the see. William Brus, succeeded his father, the fourth Robert, in 1191, and obtained a grant from the crown of a weekly market to be held at Hartlepool every Wednesday. In 1200, King John, by charter, created the town a borough, the men of which "shall be free burgesses, and have the same laws and privileges as our burgesses at Newcastle-upon-Tyne." In 1216, he confirmed to Robert, son of William Brus, the market granted to his father, and added the privilege of holding an annual fair on the feast of St. Laurence and two days following. During the minority of the fifth Robert de Brus, son of William de Brus, a contest ensued between his guardian, Peter de Brus, lord of Skelton, and Richard Poor, Bishop of Durham, respecting certain wreck of the sea claimed by the latter; and some of the most forward of the friends of Brus seized and imprisoned a burgess of Hartlepool, known to be friendly to the bishop. On the prelate's excommunicating the offenders, however, the burgess was liberated, and it was agreed that the bishop should have wreck of the sea without contradiction.

The sixth Robert de Brus "builded the haven and wall about the town of Hartlepool, with ten towers on each side of the haven, and a chayne to be drawne between them near the haven, which haven would hold a C sayle." At an inquisition taken at Newcastle, before the justices itinerant, to ascertain the privileges and liberties as well of the bishop as his tenants within the palatinate, A.D. 1293, it appeared that "Robert de Brus had, at Hartlepool market and fair, the assize of bread and ale, and all other liberties belonging to market and fair—a seaport where he received keelage, viz., for every ship plying there eightpence, and for every ship without a boat fourpence, and also the prisage of fish."

Robert de Brus, having asserted his claim to the throne of Scotland, lost all his English possessions, which were granted to the Clifford family. In 1312, Sir James Douglas, at the head of a Scottish force, penetrated to Hartlepool, carrying off much spoil, and many prisoners of both sexes; and, two years afterwards, the Scots again ravaged all the country, on the banks of the Tees. The inhabitants of Hartlepool got on board their ships, with such goods as they could remove, and put out to sea till the enemy retired.

During the Scottish wars, the situation of Hartlepool rendered it a place of some importance, and its inhabitants frequently shared in the maritime transactions of the nation. Some were engaged in the conveyance of provisions and stores, while others fitted out their vessels for actual war. At the siege of Calais, in 1347, the English fleet there consisted of 788 ships, carrying 14,956 mariners, or an average of about 20 each. Of this number Hartlepool furnished five, with 145 men, or 29 to each vessel; whence it may be inferred that the ships from this place were larger than the generality of others.

Successive bishops made grants of tolls for the support of the walls and haven, repairing the pavement, and building the pier; but armaments being no longer needed, and the shipping of the north gradually being absorbed in the coal trade of the Tyne, the port of Hartlepool began to decline; its importance ceasing with the Edwards. Its re-edification was thus urged on Cardinal Wolsey, in 1523, by Frankleyn, Chancellor of Durham:—"And after your liberties be enactyd and confermyd, your grace may straight waye, by writt of restitution, entre possession in Hartlepool, whiche with membris, is worth two hundred the markes a yere standyng rents, besides casualities. The recovering and fortifying of that haven town shuld be a gret profett and strenkith to all y<sup>e</sup> Bishopricke, refuge to our Englishe sheppes, and myghte do manie displeures to the king's enemies, for w<sup>h</sup> purpose it is thought to stand best of any haven towne, in Englande: the p'misses should be remembered at this p'sent p'liament, or else yor grace shal lose manie com'odities and profetts."

In 1535, an act of parliament was passed, declaring Hartlepool, whose inhabitants "cleymed" to be a "parcell of the county of Northumberland," to be, in future, parcel of the county of York only. However, it appears two years afterwards, still to have been considered as forming part of the first-mentioned county.

On the breaking out of the northern rebellion, in 1569, under the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, the Duke of Athol promised to land a body of troops at Hartlepool. While the main body of the insurgents moved southwards, a part of them occupied this town. They were not, however, prudent enough to pursue the plan which the fears both of Cecil and Sadler suggested, viz. "to kepe that towne for their refuge, and to seke their escape by sea, or ells be in hope to receyue there some foreygn ayde." On the departure of the rebels, Sir H. Gates took possession of the town for the queen. In 1587, the plague raged with great violence at Hartlepool, and the deaths amounted to double the usual number.

In 1586, Hartness was sold by the Cliffords to Lord John Lumley, who, in 1593, procured from Queen Elizabeth the charter enjoyed till recently by the burgesses of Hartlepool. He claimed to hold the lordship directly from the crown, and that Hartness was parcel of Northumberland; and had divers disputes with Bishop Matthew, concerning their respective rights, which were at length determined by arbitration. In the discussions, in 1614, relative to sending members to parliament from the county and city of Durham, Barnard Castle, and Hartlepool, the latter place was recommended "to have burgesses, as being the only port town within the county." In 1621, it was objected to, and finally struck out in the committee, as being much given to popery, and as being a poor fishing town which desired no such privilege, and could scarce find a sufficient man dwelling there to serve in parliament. On the levying of ship-money in 1635, Hartlepool, with Stockton, Sunderland, &c. was charged with one ship for the service of the state, manned with four score men and double equipage, with ammunition, wages, and victuals.

During the parliamentary war, Hartlepool was at first occupied by the royalists; Baron Hilton, with his regiment, being stationed there in 1642. On the second incursion of the Scots, in 1644, "the Earl of Callender, with some of the Scots forces, tooke Hartlepool," and, in the following year Lieutenant-colonel Douglas was made governor. Three years afterwards it was given up to the parliament, who resolved "that the new works of Hartlepool be slighted, and the town disgarrisoned." It continued, however, to be occupied by the parliamentary forces; and, in 1649, Captain Richard Webb became governor. From this period few public events occurred to diversify the decline of this ancient town, whose appearance, in 1882, is thus described by a local writer:—"At this time, Hartlepool presented the most dreary and desolate prospect that can well be imagined. The pier had been thrown down in an autumn gale several years before, and, with the exception of a small piece at the west end, was a mere heap of loose stones. The old harbour, once converted into a field, and a crop of corn taken from it, had been opened out again to the tide, and at the springs, had from three to four feet of water in it ; but it was still in ridge and furrow, save where the accumulated rubbish of centuries had piled up hills beyond the reach of the water. It had, in fact, been the place where any rubbish, which became inconvenient to the town's people, had been shot for ages. The walls of the harbour themselves, had long been a mass of ruin ;—and the same air of desolation and decay pervaded the whole place."

Such was the condition of this ancient town, when the appearance of modern science and the enterprise of the present century were brought to bear upon it, and the result has been its entire renovation. The passing of the Hartlepool Dock and Railway Bill, on the 24th May, 1832, was an epoch in the history of the town of higher importance than any thing which had previously occurred. Since that time, the history of the town will be found in an enumeration of the improvements which have been successively effected, and of those which have extended themselves in the adjoining parishes. "A town which has undergone so many changes as Hartlepool has done," observes a recent topographer, "affords a curious theme for reflection on the character of its successive inhabitants. In the dim mists of the past, the religious sisterhood of St. Hilda fade from the view, to give place to the grim warriors who were contemporaneous with the Bruce. These are succeeded by the bold seamen of the North Sea, who bore the chivalry of their native land to the wars of Scotland and France, or who fought their country's battles on their own element ; whilst, at home, the religion and learning of the time were preserved by the canons of Guisborough, whose example must have induced a taste for literature which endured long after their departure. The hardy, industrious, honest, and simple population of the last century are now being superseded by the acute man of business, the ingenious mechanic, and, once more, the hardy navigator. It is to be hoped that the people of Hartlepool, now fully alive to the advantages of their situation, may long continue to enjoy the fruits of their enterprise, talent, and perseverance."

THE TOWN OF HARTLEPOOL.

The town of Hartlepool stands upon a peninsula, which forms the south-eastern projection of the bed of magnesian limestone extending along the coast from this place to Tynemouth, and is connected with the mainland by a low sandy isthmus, which is so narrow, low, and sandy, that Hutchinson conjectured the tide at high water had once flowed over it. Recent investigations seem to show that the peninsula, like some other portions of the coast, now submerged, was, at one period, covered with forests which were the haunt of the hart, and from which the name of the district has been derived.

The south side of the peninsula is occupied by the older part of the town, which consists of a principal street called High, or Southgate-street, and several smaller streets, all having an ascent towards St. Hilda's Church and the Town Moor. On the south side of Southgate-street, is the Town House, in front of which the market cross formerly stood ; and from this street connecting avenues lead to that part of the town walls which form the boundary of the old harbour. Several winding streets have been erected round the inner harbour, now the Victoria Dock ; the oldest of these, called Northgate-street, terminates at the North Gate, at the western extremity of the town, and the site of the ancient fortifications in that direction. In the olden times, the fishermen are stated to have lived in the "Farwell Field," which was enclosed by the boundary wall of the township, and beyond this wall was Hart Warren. From the Farwell Field, a wider curve sweeps to the head of Middlegate-street, and, under the designation of Fisher-Row, terminates near the north-west corner of St. Hilda's Church. The Poor's Lands extend around the last mentioned road up to the north side of St. Hilda's Church, and separate the town from the Common Fields and the Town Moor, the latter of which bounds the town on the east and north, and extends to the verge of the cliffs. During the French war, a battery stood on the eastern extremity of the moor, and near to its site a light-house was built in 1847.

THE WALLS.—Robert de Brus surrounded the town with walls on every side, except where the height of the cliffs rendered such defences unnecessary: and vestiges of breastworks are still visible on the Town Moor towards the sea. "To the north-east," says a recent writer, "the walls extended along the edge of the bank, which becomes gradually lower towards the isthmus connecting Hartlepool with the mainland; but this portion of the defences is nearly obliterated. Fragments of walls, towers, and bastions remained across the isthmus until the formation of the railway and dock rendered their removal necessary. Here stood the North Gate, the principal entrance into the town, at a distance of 300 yards from the sea. This gate was removed by order of the surveyors of the highways in 1836. The inner harbour or haven, which formed a nearly simicircular bay on the west side of the town, was crossed by the town wall from the North Gate to the extreme point of the land opposite, and was thus enclosed from the outer harbour. The outer wall was here above eight feet thick, faced on each side with dressed stones, and having a parapet guarded by a breast wall and embrasure. There was a water-gate twenty-four-and-three-quarter feet wide and ten feet high, to allow small vessels to pass without removing the boom chains of the grand entrance, which was thirty-six feet wide, and defended by massive round flanking towers. Square bastions were placed at intervals on the walls, the southern extremity of which was terminated by a half-moon. The formation of the Victoria Dock rendered the removal of this part of the fortifications necessary. At the half moon just mentioned the wall forms an angle towards the east. At a distance of 166 feet there is a square bastion, eight feet seven inches in front; and 309 feet further there is a large projection in the wall, most probably modern, forty-nine feet long, with a sally-port; at a distance of 355 feet, a round bastion thirteen feet in front; and 287 feet beyond it is the water gate, which only communicates with the land at low water, and from which an avenue leads to Southgate-street. The archway of the gate is pointed, about eight feet in width, and defended on each side by angular turrets, with the points projecting. This part of the town wall is about eighteen feet high, and from six to nine in thickness. Its appearance is more modern than might be supposed, in consequence of the repairs which have been necessary to protect it from the encroachments of the sea. From the water gate the wall proceeds to a point of the rock fronting the sea, and near the pier. The whole of these defences are constructed of the magnesian limestone hewn from the cliffs."

EXTINCT MONASTIC EDIFICES, &c.—St. Hilda's Convent.—We have elsewhere given all the information derivable from history, respecting the ancient monastery of Heruteu, the site of which had become entirely unknown; but in digging the foundations for a house in a field called Cross Close, in June 1833, several small inscribed sepulchral stones were discovered, which have been pronounced by antiquarians to be the remains of St. Hilda's Convent.

These stones were found at a depth of three-and-a-half feet below the surface, resting on the limestone rock; and each supported the skull of a human skeleton. The skeletons were laid in order, side by side, and in a position nearly north and south. The stones are ornamented with crosses in relief, with characters supposed to represent the Greek alpha and omega, on the upper division. Two of them bear inscriptions in mixed Runic and Saxon characters, which have been rendered by Kemble Hildihrith and Hildigith, or, according to another authority, Hildeth the Virtuous, and Hilme the Meek. Fragments of two circular flat stones with a figured pattern and Latin words inscribed on them, were also found; the word Requiescat may be distinctly read upon one of them. The words Ora and Pro are found on another of the square stones. The skeletons were male and female; "the former," says Mr. Procter, "apparently of a tall race, and with a peculiar thickness of the fore part of the skull, which, in an age of hard knocks and keen fighting, must have been an enviable perfection." It is, however, thought this was the cemetery of a peaceful community, and that it was attached to the primitive Convent of St. Hilda. Some further discoveries were made in 1888, when some more inscribed stones, and several skulls and bones, were found at the same place.

St. Helen's Chapel.—This edifice was situated in the Farwell Field, near St. Helen's Well, where its foundations were discovered in 1845. It consisted of a chancel, with a transept at the west end, and, from an examination of the fragments, appears to have been in the early English style; but certainly of later foundation than the church of St. Hilda. A stone coffin, containing a skeleton, was discovered near the ruins. This chapel was given by William de Brus, for the support of a light before the high altar of Guisborough. Robert Palmer, of Hartlepool, with the consent of Emma his wife, gave all his land and houses; Martin Fuller, of the same place, his land; and Alice, daughter of the latter, released her dower in the same lands, all of which grants were confirmed by Robert Bruce. Robert de Whitwell left a messuage and its appurtenances to be sold, and the proceeds to be devoted to the maintenance of a chaplain to pray for the repose of his soul.

The Friary.—The Franciscan convent, founded by one of the Bruce family, stood a short distance north-east of St. Hilda's Church, in the neighbourhood, if not upon the site, now occupied by an old gabled house, with mullioned windows, known by the name of the Friary. It appears to have existed previous to 1258, for in that year it is mentioned as being under the wardenship of the Grey Friars of Newcastle. At the suppression of the religious houses, the community consisted of a guardian and eighteen brothers, and the clear yearly value of their possessions was £4 5s. 8d. In 37 Henry VIII., the friary was granted to John D'Oyley and John Scudamore; and its site was held in 1605 by Ralph Conyers, Esq., of Layton. It was afterwards held by the Porretts, from whom it was purchased, in 1684, by the trustees of Smith's charity, to whom it now belongs. The house was for many years occupied as a workhouse for the town, and is still used occasionally as a vagrant ward.

ST. HILDA'S CHURCH.—This edifice, the link which unites the Hartlepool of to-day with the Hartlepool of past ages, occupies an elevated situation, and forms a conspicuous object on the coast. It is supposed to occupy the site of a more ancient structure, and consists of nave with aisles, chancel and aisles, and a massive and lofty western tower. The latter is supported by buttresses of great strength and thickness. The buttresses on the south side of the tower are lower than those on the north and west; but from pinnacles at their extremities, flying buttresses extend to the walls, one of which buttresses, having previously fallen, was restored in 1838. Two tiers of pointed arches ornament the tower, which is surmounted by an embattled parapet, with crocketed pinnacles at each corner, and contains three bells. The principal entrance to the church was formerly on the west side of the tower, but it has long been closed up. The southern doorway is a fine specimen of the late Norman or transition period, and is ornamented with chevron moulding. It was long protected by a plain porch, but thanks to the generosity of Mrs. Vollum, widow of the late William Vollum, Esq., of Hartlepool, a more appropriate covering was erected in 1852. The interior of the nave and aisles is well proportioned, being eighty-five feet in length by forty-four in breadth within the walls, and each of the aisles is formed by five pillars, supporting pointed arches. The arch which separates the nave and chancel is lofty and of graceful proportions; but the chancel itself was all taken down in 1724, except one compartment in which the beautiful capitals of the side arches have been fortunately preserved. That on the south side serves as a vestry, and that on the north is enclosed. The whitewash, which covered the greater portion of the church, was removed in 1838 and 1851, so that the magnesian limestone, of which the church is built, is restored to view in all the beauty of its warm buff colour. In October 1838, an organ was placed in the church. There are two defaced and mutilated stone effigies in the north aisle, which have been restored from the churchyard; they are supposed to represent a mayor of Hartlepool and his lady. In the floor beneath the tower is a monumental slab, bearing a cross, and beneath the chancel arch, there is a large slab, inlaid with brass, bearing the effigy of a lady in a high crowned hat, ruff, long waist and stomacher, close gown with long sleeves, and flowered petticoats, and "CASTA FIDES VICTRIX" on a scroll issuing from her mouth. From an inscription on the stone, we learn that it represents Jane Bell, wife of Parvaud Bell, mayor of Hartlepool. The font is an elegant basin of Yorkshire marble, and stands under the western gallery. The churchyard contains a tomb belonging to the Bruce family, which formerly occupied the centre of the chancel, but on the curtailment of that part of the church in 1724, it was left outside. It is covered by a slab of black Frosterley marble, nine feet in length by six in breadth, without inscription, but the panels of the supporting sides are charged with the Bruce's badge, a lion rampant. There were several chantries in this church. Bishop Skirlaw, on the 3rd April 1396, granted license to the mayor and commonalty of Hartlepool, to found anew, in honour of St. Helen, a chantry of one chaplain, to pray for the "good estate of the bishop whilst living, of Maude, wife of Roger de Clifford, and their heirs," &c. The chaplain and his successors were to be subject to the rules and orders of the corporation, who were also permitted to grant lands and messuages for the perpetual maintenance of the chantry. Richard Brigge, the last chaplain, had a pension of £4 allowed him at the dissolution. A chantry, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and for two chaplains, was founded at the same time, and for the same purposes as the one just mentioned. It was of the yearly value of £7 18s. 4d. at the dissolution, when its last incumbent received an annual pension of £5. Bishop Skirlaw also granted a license, at the same period, "to refund to the honour of St. Nicholas a third chantry, of one chaplain, to pray at the altar of that saint. The chapelry of St. Hilda, at Hartlepool, though not named in Brus's grant of the churches of Hart and Stranton to Guisborough, is mentioned in the confirmatory charters of Bishops Pudsey, Kirkham, Stichill, and Kellaw; and was also included in the grants of Bishop Beck in 1288 and 1308, by which divine service was to be performed by a canon of that church. In the taxation of 1291, the chapelry of Hartlepool was valued at £23 18s. 4d., a sum equal to about £300 of our present money. The registers of the chapelry commence in 1566. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Hart, and the income is about £180 per annum. Curate, Rev. Robert Taylor.

The Parsonage is situated in Middlegate-street, but being unfit for residence, the incumbent resides in a house near the church. A grant of £300 was obtained from the Maltby fund, in 1853, towards the erection of a new parsonage.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH.—The rapid increase of population in Hartlepool, having rendered additional church accommodation requisite, this structure was erected by subscription in 1851-2, at a cost of £2,350, upon a site given for the purpose by the trustees of the late Duke of Cleveland. It is in the decorated style, and consists of nave with aisles, chancel, and north and south porches; each of the latter has a deeply moulded doorway under a pointed arch, which supports a lofty pediment, surrounded by a cross. The nave and aisles are eighty-four feet in length by fifty in breadth, and the chancel thirty-six by thirty-two. The vestry and organ chamber are on the north side of the chancel. The exterior walls are supported by buttresses, and the original plan included a western tower 100 feet high, the erection of which is, for the present, postponed. The roof is open, of bold and beautiful design, and the nave and aisles are furnished with open seats. The chancel stalls are carved in panels, and the floor within the rails of the communion table is paved with encaustic tiles. The pulpit is of Caen stone, and the Venerable Archdeacon Thorp presented the font. The church contains 800 sittings, 500 of which are free and unappropriated. By an order in council, dated February 7th, 1853, a chapelry district was assigned to this church, but as yet there is no endowment, the income, about £70 per annum, arises from seat rents. The living is in the patronage of the Vicar of Hart, and incumbency of the Rev. Lewis Paige, M.A. A grant of £400 was made in 1853 towards the building of a parsonage, which is now in process of erection.

ST. MARY'S (CATHOLIC) CHURCH.—The influx of workmen, consequent upon the formation of the railway and dock, brought a considerable number of Catholics into the town, whose religious wants were for a time supplied by the Rev. T. A. Slater, of Hutton House, and a small chapel was erected in 1834 by John Wells, Esq., for their accommodation. To this chapel the Rev. William Knight, the present pastor, was appointed, and was the first resident priest in Hartlepool since the Catholic services ceased in the venerable church of St. Hilda. From the rapid increase of the congregation, a larger church soon became necessary, and the corner-stone of the present edifice was laid at the head of Middlegate-street, on the 2nd July, 1850, according to the rites and ceremonies of the Catholic religion. So much expedition was used in the erection, that the church was completed and dedicated on the 28th August, 1851, on which occasion there were present Cardinal Wiseman, Dr. Hogarth, Bishop of Hexham; Dr. Briggs, Bishop of Beverley; Dr. Brown, Bishop of Shrewsbury; Dr. Morris, Bishop of Troy; and upwards of fifty priests from various places in the neighbourhood. The total cost of erection, inclusive of the rectory and purchase of land, amounted to nearly £4,000, the greatest portion of which was raised by subscription. Externally it is a plain structure in the same style as the church of St. Hilda—the transition Norman, or first pointed—and stands east and west, the tower and spire at the east end. The altar is placed at the west—this departure from ordinary rule being considered justified by motives of convenience. The church is entered at the east end though a doorway richly carved, and at the south side through plain folding doors. On entering, the visitor is at once impressed with the religious character of the place, and the pious Catholic finds every outward help that art can furnish to his devotion. The church consists of tower and spire, nave, with clerestory, aisles, and apsidal chancel. It is 121 feet in length by 43 in breadth, and is lighted by thirty-six windows, exclusive of those in the staircase, the tower, and crypts. The windows in the clerestory are of plain rolled glass, the rest are of stained glass, by Barnett, of York. The five in the apse represent the following subjects, viz., the Immaculate Conception, the Presentation, the Incarnation, the Nativity, and the Assumption: and are the gifts, respectively, of Mrs. Hopper, Mrs. W. Witham, the Bishop of Hexham, the Rev. T. A. Slater, and Joseph A. Hansom, Esq., the architect. The window at the west end of the north aisle is a mortuary window, the gift of Lord and Lady Stourton; it is placed above an altar of the Blessed Virgin, and bears representations of Our Lady and St. Joseph. The window at the east end of the north aisle represents St. Thomas Aquinas, and St. Henry, and is the joint gift of the Rev. Thomas Witham, of Lartington, and Henry Silvertop, Esq., of Minsteracres. Proceeding to the window at the east end of the south aisle, we find St. Ann, and the Blessed Virgin, St. Elizabeth, and St. John, with a beautifully-executed crucifixion in the trefoil above. This window is the offering of Mr. Barnett. The window at the west end of the south aisle is given by the members of the Guild, a Catholic Sick Club, established many years ago in Hartlepool. In the two quatrefoils are represented the Good Samaritan relieving the wounded man, and Tobias burying the dead. The trefoil above shews an axe and saw, the emblems of the handicraft of St. Joseph, the patron of the Guild. The side windows are the gifts of various individuals, the subject of which was fixed by the donor, and represents either his own patron saint, or one appropriate in some way to the place. Thus St. Peter was chosen as the patron of fishermen, St. Aloysius as the patron of youth, St. Hilda and St. Bega as the patron saints of Hartlepool, both having been residents therein. Commencing near the altar of the Blessed Virgin, the subjects are consecutively these:—St. Peter, St. Thomas of Canterbury, St. Charles Borromeo, St. Aloysius, St. Nicholas, and St. Patrick. On the opposite side:—St. Hilda, St. Bega, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Frances Widow, and St. Jane Frances de Chantal. The donors are Charles Wright, Esq., the Rev. Thomas Witham, Mr. J. D. Storey, the children attending the Catholic School, Charles Bodenham, Esq., Mr. Fawcus, Very Reverend Canon Knight, Mrs. William Witham, Miss Knight, Mrs. Jackson, and Mrs. Arthur. Whilst viewing the windows, the eye of the visitor will be often arrested by the Stations of the Passion. These are basso-relievo, in plaster of Paris; and are fixed in the wall in quatrefoil frames of the same material, which give them a bold and very rich appearance. They are fourteen in number, commencing over the doorway leading to the singing gallery, and terminate on the opposite side. The chancel is apsidal, a form not common in England; but frequently found on the Continent, and particularly in Germany. The altar is of stone, with an open front, standing upon five pillars, and is richly carved and ornamented. The roof of the chancel, which is richly decorated in the Byzantine style, is divided into fifteen compartments; in the highest five are seen the five letters of the word Maria; in the next, the heads of the four greater prophets, with that of Moses in the centre; and in the lowest, the heads, with the emblems of the four Evangelists, and the head of Our Saviour in the centre. The doorway leading from the sanctuary to the vestries is partly copied from one, now sadly mutilated, in the parish church at Lanchester. It represents the Blessed Virgin crowned; an angel on each side is holding a scroll, on which are the words "Ave Regina Cœlorum;" under these two serpents are coiled, amongst some branches of fruit trees. A beautiful stone pulpit stands between the altar rails and the vestry door. The mention of this, the font at the east end of the north aisle, and the powerful and sweet-toned organ, will complete the description of the interior of this interesting church. We must point attention, however, to one peculiarity. The floor is an inclined plane—there being a descent of two feet six inches from the main doorway to the altar rails. By this arrangement, great facility is given both of hearing what is said and of seeing what is done. After passing the two commodious vestries, which connect the church with the rectory, the visitor descends a flight of stone steps into a crypt, or small mortuary chapel under the chancel. It is lighted by three richly stained glass windows, representing St. Joseph, St. Catherine, and St. Winifred, with their respective emblems. It has a stone altar, and the floor is laid with encaustic tiles. This neat little chapel was fitted up at the expense of the Dowager Lady Stourton, who, in other ways, also, has been a generous benefactor. The church was designed by J. A. Hansom, Esq., of Preston, and the builder was Mr. John Galley, of Hartlepool. We must not omit to add that the tower contains a fine peal of eight bells, from the foundry of Messrs. C. and G. Mears, Whitechapel, London. These bells are partly the result of a public subscription, but, this, scarcely amounting to one-tenth of the actual cost, they may be said to be the munificent present of Mr. John Lawrenson, of Hartlepool, who, in other respects, has been one of the most liberal contributors to the building. St. Mary's has recently been created a rectory, and the Very Reverend Canon Knight has become the first rector.

THE BAPTIST CHAPEL is situated at the north-east corner of Chare Head Field, on a portion of the Smith's Charity estate, and was erected in 1851, at a cost of £600. It is a stone structure, and the front elevation is somewhat ornamental. The door-way occupies the centre, with a window at each side and three windows above, having rusticated dressings; the angles terminate with pilasters and the roof finishes with a pediment. It will accommodate about 500 persons. In 1845, the church of Particular or Calvinistic Baptists, in Hartlepool, only numbered seven members; and the congregation not being yet sufficiently numerous to defray the requisite expenditure, an annual grant is received from the funds of the Baptist Home Mission. Rev. John Kneebon, minister.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL, situated in Fishergate-street, was erected in 1844, at an expense of upwards of £1,000. The front elevation is somewhat imposing; the door-way is in the centre, and has a window on each side with three above. Four pilasters ornament the front of the building, and support an entablature and pediment, which give a finish to the roof. The chapel contains upwards of 500 sittings, and there is a Sunday-school attached, attended by about 200 children. The Independents or Congregationalists first assembled in Hartlepool in 1840, in a small room rented for the purpose; but their numbers having soon increased, the present structure was erected far their accommodation. Rev. Alfred Howson, minister.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL is situated opposite to St. Mary's Catholic Church, on ground purchased from the trustees of Smith's Charity, and was erected in 1851. It is a commodious building, the front elevation consisting of a square projection, with a Doric door-way and a window on each side, and three semi-circular headed windows above, terminating with a pediment. Attached to the chapel is a minister's house, and a school-room, the latter is attended by about 150 children. Primitive Methodism was introduced into Hartlepool in 1822, but gained no footing until a few years after, when a granary was taken and fitted up as a chapel. In 1830, a chapel was erected in the Croft, which was at length superseded by the present structure.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHAPEL, situated in Hart-street, was erected in 1839, and opened for service on the 1st January, 1840. It is a neat and commodious structure, without any great pretensions to architectural display, and will accommodate about 600 worshippers. There is a Sunday-school and well-selected library attached to the chapel. The first members of the United Presbyterian body came to reside in Hartlepool about the year 1833. A congregation was formed in 1838, and under the auspices of the Newcastle Presbytery, the present structure was erected.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL, Northgate-street, is a substantial brick edifice, erected in 1839, at a cost of £1,800, and contains about 750 sittings, of which 150 are free for the poor. There is a Sunday-school attached, which is well attended, and possesses a library for the use of the children. Wesleyan Methodism was introduced into Hartlepool by its founder, in July 1757, on which occasion he preached in the principal street; he afterwards visited Hartlepool on several occasions, and successive places of worship were occupied by his followers till the opening of the present chapel. Hartlepool is included in the Stockton circuit, at which place the regular preachers resided till 1841, when a resident minister was appointed for Hartlepool.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST ASSOCIATION CHAPEL, a small brick building, situated in Mount Pleasant, was erected in 1851, and will accommodate about 400 persons.

THE WESLEYAN REFORMERS' CHAPEL, Chare Head Field, was erected in 1851, at a cost of £240, and contains nearly 800 sittings. Besides these chapels, there is a large room in Minerva Place, fronting the Victoria Dock, where sermons are preached every Sunday afternoon.

CROOKS' ENDOWED SCHOOL.—John Crooks, by will, September 1st, 1742, charged his estate at Stranton with £15 per annum for teaching twenty-four boys, of Hartlepool, reading, writing, and arithmetic, and £5 yearly to buy their books, stationery, shoes, and stockings. One of his heirs, John Leighton, availing himself of the statute of mortmain, seized his share of the estate; but Ann Crooks, a daughter and coheirress of John, by deed of gift, November 21st, 1759, conveyed her moiety of the estate to seven trustees, to apply three-fourths of the rents in teaching as many poor boys as the same should be sufficient for, and the remaining fourth for books, &c. New trustees of the charity have been appointed from time to time. The property in Stranton contains twenty-two acres, the income from which is at present about £14 per annum. A school-house was built on a piece of ground leased of the corporation for forty years from September 20th, 1790, at 2s. per annum; and this lease was renewed for a similar term on October 24th, 1829. The school is situated in Crossgate, and is attended by 60 scholars, 80 of whom are taught free.

PRISSICK'S ENDOWED SCHOOLS are situated in Prissick-street, and owe their origin to the late Elizabeth Prissick, who, dying December 30th, 1826, left her property for the sole benefit of John Wells during his lifetime, on condition of his making some provision for the education of the poor. He accordingly erected and endowed two school-rooms, which were placed under trustees; and a deed to that effect was enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, October 7, 1835. The income is derived from the ground-rents of leasehold property in South Terrace, and amounts to £200 a year. About 150 boys attend one of the schools, and 100 girls the other, all of whom receive a gratuitous education, according to the tenets of the Church of England, on the national system. Since the death of Mr. Wells, an infant-school has been commenced by the trustees, and is attended by about 120 children of both sexes.

THE CATHOLIC SCHOOLS, situated in Prissick-street, were founded, in 1836, by Mrs. Cayley, of Scorton, and are attended by about 50 boys and 70 girls. St. Bega's Schools, also attached to the Catholic Church, were established by the Misses Knight, in 1858; they are situated in Well-street, and are conducted by religious, under whose care it is purposed to convert them into industrial schools, and to provide lodging, &c. for the poor children. The attendance averages 200 pupils, who are educated gratuitously. The whole of these schools are under government inspection.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL, Northgate-street, was commenced in 1848, and is principally supported by subscription. The average attendance is about 120 children.

THE MECHANICS' INSTITUTION, situated in Strype-street, was first established in 1833, but its operations were suspended in 1836; and though re-established in 1840, it was again closed in 1843. It was revived in 1847, a news room was commenced in 1848, and the library at present contains upwards of 600 volumes. John Anderson, librarian.

Besides this institution, there is the Commercial News Room, Town Wall, Christopher Procter, secretary; the Workingmen's Institute, Darlington-street, James Caldwell, president; an Auxiliary Bible Society, an Auxiliary Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Jews, an Indigent Sick Society, a Town Mission, and several Benefit and Building Societies.

HARBOUR, PIER, DOCKS, &c.—We have already alluded to the importance which the harbour of Hartlepool enjoyed in ancient times. The earliest record relative to the pier, bears the date of 1473; in which year, the mayor, burgesses, and commonalty of the town, having determined to erect a pier to defend the harbour, and to protect the south front of the town walls from the sea, Bishop Booth addressed letters to various persons, entreating them to contribute to a work of so much importance by their charitable donations, &c. Similar letters were granted by some of the succeeding bishops. The repairs of the pier seem to have been made in a manner ill calculated for its preservation; for whenever reparation was necessary, the mayor issued his orders to the inhabitants, who brought what loose stones they could find; but as no regular system was observed, these temporary repairs were of little use. In 1588 and 1665, unsuccessful attempts were made to procure parliamentary aid. In 1719, a small export duty was laid on grain, towards repairing the pier; and donations for the same object were obtained from the mayor of Hartlepool, and other gentry of the county. At length, the dilapidations of the pier seemed to threaten the existence of the town itself; and a subscription was commenced in 1810, which, in two years, reached the sum of £2,577 11s. 5d. On April 15th, 1812, the first stone of the new work was laid by Carr Ibbetson, Esq.; but the subscriptions received not being equal to the estimated expense (£3,500), the committee at length obtained an act of parliament for improving the pier and port of Hartlepool, April 15th, 1813, enacting that every ship entering the harbour should pay a duty of 2d. per ton; every boat or coble belonging to the port, 5s. a year; and every house rated to the poor at £5 or more per annum, a sum not exceeding one-fortieth part of the rental. Still, however, the sums raised from these sources were found inadequate: and the pier was only rebuilt at the extremity, and connected with the land by the ruins of the old pier. In this state it continued for several years, and the harbour was equally neglected. In 1823, a scheme was agitated for shipping the coal from some of the Hetton Company's Collieries at Hartlepool; but this design was abandoned. At length, the opening of the Stockton and Darlington and the Clarence Railways on one side, and the foundation of Seaham Harbour on the other, brought the capabilities of Hartlepool into prominent notice. A scheme was projected for opening out its port, and making a railway to it; the capital proposed to be raised for the undertaking was £200,000, in shares of £200 each. The requisite acts of parliament were obtained; and, at a meeting of the committee of the dock company, held July 9th, 1832, Mr. Edward Steel was appointed principal engineer, and Mr. J. T. W. Bell sub-engineer for the railway; and Mr. James Milne, of Edinburgh, engineer for the docks. A coffer-dam, to exclude the sea, was the first work commenced, after which the excavation of the inner harbour or haven was proceeded with. At a small depth below the surface, a bed of soft peat, with trees, roots, and other vegetable remains, were found, on which instead of timber piling, a bed of large stones was laid down. On the east side of the dock, next to the town, the limestone was found to be so open that the sea rushed through it; and it was consequently found advisable to curtail the extension of the haven in that direction. About this period, the summer of 1833, differences of opinion arose between the committee and Mr. Milne, their engineer, as to the manner in which the dock wall should be built, which led to the resignation of that gentleman. He was succeeded, on the recommendation of Sir John Rennie, by Mr. James Brown, previously resident engineer at Holyhead. The improvement of the harbour and formation of the docks, absorbed more capital than had been anticipated; and, in 1835, a sum of £30,000 was obtained, after considerable difficulty, from the Exchequer Bill Loan Commissioners, for which private security, of undoubted value, had to be given. Previous to the completion of the railway, and whilst the channel into the harbour was in progress, the dock was opened on July 9th, 1833, when coals were shipped from Thornley Colliery, in the "Britannia," the property of Cuthbert Sharp, Esq., of Hartlepool. In a few weeks afterwards, the outer channel was so much improved by sluicing, that loaded ships of 350 tons were enabled to go to sea from the docks. "Meanwhile the pier and port commissioners," says a recent author, "were struggling with the difficulties of their trust; and they were under the necessity of borrowing £8,000 from the Dock Company, which the Loan Commissioners required to have repaid before the advance above mentioned should be made. In order to facilitate the completion of the docks, the two coal companies which first shipped their produce from Hartlepool advanced the money. The first attempt to deepen the channel was by a dredger. More effectually to scour the harbour, a pier or jetty on the Stranton side became necessary; and, to avoid the expense of a more elaborate work, this was done in 1835, by sinking old keels, and filling them with material from the dredger, covered afterwards with loose stones, and further strengthened by the natural accumulation of sand and shingle. This structure has answered its intended purpose as well as could have been anticipated. As it was of great importance to deepen the channel, the sluices were prematurely set to work; and the consequence was that the masonry of the 'aprons,' which had not had time to 'set,' was torn up, and further delay and expense incurred. In 1836, the commissioners erected a light upon the pier, at a cost of about £200. It became apparent, however, that their income was too limited for the works required; and, in 1837, they applied for, and obtained another act of parliament, by which their dues were increased from  $\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 1d. per ton on all vessels loading or discharging cargoes, and half dues on refuge vessels, their powers to raise money being also increased from £8,000 to £16,000. This act defined the boundaries between the commissioners' and the dock company's works to be an 'imaginary line drawn across from the town's wall of Hartlepool to the opposite shore, in the direction of the south edge of the existing coffer dam.' An agreement was entered into, in 1838, between the dock company and the Stockton and Hartlepool Railway Company, by which the tariff on that line was to be extended to the docks for shipment. This rendered additional works, to the value of £13,000 or £14,000, necessary." The large traffic of 400,000 tons of coal annually, calculated upon by this company, seemed to warrant so large an expenditure; but considerable disappointment was experienced at the result of the opening of the railway; for, during the first three years of its working, only 115,000 tons of coal came to the docks by it instead of the quantity that had been expected. "This unfavourable result," says J. M. Rendel, Esq., C.E., "is attributed by the Stockton and Hartlepool Company to impediments imposed to their trade by the Hartlepool Dock Company, with the view of driving it to their own line of railway, now extending into the Auckland district, as they say, in the spirit of rivalry. On the other hand, the Hartlepool Dock and Railway Company state that the price charged by them for the shipment of the coal brought down the Stockton and Hartlepool is as low as the work can be done for, that they made no distinction in favour of the traders in their own railway, and that the disappointment experienced by the Stockton and Hartlepool Railway Company is solely attributable to errors in their original calculations as to the trade which their line would command." In 1846, the Hartlepool Dock and Railway passed by agreement for a lease, into the possession of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Company. The act for this purpose was not obtained till 1848; the lease is for thirty-one years, from the 1st of July in that year, at eight per cent on the capital and debt of the Dock Company, and three per cent on that of the Hartlepool Junction Railway. At the expiration of this time, the two companies are to amalgamate on equal terms. The railway approaches the docks, by way of the isthmus, from the north-west, and passing onwards along a substantial range of staiths, divides the company's part of the harbour into the tide basin of the south-west, and the Victoria Dock on the north-east, each containing about twenty acres. In these docks there are seventeen coal drops and three ballast cranes. The tidal harbour and Victoria Dock are connected by a passage forty-five feet wide, which is crossed by a swivel bridge. At the north-western extremity of the tidal harbour are the sluices, by which the water flowing into the western Slake is retained for cleaning the harbour; the area of the Slake, or scouring reservoir, which is embanked on the north and west, is 173 acres. Previous to the construction of the docks, the Slake was crossed by a road called Blackstones, which proceeded from the east side of the water nearly in a direction towards Middleton House, and was passable from half-ebb to half-flood tide. When the company constructed their embankment between the tide harbour and the Slake, they made it sufficiently broad to carry a public road, which gives access to the town at every state of the tide. The lock is forty feet wide, across which a turning bridge is placed. In order to ship the traffic from the Stockton and Hartlepool Railway, it was requisite to erect a bridge across the lock of sufficient strength to bear heavy engines or trains of loaded wagons, and also capable of being opened or closed as circumstances might require. For this purpose a draw bridge was constructed, which, being necessarily level, is supported when down by braces. The total expense of this extensive dock accommodation, &c., amounted to £615,000. The commissioners' or outer harbour, contains twenty-five acres, and extends from the north-western extremity of the town to the pier. The limits within which vessels are liable to the port tolls comprise the bay between an imaginary point about half a mile east of the headland of Hartlepool on the north, and the Long Scar Buoy on the south. The depth of water on the bar in spring tides is nineteen feet. In entering the harbour, the pier-light bears north-by-west. On July 21st, 1845, an act passed "for amending the acts relative to the improving of the pier and port of Hartlepool, in the county of Durham;" its object being to remodel the appointment of commissioners. In 1851, another act was obtained, conferring additional power on the commissioners, and empowering them to erect a breakwater or pier from the Heugh in a south-east direction, so as to shelter a considerable portion of the north side of the bay, and protect the Heugh itself from the encroachments of the sea. This pier is being constructed of artificial stone, composed of Portland cement and broken stones, the latter being supplied in abundance from the reef on which the new structure is itself being projected. These materials are thrown together into a wooden frame, mixed with the cement and water, and in a few minutes become like solid stone. When the frames are removed, these large blocks will resist the action of water, and are of an imperishable structure. The artificial blocks are manufactured under the superintendence of S. Robinson, Esq., the engineer. The lower courses of the pier have now been carried out to a distance of 650 feet from the Heugh, and to a depth above the extreme low-water level; when finished Hartlepool Heugh Pier will be one of the largest solid blocks of marine masonry in England. It is understood to be the intention of government to erect a fort on the Heugh, for the protection of the town and port. For the first three years after the opening of the docks, the revenue received by the commissioners was merely nominal: in 1831, it amounted to £71 1s. 6d.; 1836, £305 8s.; 1837, £560 8s. 3d.; 1838, £900 16s. 11d.; 1839, £999 10s. 10d.; 1840, £1,395 10s. 3d.; 1841, £1,847 10s. 6d.; 1842, £1,963 9s. 1d.; 1843, £2,021 3s. 1d.; 1844, £1,828 3s. 8d.; 1845, £2,679 11s. 8d.; 1846, £2,389 19s.; 1847, £2,505 2s. 10d.; 1848, £2,960 2s. 3d.; 1849, £2,089 5s. 3d.; 1850, £2,841 6s. 8d.; 1851, £2,675 10s. 10d.; 1852, £2,948 6s. 5½d.; 1853, £3,067 6s. 10d.; and in 1854, £2,795 9s. 5d.; making a total of £39,440 0s. 4½d.

Light-House.—The light-house, on the Heugh, was erected in 1846-7 from designs furnished by S. Robinson, Esq. The tower is a circular shaft, the diameter of which tapers from 24 feet at the base to 16 feet under the projecting balcony. The height from the ground to the top of the gallery is 48 feet, with 10 feet more to the centre of the light, which is 84 feet above high water mark. It is a stationary white light, exhibited from sunset to sunrise; and there is a red tide light, 61½ feet above high water. During the day, the time for entering the harbour is indicated by a large red ball, hoisted to the top of a mast above the lantern. The lights are produced from coal-gas, and are directed by a dioptric lens in a plane nearly parallel to the horizon. The entire cost of the erection was £3,200. For the security of the light-house, it was found necessary to defend the face of the cliff on which it stands with masonry set in cement, which caused an expenditure of £2,100. The light-keepers' cottages cost £450, making an entire outlay of £5,750. The annual charge for gas, attendance, interest on capital, &c., amounts to about £435 15s. The light is gratuitous.

THE CUSTOMS PORT.—From the ancient records we learn that revenue was collected at Hartlepool as early as the reign of Edward II.; but like Sunderland and Stockton, it was originally a member of the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. On the decline of its trade, the customs were removed, in the seventeenth century, to Stockton; but the opening of the harbour and docks introduced a gradual restoration of trade and privileges; and in 1844, Hartlepool was constituted a separate port of the sixth class. The customs port extends from the north side of Castle Eden dene, to the south side of the town of Seaton. The Custom House is situated at the west end of Southgate-street. The parties who are empowered to levy dues within the port, are the municipal corporation of Hartlepool, the Hartlepool Pier and Port commissioners, the Trinity House of Newcastle, the trustees of Bridlington Harbour, the Ramsgate Harbour trustees, the warden and assistants of Dover, and the Russia company. The present establishment at the Custom House consists of a collector, comptroller, two clerks, searcher, two tide-surveyors, and eight tide-waiters; John Mackenzie, collector. In connection with the customs may be mentioned the coast-guard—of whom Hartlepool has been a station since 1837. The establishment consists of a lieutenant, two chief boatmen, four commissioned and six non-commissioned boat-men. There are detachments at Black Halls on the north, and Greatham Creek and Seaton Carew on the south. The station is in Croft-street, near the pier.

COMMERCE.—It has been already stated that Hartlepool possessed ships at a very early period, and its import trade was anciently very extensive. The port appears to have possessed distinct privileges; for, by a statute of the 5th Elizabeth, this town, with Newcastle and Berwick, were permitted to ship sheep-skins, wools, &c., for foreign parts; a trade which that act prohibited to other ports. From the corporation records, we learn that the exportation of corn was afterwards an important branch of commerce at this place; and lead butter, salted fish, and other articles were also shipped; the principal import being coals. By the extension of the coal-trade, the other branches of commerce have become very prosperous; and it is anticipated that a direct import trade will be promoted through the medium of the Leeds Railway, which affords a communication between the West Docks and the manufacturing districts of the country. During the year 1854, consignments were made to Akyab, Bremen, Carlsham, Carlsrona, Dieppe, Elsinore, Hamburg, Jersey, Nantes, Porsground, Ribe, and Stettin. The following countries have consuls at Hartlepool, viz.: France, Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Norway, the Netherlands, Hanover, Mecklenburg, the Hanse Towns, Spain, Brazil, Sicily, Denmark, and Portugal.

SHIPPING, &c.—In 1832, Hartlepool possessed only two small vessels, which were generally employed in conveying flour to Sunderland, Shields, &c. In 1835, there were three sloops registered, and in 1839, these had increased to 90 vessels, averaging about 245 tons each, and representing a capital of £208,800. At the commencement of the year 1855, Hartlepool possessed 173 sailing vessels, whose aggregate tonnage was 35,993 tons. There were also three steam tugs. Here are three marine insurance offices; the Mutual Marine, the North Star, and the Mutual Marine Freight. Ship-building was commenced in Hartlepool in 1837; and a considerable number of workmen are now employed in that branch of industry. There were formerly twenty-four pilots in Hartlepool, twelve of whose branches extended to the Tees; but there are now fifty-six, besides five at Seaton Carew, and seven at Redcar, who are privileged for the old harbour of Hartlepool. The town possesses two life-boats, and the seamen of the port own a third. For many years, the staple production of Hartlepool was fish, many tons of which were salted for home consumption and for exportation. At present there are about twenty cobles employed in the "white fishing," the produce of which is estimated at about £3,500 per annum. The herring fishery lasts about nine weeks, and employs an average of 50 cobles and 150 men; the annual value of the produce is stated to be £3,375.

MARKETS, FAIRS, TRADE, &c.—The weekly market was appointed to take place on Tuesday, by Queen Elizabeth's charter; but by prescription it has long been held on Saturday; a custom confirmed by the charters of 1841 and 1851. A corn-market was established in September 1851; but lately it has not been so well supported. By the charter of 1841, confirmed by that of 1851, the mayor and burgesses were empowered to hold "one fair yearly, and every year for ever, beginning on the vigil of St. Lawrence, and from thence to continue fifteen days." Fairs have also been held on May 14th, August 21st, October 9th, and November 27th." The usual trades connected with sea-ports are carried on here; and there are two iron foundries and three chain-makers. Messrs. Backhouse & Co., of Darlington, opened a branch bank here in 1838, and in the following year, a branch of "The National Provincial Bank of England" was commenced: both of these establishments are still carried on. The Savings' Bank was founded in 1844; its business is transacted at the Town Hall.

THE GAS AND WATER WORKS.—In 1846, a company was formed, and obtained an act of parliament for supplying the town with water and gas, previous to which year the supply of water was most inadequate; the gas was furnished from private works, the property of Mr. J. A. West, and which were first established in 1836. This establishment was purchased by the gas and water company under the powers of the act of 1846. The capital is in 3,600 shares, at £2 10s. each. There are two gasometers, one capable of containing 11,000, and the other 26,000 cubic feet of gas: the total quantity consumed, inclusive of West Hartlepool, is about 11,000,000 cubic feet per annum. Water is supplied from a spring, the property of the West Hartlepool Dock Company, and which issues from a limestone quarry near Mill House. From this source the water is pumped by steam power into two reservoirs on the high land above the quarry, which are at sufficient elevation to command the entire district. The works are estimated to supply 275,000 gallons daily, but the yield of the spring in the driest seasons has always been upwards of 700,000 gallons daily. The capital of the company is in 5,800 shares of £5 each. By the act, the company have power to supply Middleton, Stranton, Hart, and Seaton-Carew with water.

THE PUBLIC BATHS, situated at the south-east end of the Town Moor, were opened to the public in 1850, and contain warm, vapour, shower, and plunge baths, a large waiting-room, and within the building spacious accommodation for lodgers. The edifice is in the Elizabethan style; it has a neat and well-proportioned porch, and mullioned windows, the roofs terminating with gables.

THE CEMETERY, formed in pursuance of a recommendation of the board of health, in 1853, is situated about half a mile north of the town, between the railway and the seabeach. It comprises an area of six acres, which is enclosed by a brick wall seven feet high, the front towards the railway being of ornamental brick work, finished in the centre with gate pillars and palisading. Chapels are in course of erection on each side of the entrance, with vestries, waiting-rooms, registrar's-house, and offices. The whole has been executed from designs and under the direction of John Dobson, Esq., architect, of Newcastle. The estimated cost is about £3,000.

CORPORATION, COURTS OF LAW, &c.—Hartlepool is the only royal borough in the county, and received its first charter from King John; the second was granted by Bishop Poor, in 1230. The king appears to have had the first appointment of bailiffs, which was afterwards held by the bishops; and, when the see was in tranquil possession of its rights, they appear to have possessed some authority, and were likewise the collectors of the customs. In the year 1503, "at the humble suit, request, and petition of Sir John Lumley, Lord Lumley," Queen Elizabeth was pleased to grant a charter of incorporation to the borough of Hartlepool, the principal clauses of which state, that the burgesses shall be and continue for ever, a body corporate and politic, and that they shall have a common seal; that the mayor shall be chosen out of the burgesses, and shall continue in office one year; that twelve of the best approved and most discreet burgesses shall be called capital burgesses and common council, who shall assist the mayor in dispensing justice and governing the borough; that there shall be a market on Tuesday in every week, and a yearly fair beginning on the vigil of St. Lawrence, to continue fifteen days; and that the mayor and burgesses shall have the like privileges, &c., as those enjoyed by the mayor and burgesses of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Mayors, &c., were elected under this charter till 1834, "when," says Procter, "the number of aldermen being reduced too low to perform any legal act, the election of the mayor, William Hazlewood, Esq., M.D., which had taken place at the preceeding Michaelmas, was questioned by a writ of quo warranto, in the Court of Queen's Bench, in Hilary term, in that year; and he being unable to substantiate his title thereto, disclaimed the office, whereon judgment of ouster was given by the court." "And now," continues the same writer, "commenced a period of disorganisation and mis-rule, unequalled in any town in the kingdom of similar pretensions—no resident magistrate—no control—no police—the township constables, incompetent and inefficient, and literally objects of ridicule. The whole town lay at the mercy of the lawless labourers employed in excavating the docks. The corporate property unowned and uncared for—the freemen's pastures appropriated by persons from the adjoining townships, for the use of their cattle—and the very soil, in many instances, taken and inclosed by the owners of the adjoining property." This state of things continued till January, 1839, when, at a public meeting of the freemen and other inhabitants, a committee was appointed, who consulted Sir William Follitt, on the state of the corporation. The opinion of this eminent lawyer was that the corporation was not actually extinct; but he advised them to apply for a new charter. His advice was followed, and a new charter obtained, in 1841. This charter remained in force till 1850, at which time one was obtained, in which the provisions of the Municipal Act were incorporated. By this charter it is declared "that the council of the said borough shall consist of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, to be respectively elected at such times and places, and in such and like manner, as the mayor, aldermen, and councillors for the boroughs named in the schedules to the said Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales, except that the first mayor, aldermen, and councillors, and the first auditors for the said borough shall be respectively elected at such times and in such manner as hereinafter mentioned." The town council, in addition to their ordinary duties, are a local board, for carrying out the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1848. A separate commission of the peace has also been granted to the borough, and petty sessions are regularly held on every Tuesday. The Town House, a stone building, situated in Southgate-street, was erected in 1750, on the site of a previous hall. The court-room is about fifty feet long by twenty-two broad, and fifteen feet high. There is a rural police station in Bond-street. The franchise of Hartlepool has been obtained by gift, composition, patrimony, or servitude. Besides the right of stint for a horse or cow on the Town Moor, the burgesses are exempt from the payment of tolls to the mayor. The corporation possess two ancient brass seals, on one of which St. Hilda is represented on the reverse standing under a canopy, surmounted by a church; and on each side, under a small canopy, a priest is celebrating mass. A crescent is on one side of St. Hilda, and a star on the other, with a bird descending on each side. The legend is, "SUBVENIAT FAMVLIS NOBILIS HILDA SVIS. On the obverse is a hart at bay in a pool of water, and the inscription "SIGILLVM COMMVNITATIS DE HERTLEPOOL." The other seal is smaller, and represents St. Hilda, supported by two bishops, standing on a prostrate hart; the legend, "SIGILLVM OFFICII MAJORIS DE HERTLEPOOL." Courts Leet and Baron were held twice a year by the recorder, who was steward of the borough, or by his deputy. The grand jury presented all offences contrary to good order and the statutes of the corporation; and the court leet took cognizance of debts under the amount of 40s. Since the borough has been governed under the provisions of the Municipal Reform Act, the office of recorder has been discontinued. The County Court, for the recovery of debts under £50, is held monthly. Judge, Henry Stapylton, Esq.; clerk, Edwin Marshall; assistant clerk, Mark Child; high bailiff, George Taylor; under bailiff, Richard Merryweather. For a list of the members of the corporation of Hartlepool, and the corporate officers, magistrates, &c., see the end of the volume.

CHARITIES.—Besides Crook's School, and Prissick's Schools, for which see pages 502-3. Hartlepool possesses the following benefactions for the poor, viz.:—Sir William Blackett, by will, march 9th, 1680, bequeathed, amongst other charities, the yearly sum of £2 to the poor of Hartlepool, to be paid on the 1st of December annually. This sum has been improperly carried to the overseer's account. Henry Smith, alderman, of London, in 1626-7, bequeathed all his property to trustees for the purchase of estates of the annual value of 100 marks for every £1,000 laid out in the several towns of England; the rents to be appropriated, under certain conditions, to the poor. It was probably through the influence of Richard Viscount Lumley, that Hartlepool was selected for this charity; and lands, &c. were purchased, producing £30 per annum. This £80 has now increased to about £300 per annum, and is applied in the apprenticing of poor children, or in providing clothes for such children, or partly in payment of premiums, and partly in providing clothes. Several changes are about to be made in the management, &c. of this charity. Henry Hilton, Esq., in 1640-1, left £24 per annum for the poor; but this charity ceased in 1739.

EMINENT MEN.—The Rev. William Romaine, author of "The Divine Legation of Moses," "The Triumph of Faith," &c. was born at Hartlepool, on the 25th September, 1714, and educated at Haughton-le-Spring. He was afterwards sent to Oxford, where he was first entered at Hertford College, and thence removed to Christ Church. He became a frequent preacher before the University, and was noted for his zeal in behalf of what was deemed the orthodox doctrines. He afterwards became lecturer of the united parishes of St. George's, Botolph Lane, and St. Botolph's, Billingsgate. In 1749, he became lecturer of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, where he continued to preach to crowded congregations almost to the time of his death. He was for some time morning preacher at St. George's, Hanover Square, and professor of astronomy at Gresham College. He died on the 26th July, 1795.

Sir Cuthbert Sharp, a distinguished local antiquary, and the author of a history of Hartlepool, and several other works, was for many years a resident of this town. He served the office of mayor in 1816, during which he received the honour of knighthood. He died at Newcastle, in 1849.

SEATON CAREW CHAPELRY.

This chapelry, which comprises the entire township of Seaton Carew, was formed by an order in council, October 21st, 1841, and licensed by the Bishop of Durham under the act of 6 and 7 William IV. It is bounded on the north by the townships of Brearton and Stranton, on the west by the parish of Great-ham, on the south by the river Tees, and on the east by the German Ocean.

SEATON CAREW township comprises an area of 4,885 acres, and its annual value is £4,804 10s. Its population in 1801 was 263; in 1811 it was returned with the mother parish of Stranton; in 1821, it was 312; in 1831, 333; in 1841, 588; and in 1851, 728 souls. The Stockton and Hartlepool railway extends into this township, and has a station about half a mile from the village. Styr, son of Ulphus, gave lands in Seaton to the see of Durham, in the time of Bishop Alduue; and in 1180, Peter Carrow is said, in the king's charter to Bishop Pudsey, to hold his lordship in Seaton of the crown, by the service of one knight's fee; which service he and his heirs are awarded from henceforth to render to the see of Durham, as other the bishop's tenants between the Tyne and Tees. The Carrows were long possessors of this manor; and from them it passed to the Lumleys, Hotons, Nevilles, Reeds, Andersons, Johnsons, and others; it is now the property of Lord Eldon, Robert W. Dixon, Esq., and William Thompson, Esq., each of whom claims the manorial rights of his own property.

The Village of Seaton Carew is situated on the sea-shore, three miles south of Hartlepool, and has long been held in high estimation as a fashionable bathing place, for which it is well adapted. The oldest part of the village consists of three sides of a square, inclosing a green, the fourth side being open to the sea. Here are several good and well-furnished lodging houses, and the usual adjuncts of bath houses, bathing machines, &c. A salmon fishery is carried on at this place; and there is a detachment of the Hartlepool coast guard stationed here.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was consecrated in September 1831, and consists of western tower, nave, and chancel; the latter was added in 1842. The total cost of erection amounted to nearly £1,700. The windows of the chancel are of stained glass; the eastern one being the gift of the present incumbent. In the parliamentary returns of 1835, the living was stated to be worth £60 per annum; the gross income is now about £150. The tithes, which belong to the vicar of Stranton, are commuted for £100 a year. Patroness—Mrs. Lawson; incumbent—the Rev. John Lawson.

There is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel here, erected in 1830; and the Society of Friends have also a Meeting House.

The National Schools are under government inspection, and are attended by about ninety children. Lancelot Reed and Dorothy Glendinning, teachers.

Outon is an ancient manor, situated to the south-west of Seaton, and was formerly held by the Lamberts, who forfeited it in 1569; it is now the property of Ralph Watson, Esq., of Middleton House, West Hartlepool.

SEDFIELD PARISH.

This parish comprises the townships of Bradbury, Butterwick, Embleton, Fishburn, Foxton and Shotton, Mordon, and Sedgfield. It forms the north-western extremity of Stockton Ward, as at present constituted; and is bounded on the north by Trimdon and Kelloe, on the north-west and west by Bishop Middleham, in Durham Ward, and Aycliffe, in Darlington Ward, on the south by Stainton-le-Street and Redmarshall, on the south-east by Grindon, and on the east by Elwick Hall.

BRADBURY AND THE ISLE form a township, whose area is 2,043 acres, and annual value £2,731. The population in 1801 was 106; in 1811, 125; in 1821, 132; in 1831, 147; in 1841, 167; and in 1851, 171 souls. The York, Newcastle, and Berwick, and the Clarence Railways extend into the township. The manor of Bradbury, with Mordon, Socceburg, and Grisebi, were given to St. Cuthbert by Snaculf, the son of Cykell. In 1343, Bradbury and the Isle were part of the estate of William de la Pole, who held of the bishop by suite of court and half of a knight's fee. From the De la Poles, they passed to the Thorntons, and afterwards, by marriage, to the umleys; but before 1560, they had become the property of the Nevilles, and were included in the forfeiture of the Earl of Westmoreland. Bradbury was granted to Sir George Bowes for a term of years, on the expiration of which, James I., in October 1606, demised the manor of Bradbury with that of Hilton to Thomas Emmerson, Esq., for 1,000 years, under the yearly rent of £550. From the Emmersons, it passed to the Mannings, and afterwards to the Farrers. In 1719, a moiety of the manor was purchased by Benjamin Ord, of Sedgfield; and the other moiety was afterwards sold by Farrer Wren, Esq., to Richard Wright, Esq., of the same place, who devised it to his grand-nephew, Richard Ord, Esq., Sands. The first-named moiety, with property belonging to the Smiths and Addisons, were united by the late Richard Wright, Esq., and are now possessed by Mark Ord, Esq. The Isle situated south of Bradbury, is almost insulated by the Skerne, and appears to have been possessed by a family bearing the local name at a very early period. It was granted, with Bradbury, to Sir George Bowes; and was sold by his son, Sir William, to Sir Cuthbert Buckle, from whose son it was purchased by Sir Thomas Pempest, Knt. It continued to be held by his posterity till it was sold by the Marchioness of Londonderry to Lord Chancellor Eldon, whose trustees are the present proprietors.

The Village of Bradbury is situated on the Skerne, two-and-a-half miles west of Sedgfield; and formerly possessed a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Nicholas.

BUTTERWICK township, which includes the manor of Old Acres, is principally the property of Gerard Salvin, Esq., and contains 1,495 acres. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 60; in 1811, 49; in 1821, 54; in 1831, 48; in 1841, 51; and in 1851, 64. The annual value is £710. From Boldon Book, we learn that Utrudus de Butterwick paid half a mark; and the vill paid 92s. for cornage; and various rents and services were rendered by the villans. In Hatfield's survey, the rent is set down at £6 13s. 4d., which was also paid by John de Heton during the episcopate of Bishop Bury. The manor was afterwards transferred by marriage to the Bellassis family, and was subsequently held by the Baynbriggs, from whom it passed, in 1581, to the family of the present possessor. Old Acres is mentioned in Boldon Book as paying 16s. rent, which in Hatfield's time was reduced to 8s. 11d. It afterwards became successively the property of the Booths, Swinburnes, Boweses, Butlers, and Spearmans.

The Hamlet of Butterwick, which contains three farm houses, and a beer house, is about two miles east-by-north from Sedgfield.

Directory.—Anthony Fawell, beer-house keeper; and the farmers are John Forster, Robert Shepherd, John Trenholm, and Robert Trenholm.

EMBLETON township comprises an area of 3,356 acres, and its rateable value is £1,142. It contained, in 1801, 98 inhabitants; in 1811, 105; in 1821, 100; in 1831, 105; in 1841, 98; and in 1851, 117. The principal land-owners are the Marchioness of Londonderry, John Skinner, Esq., Messrs. Griffiths, John Brown, Esq., George Willis, Esq., and Robert R. Sisson, Esq., each of whom claims the manorial right of his own property. This place anciently gave name to the family of Elmedon, who were its possessors till the reign of Elizabeth, when it was transferred by marriage to the Bulmers. It was afterwards held by the families of Esh, Hickson, Surtees, Wrightson and Willis.

The Hamlet of Embleton is situated four miles east-by-south of Sedgely and contains a chapel of ease, in which the curates of the mother church officiate on Sundays. It was anciently called Elmdene, a name supposed to be derived from an elm wood, which formerly flourished in the neighbouring dale.

Swainston is a hamlet in this township, about three miles south of Sedgely; and in its neighbourhood is a brick and tile works, carried on by the Marchioness of Londonderry. The estate, which comprises the farms of High Middle, and Low Swainston, was the property of the Nevilles from the year 1370, till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by whom they were granted, on the attainder of the Earl of Westmoreland, to Thomas Calverley and Henry Anderson. It afterwards passed to the Tempest family, and is now the property of the Marchioness of Londonderry.

West Murton hamlet was formerly held by the Claxtons, from whom it was purchased, in 1649, by Thomas Todd, merchant, of Newcastle. It was afterwards possessed by the Stotes and Neshams, and is now the property of the Messrs. Griffiths.

East Murton belonged to the Elmedens and Bulmers, and, more recently, to the Maires of Lartington.

FISHBURN township is principally the property of General Beckwith, General Salvin, Esq., Robert H. Naylor, Esq., John Giles, Esq., the trustees of the late Dr. Hartwell, and Henry Smales, Esq., each of whom claims the manorial rights, &c., of his own property. Its area is 2,082 acres, and the annual value £1,325 4s. The population in 1801 was 154; in 1811, 171; in 1821, 192; in 1831, 212; in 1841, 239; and in 1851, 261 souls. Here is a brick and tile works, established in 1851, by Messrs. George Snowdon & Co., the present proprietors. Fishburn was anciently possessed by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed to the Claxtons, and afterwards by marriage to the Elmedens, Conyers, and Widdringtons. It is now the property of the gentlemen above-mentioned.

The Village of Fishburn is situated on the side of a hill, about two miles north of Sedgely. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, a small stone-building, erected in 1846.

Fishburn School, rebuilt by public subscription in 1851, is endowed with £5 9s. 6d. per annum, left by the late Miss Chilton, of Fishburn, for which three poor children are educated free; and the Rev. Thomas L. Strong pays half the school fee for fifteen poor children of the township. There is also a house, and about an acre of land for the teacher.

Fishburn Hall, the residence of Robert Hall Naylor, Esq., is a substantial stone-mansion, the property of R. H. Naylor Esq., and John Giles, Esq.

Charities.—Henry Airey, in 1680, gave £7 10s., the interest thereof to be given annually to the poor of Fishburn. This money is in the hands of the representatives of the Chilton family, by whom 7s. 6d. is distributed yearly as the interest. William Mason, in 1696, charged his lands in Fishburn with £1 4s. a year for the poor of the township, and 6d. each at Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost, to every poor widow. The sum of £1 4s. (all that has been paid for many years) is contributed in equal portions by John Chilton, John Richardson, and a tenant of General Beckwith, and is given by the overseers, on February 14th, to about ten poor persons. The sum of £20, given by John Woodifield, in 1744, to the poor of this township, has long been lost.

FOXTON and SHOTTON form a township, comprising an area of 1,787 acres, and the annual value is £697 6s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 53; in 1811, 62; in 1821, 63; in 1831, 73; in 1841, 44; and in 1851, 58. The manor of Foxton was formerly the property of the military order of Knights Templars, on whose suppression, it was transferred to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and was held under them by the families of Seton, Carrow, Sayer, De la Pole, Fulthorp, and Elstob. Shotton appears to have belonged generally to the same proprietors as Foxton. A part of it, held by the Hebbornes in the 16th century, was granted by the crown to Sir William Bowes, who sold it to George Freville, of Hardwick. It was afterwards held by the Salvins, and is now the property of the Hon. G. F. Hamilton, who is also the possessor of the manorial rights and privileges.

The Hamlet of Foxton is about three miles south of Sedgefield.

Directory.—The farmers are John Applegarth, Shotton; William Bayston, Foxton; James Jackson, Foxton; Ralph Peacock, Foxton; William Robinson, Shotton; and John Thompson, Foxton.

MORDON township contains 1,537 acres, and the principal landowners are Thomas Robinson, Esq., John Grey, Esq., the Hon. G. F. H. Russell, Mark Ord, Esq., and the trustees of the late Lord Eldon. The annual value is £1,801. The population in 1801 was 101; in 1811, 127; in 1821, 124; in 1831, 174; in 1841, 161; and in 1851, 163 souls. The North-Eastern and Clarence Railways extend into this township. Mordon was included in the gift of Snaculf to St. Cuthbert; and appears to have been held for some time by a family bearing the local name. Lands were subsequently held here by the Shottons, Kellaws, and Harpyns, from the latter of whom it passed by marriage to the Lumleys, and afterwards to the Trollops of Thornley. The Martins, Harrisons, Reeds, Hixons, Conyers, Hodgsons, and Wards, also occur as proprietors.

The Village of Mordon is about two miles south-west of Sedgefield. Mordon Carrs, an extensive level, through which the Skerne and its tributaries flow, is much frequented by flocks of wild geese, ducks, &c.

TOWN AND TOWNSHIP OF SEDGEFIELD.

SEDGEFIELD township comprises an area of 5,171 acres, and the annual value of property assessed to the county-rate, in 1853 was £6,055 10s. The population in 1801 was 1,184; in 1811, 1,307; in 1821, 1,268; in 1831, 1,429; in 1841, 1,345; and in 1851, 1,362 souls. Cutheard, who was bishop of Chester-le-Street from the year 900 to 915, redeemed, with the money of his church, the vill of Sedgefield, and its members, which had been held by Aculf, Ethelbryth, and Frythlake. From Boldon Book we learn that there were twenty villains in this manor, who held their lands on similar services to those of Boldon. There were also twenty farmers, each of whom held two ox-gangs of land, for which they paid 5s., and rendered certain services. Several free tenants are also named in the record; the bond tenants appear to have been in a state of great servility, for, exclusive of the various payments in scot, or exchequer oats, and money, &c. they wrought three days in each week for the lord, except at Easter, Whitsuntide, and twelve days at Christmas. Bishop Kellaw, in 1312, granted a weekly market, to be held on Friday, with a yearly fair for five days, commencing on the Eve of St. Edmund the Bishop. John de Whitechurch, rector, made complaint to Bishop Bury, that the Friday market was neglected, and that the chapmen and others exposed their merchandise and transacted their business in the church porch on Sundays; on which the bishop issued a confirmation of Kellaw's grant. At the time of Hatfield's survey, Roger de Fulthorp and John Herdwyck held the manor of Herdwyck; and John Henley, rector, Thomas del Hall, Thomas Gray, and the owners of Butterwick and Oldakres, are mentioned as free tenants. Malmen are named, whose services were the same as those of the farmers in Boldon Book; and the villains were required to perform certain specified services. On the breaking out of the northern rebellion in 1569, nineteen persons joined it from Sedgefield, seven from Fishburn, four from Shotton, and one from Mordon; and after the suppression of the insurrection, five executions took place at Sedgefield, two at Fishburn, one at Foxton, and at Mordon. In July, 1636, the waste and common lands were divided and allotted to the neighbouring proprietors. A large portion of the lands in the township is still held by lease, or by copy of court roll under the see of Durham.

THE TOWN of Sedgefield is situated on the turnpike road between Durham and Stockton, and is 11 miles from the former and 10 from the latter place. It is distant, by road, 14 miles from Hartlepool, 24 from Sunderland, 25 from Gateshead, 14 from Darlington, and 248 from London. The town occupies an elevated position, on dry gravelly soil, and is consequently airy, pleasant, and salubrious. In the centre is a large area on which a market was held formerly every Friday, and cattle fairs on the first Fridays in April and October. The markets, however, are now almost obsolete; the wants of the town being met by casual supplies from the immediate vicinity. A fair for the sale of swine is held on the first Friday of every month. The east side of this area is occupied by the church, rectory, and the endowed school; and on the north-west and south sides, there are several good houses. There is a large brewing and malting establishment here; and the various branches of trade, customary in an agricultural district are carried on. Haxley water corn-mill is about a mile from the town; and a railway station on the Clarence Line is distant about one-and-a-half miles. The ancient custom of tolling the curfew is still observed in this parish. In the summer months it is rung at nine in the evening, and in winter at eight; and after a pause the day of the month is indicated by a corresponding number of strokes on the bell. According to another old custom, the parish clerk is obliged to furnish a foot-ball on Shrove Tuesday, which he throws into the Market Place, where it is contested for by the mechanics against the agriculturalists of the town and neighbourhood.

THE CHURCH, dedicated to St. Edmund the Bishop, is a handsome cruciform structure, combining the earlier and later styles of Gothic architecture; the windows are principally in the decorated style. The western tower is sixty feet in height, embattled, and supported by corner buttresses, from the tops of which spring lofty hexagonal turrets, surmounted by short conical spires. It contains five bells, and has a good clock on its western front. The transepts do not appear to have been part of the original building, but added thereto at separate times, the one on the foundation of St. Catharine's Chantry, and the other of St. Thomas'; or for a guild which was instituted here. The entrance to the church is by a plain porch on the south; and the nave is separated from the aisles by rows of pillars supporting pointed arches. Each aisle is lighted by two arched windows; and there are three clerestory windows on each side of the nave. The south transept, formerly St. Thomas' chantry, has a large window on the south and two on the sides; the north transept is lighted in a similar manner, and was long the burial-place of the Hotons and Frevilles. It is now fitted up with a gallery, the space under which serves as a vestry. The chancel is separated from the nave by a rich screen of tabernacle work, in old oak, containing some canopied seats, divided by light pillars. This part of the church appears to be of the same date as the north transept: it is lighted by an eastern window of five compartments, on which several coats of arms are emblazoned, and three other windows on each side. The chancel is panelled in oak, about eight feet high, and stilled with seven seats on each side, which appear to date from the reign of Elizabeth. The font is an octagonal basin of black marble, sculptured with the arms of several of the old families of the neighbourhood. A good organ, the gift of Dr. Pickering, and bearing the date 1708, is situated under the belfry; and monuments to various persons, are placed in different parts of the church. There was, until recently, in the pavement of the north aisle, a large stone, with two inlaid figures of brass, representing skeletons in shrouds. Considerable repairs and alterations were effected in 1848 and 1849; at which period, the roof of the chancel, which had previously been ceiled, was renewed, and is now of high pitch and open. The expense amounted to between £200 and £300. The floor of the church is paved with diamond shaped tiles, and covered with wood beneath the seats; the pews are all open, and furnish accommodation for 600 persons. St. Catharine's chantry in the north transept was founded, in 1379, by John de Henlee, rector of Sedgfield, and treasurer of Bishop Hatfield's household. He had two chaplains to celebrate mass at the altar of St. Catharine. In 1392, Bishop Skirlaw granted license to "John de Henlee, clerk, William de Langchester, and others, to grant to John de Bishopton, guardian of St. Catharine's chantry, and his successors, a garden, thirty acres of arable, and three of meadow land in Butterwick, and the same quantity in Old Acres, and five marks rent out to Hoton; and lastly, in 1435, under a license from Cardinal Langley, William Hoton, of Herdwyck, settled six messuages, two cottages, and 170 acres in Sedgfield, on Thomas Hoton, chaplain of St. Catharine's chantry, and his successors for ever." At the dissolution, the chantry was valued at £11 8s. 6d. per annum. The chantry of St. Thomas was in the south porch; its foundation is unknown; but at the suppression of the monastic institutions, &c., it was valued at £5 6s. a year. The chantry or guild of St. Mary, is mentioned in the records; and Robert Kerr, chaplain of St. Catharine's, bequeathed £1 to it. Bishop Fox, in 1500, granted an indulgence to those who should contribute towards the repair of its chapel and altar. The parish register commences in 1580. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Stockton, valued in the Liber Regis at £73 18s.; gross income, £1,933. The tithes were commuted a few years ago for about £1,500. The glebe is extensive, lying in the townships of Sedgfield, Bradbury, Embleton, and Fishburn. Patron, the Bishop of Durham; rector, Rev. Thomas L. Strong, M.A.

THE RECTORY HOUSE, situated to the south of the church, is enclosed from the town, and was erected, on the site of the old rectory, in 1792.

Besides the parish church, Sedgfield contains a Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Joseph, of which the Rev. William Markland is priest; and a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel.

THE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, situated near the church, is a substantial structure, faced with freestone, erected on the site of a previous building, in 1826, the cost being defrayed by subscription. It is endowed with a close, containing five acres, on Beacon Hill, in the township of Sedgfield, but the name of the donor is unknown. The property is let by the schoolmaster at £9 a year. In respect of £52, old school-money, laid out in the purchase of Howl Hope estate, (See Charities), the master receives £5 a year from its rents. In consideration of these sums, he instructs six poor children of the township, who, as well as the master himself are appointed by the surveyors. The trustees of Wright's Charity, (which see), also pay £9 18s. to the school, for which they appoint six boys. From forty to fifty other children attend, who pay for their instruction. Richard Lockey, master.

In addition to the Grammar School, just noticed, there is the National School, conducted by Mr. William Jackson; and two other schools, which are well attended.

THE SEDGFIELD MECHANICS' INSTITUTE was founded in December, 1849; and comprises a reading room, supplied with the various newspapers, periodicals, &c., and a library of nearly 700 volumes. Lectures are occasionally delivered, and soirees held, which are generally well attended. The number of members at present is about seventy. W. H. Jackson, librarian.

GAS AND WATER SUPPLY.—The town is supplied with water from springs and a public pump. For the lighting of the town a gas company has been projected, the capital of which, £1,000, is to be in shares of £5 each.

THE SEDGEFIELD POOR LAW UNION comprises an area of 43,953, statute acres, and its population in 1851 was 8,501. It includes the parishes of Bishop Middleham, Stainton-le-Street, and Bishopton, the chapelries of Ferry Hill and Trimdon; the townships of Preston-le-Skerne and Woodham, in the parish of Aycliffe; and the township of Stillington, in the parish of Redmarshall. The receipts during the year ending Lady-day 1855, amounted to £3,020 12s., and the expenditure was £3,030 14s. The Union Workhouse is the same building as that used for the parish previous to the passing of the Poor Law Act, and for which a rent of £5 per annum is paid to the churchwardens. It is purposed to erect the County Lunatic Asylum, on land situated to the north east of Sedgefield, between Fishburn and the Durham road. The cost, including the ground, is estimated at about £50,000.

COOPER'S ALMS HOUSES.—Thomas Cooper, surgeon, of Sedgefield, by will, March 6th, 1702, demised to George Cuthbertson and John Mowbray, and their heirs, all his messuages and lands in the chapelry of Hamsterley, and at Hyndon, in the parish of Cockfield, in trust, to pay from the rents and profits, to each of five poor men and five poor women (being of the age of fifty years at least, and living and remaining in the township of Sedgefield) the sum of £2 half-yearly, by equal portions; the said poor men and women to be nominated, after the decease of his wife, by the rector and twenty-four of the parish, who were also to provide each of the recipients with a coat of the value of 8s., of a blue colour, with the letters T. C. upon the arms in yellow. The testator also directed that, if he himself should not erect a suitable alms house in his lifetime, the sum of £100 should be given to the trustees for that purpose; that the cost of repairs should be deducted equally out of the several annuities given to the said poor people; and that they should not admit any person whatsoever to dwell with them, unless in case of sickness. He further directed, that if the requisite number of poor people could not, at any time, be found in Sedgefield, the deficiency should be made up from the township of Cornforth, in the parish of Bishop Middleham. In 1803, William Wrightson gave £5 yearly out of a field near Beacon, to be divided equally amongst the ten alms people; and in 1814, Thomas Forster, Esq., by will, directed that £2,400 should be invested in the names of trustees, who were to apply so much of the dividends as they might think necessary in the purchase of suitable clothes for the inmates of Cooper's alms houses, and divide the remainder equally amongst them. With this legacy, £3,435 7s. 9d., Three-per-cent Consols were purchased; the half-yearly dividend from which, £51 10s. 7d., is distributed equally by the rector and churchwardens amongst the alms people. The owner of the Hamsterley estate pays £44 yearly; each of the alms people receive 40s. half-yearly, and 8s. in lieu of a cloak. The alms houses, a range of low brick buildings, with the founder's arms in the centre, are situated to the north of the church.

CHARITIES.—In addition to the endowment of the Grammar School and Cooper's alms houses, Sedgefield possesses the following benefactions for the poor of the parish, viz.:—

Wright's Charity.—Richard Wright bequeathed, July 23rd, 1790, £300 to trustees, to be invested in the purchase of Three-per-cent Consols, and the dividends applied in educating and clothing six poor boys between the ages of six and fourteen. The whole of the dividends, £12, had been paid for educating the boys up to the time of the Charity Commissioners' Inquiry, in 1829; when they recommended that the surplus, after paying the usual sum, of £5 each per annum, should be applied in clothing as far as it would go.

Lowther's Charity.—John Lowther, by will, October 19th, 1792, directed that £600 stock should be transferred to trustees, and the dividends applied in the education and clothing of such poor children as he or the trustees should appoint. Up to July, 1828, £4 16s. a year was paid to a schoolmistress for teaching eight girls, each of whom received clothes to the value of £1 5s. annually; but a surplus of £25 being at that time in hand, it was resolved that six additional children should be appointed, until that surplus should be exhausted.

Bainbridge's Charity.—In respect of £50, less ten per cent legacy duty bequeathed by John Drake Bainbridge, October 16th, 1811, for the same purpose as the last-named charity, Lord Barrington for many years paid £2 10s. interest, which was, in ignorance of the testator's intention, given away with other charity money. It is now given to the girls' school above-named.

Forster's Charity.—Besides his gift to the alms people, Thomas Forster left £600, which he directed should be invested, and its proceeds to be applied in the purchase of bread, to be distributed every Sunday amongst twenty poor persons of the township not receiving parochial relief. This legacy was laid out in the purchase of £858 16s. 11d. Three-per-cent Consols, the half-yearly dividend from which is £12 17s. 8d. Twenty-six penny loaves were, until recently, given away every Sunday to the same number of poor persons; the small deficiency in the half-year's money being made up from Harrison's Charity, hereafter mentioned; but the loaves are now reduced in size to make the sum allowed.

Lady Freville's Charity.—This charity, a portion of which belongs to the parish of Bishop Middleham, will be found noticed at page 224.

Harrison's and Wren's Charities.—In 1663, Bryan Harrison gave £100, the interest of which was to be distributed to the poor of the town of Sedgfield, every Sunday. With £80 of this money, a house near East Well, and a piece of ground, called White Bread Field, were purchased. In 1759, £300 given to the poor of the parish by Rebecca Wren, was laid out in building and repairing the premises, which, with a piece of ground, were let to the overseers at £5 a year, and are now used as the Union Workhouse. The field was improved by draining in 1820, and the rent was consequently advanced from £6 10s. to £13 a year. The above sums are laid out in bread, which is distributed weekly, beginning soon after Christmas, and continuing as long as the money lasts.

Howle Pope Estate.—The Howle or Holloway's Hope copyhold estate, held of the manor of Bishop Middleham, contains about twenty-eight acres. The first moiety of it was purchased in 1705 for £102 2s. 6d.; and the remainder, about 1734, for £140. The following benefactions appear to have been applied toward these sums:—1663—From the gift of Bryan Harrison, being the balance after the purchase mentioned above, £20. 1680—Henry Airey, the interest to be given to the poor of the town of Sedgfield, on February 17th, yearly, £10. 1684—Robert Johnson, the interest to be given to the poor of Sedgfield on St. Thomas' Day, yearly, £20. 1685—John Gibson, the interest to be given to the poor of the town yearly, £3. 1686—Thomas Barker, the interest to be given to the poor of the parish on Candlemas Day, £10. 1739—Alice Vane, the interest to be given to the poor of the township of Sedgfield, £5. Amount of school-stock, whereof £20 was given by Mrs. Freville, £52. Bequest of Madam Mary Freville to the poor, £20. Howle Hope, with a cottage and barn erected upon it, is let by auction, and produces about £40 a year. Out of this rent, £5 is paid to the schoolmaster on account of the school-stock included in the purchase, 13s. 3d. yearly for land tax, &c. To the balance is added the produce of Bainbridge's and Jane Mason's Charities, any surplus of Lady Freville's Charity that may remain on St. Thomas' Day, money collected at the sacrament, and a voluntary donation by the rector; and the whole is distributed on the 14th February, yearly, amongst the poor of the parish.

Jane Mason's Charity.—Jane Mason, in 1662, gave 20s. yearly to the poor of the parish, charged on a close called Shotton Newkes, by the proprietor of which it continued to be paid till about three years ago, when the estate fell into the hands of trustees, and the payment was discontinued.

Lamb's Charity.—John Lamb, of Manchester, by will, November 26th, 1808, directed that on the death of Martha Furness, all his personal estates, with the exception of £100, should be settled for the support of five poor, aged, impotent men of the parish. This sum amounted to £484 7s. 3d., which it was intended to lay out in land. On the death of Martha Furness, however, the money was invested in government stock; and the interest is given as directed.

Soulsby's Charity.—William Soulsby, Esq., merchant, of London, bequeathed to the churchwardens and trustees for the time being of the old grammar school, Sedgefield, the sum of £300, clear of legacy duty, to be invested in government stock; the interest arising therefrom to be paid to the master for the time being of the said school for ever, for the education of two additional poor children (such children not to be under seven nor above ten years of age), to be instructed in the Latin classics until they attain the age of fourteen; the said children to be appointed by the vestry. Mr. Soulsby died April 10th, 1832; and the £300 was invested in April, 1853, in government stock amounting to £340 18s. 2d. The charity is administered in accordance with the intentions of the donor.

HARDWICK manor adjoins Sedgefield on the west, and the hall is distant about half a mile from the town. It was anciently held by a family bearing the local name, from whom it passed by marriage, in the fourteenth century, to the Hotons, and afterwards in a similar manner to the Hebburnes; one of whom, Anthony Hebburn, being implicated in the northern rebellion, his lands here were granted, by Queen Elizabeth, to George Freville, a Staffordshire gentleman, who received the honour of knighthood from James I. at York, in 1603. It subsequently became the property of the Lambtons and Burdons, and is now held by Viscount Boyne, of Brancepeth. Hardwick Hall is a spacious structure, situated in the midst of beautiful and extensive pleasure grounds, which were formed during the proprietorship of John Burdon, Esq. Immediately in front is a fine sheet of water, covering thirty-six acres, surrounded by grassy slopes and plantations. At the west end of this lake is the Bath, a neat edifice of the Doric order, in the vestibule of which there is a bust of Diana. On the shore of a smaller lake there is a hermitage, which contains busts of Cicero, Aurelius, Bacon, Locke, Newton, and Boyle. A circular eminence, on the south side of the lake, is crowned by an elegant Grecian temple, of a square form, surrounded by a colonnade of six pillars on each side, and surmounted by an octagonal dome. Busts of Homer, Virgil, Horace, Shakspeare, Ben Johnson, Milton, and Pope, are placed in niches round the walls. In the interior of the temple are busts of Minerva, Socrates, Plato, Demosthenes, Julius Cæsar, Titus, Marcus, Brutus, and Antoninus Pius. There are medallions of the four seasons in the recesses between the windows; and the floor is inlaid with marble mosaic. In triangular divisions at the four corners of the room, is the following inscription:—"THIS TEMPLE BEGUN BY JOHN BURDON, ESQ., IN THE YEAR 1754, AND FINISHED IN 1757." The inside of the dome is ornamented with paintings, representing Music, Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, the four cardinal virtues, and Minerva surrounded by genii and warlike emblems. On leaving the temple, the path leads over a picturesque bridge, erected across a serpentine river, in the midst of which, standing on a pedestal, is a figure of Neptune, in the act of throwing his trident. The road from the bridge leads to an artificial ruin, which consists of a central apartment, above a pointed arch, and surmounted at one corner by a circular turret. Several curious fragments of sculpture from Guisborough Priory are built up in the walls. The Banqueting House stands near the east end of the large lake, and is a superb structure of the Corinthian order. The principal apartment is fifty feet in length by twenty-five-and-a-half in breadth, and the same in height; it is splendidly fitted up and adorned with gilding; the mantelpiece is formed by well-contrasted specimens of beautifully coloured marbles. Busts of Flora, Sappho, Faustina, and Cornelia, occupy brackets on one side of the room; and those of Virgil, Vitruvius, Palladio, and Inigo Jones, are opposite. In an oval in the centre of the ceiling is a painting of the Feast of the Gods, by Hayman; to the right, in a square, Thetis supplicating Jupiter for her son; and to the left, Venus delivering the cestus to Juno, both by Wall. Over the fireplace is a fine full-length portrait of Mr. Burdon. The designs for the several buildings were furnished by Payne, and executed by Mr. Bell, of Durham.

EAST AND WEST LAYTON form a manor about two miles from Sedgefield: and was part of the possessions of the Mundevilles, who held it of the Brackenburys, by rendering a barbed arrow at entrance, or 40d. It afterwards passed by marriage to the Laytons, and subsequently to the Conyers family, who held it till 1748, when it became the property of the Maires, of Lartington, and the Bakers, of Elemore. It is now possessed by Viscount Boyle.

STANTON-LE-STREET PARISH.

The parish of Stanton-le-Street comprises the townships of Elstob and Great Stanton. It is bounded on the north by Sedgefield, on the west by Aycliffe, on the south by Haughton-le-Skerne and Bishopton, and on the east by Bishopton and Redmarshall.

ELSTOB township is principally the property of the trustees of the late Earl of Eldon, who also claim the manorial rights and privileges. It comprises an area of 733 acres, and its annual value is £476. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 37; in 1811, 29; in 1821, 28; in 1831, during the construction of the Clarence Railway, 94; in 1841, that undertaking having been completed, 27; and in 1851, 38. The Clarence Railway extends into this township. The Greys, of Northumberland, were anciently the possessors of Elstob, which was forfeited to the Bishop of Durham on the execution of Sir Thomas Grey, at Southampton, in 1417. The estate was afterwards held by the families of Spenceo, Wren, Scurfield, Spearman, and Tempest, from the latter of whom it has come to the present proprietors. Elstob is situated to the north of Stainton, about seven miles north-east of Darlington.

Directory.—The farmers are John Brown, Hill; Matthew Golightly; Wm. Moor, Hall; John Scott, West Cottage; and John Suthren.

GREAT STAINTON township contains 1,214 acres, and its annual value is £972 3s. The population in 1801 was 104; in 1811, 107; in 1821, 128; in 1831, 154; in 1841, 105; and in 1851, 117 souls. Lands were formerly held here of the Baliols by the De la Haye family, on payment of 1d. rent at Easter, and suit of court once in three weeks at Gainford. The property in this township was afterwards much divided; and we find the Lambtons recorded as proprietors; the present landowners are the trustees of the late Earl of Eldon, Captain Pennyman, and others, who claim the manorial rights and privileges.

The Village of Great Stainton, or Stainton-le-Street, the latter name being derived from its position on the old Roman road from Pountey's Bridge to Old Durham, is pleasantly situated in a fine country, sloping to the south about five miles south-by-west of Sedgefield. There are several traces of foundations, &c., in the neighbouring fields; and a place still bearing the designation of Cross Hill, a little to the north-east, is supposed to be the site of one of those crosses so common in this country in ancient times.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, occupies an elevated situation west of the village; and is a small neat edifice, without tower or side aisles, capable of accommodating about 100 persons. The east window is of three lights, the font is an octagonal basin of freestone; and the communion table is plain and unadorned. The chancel contains the burial places of the Scurfields of Elstob, and the Nicholsonsons. The parish register commences in 1561. The living is a rectory, valued in the Liber Regis at £12 13s. 4d.; gross income, £340. The glebe contains upwards of 47 acres; the tithes are commuted for £270, £200 for Great Stainton township, and £70 for Elstob. The patronage is vested in the crown. Rector, Rev. Thomas Lewis Trotter, M.A.

The Parsonage House is a handsome structure, with a garden and shrubbery, and commands beautiful and extensive views of the surrounding country.

The National School, with teacher's residence, was erected by subscription in 1847, at a cost of £245, of which £54 was obtained from the committee of council on education. The school possesses an income of £8 14s., being the dividend on £200 10s. 2d., which has been bequeathed, in several sums, by various parties, at different periods, for education. It is under government inspection, and the average attendance is twenty-one pupils. Joseph Lowe, teacher.

Charities.—Mary Barker, in 1719, gave £5, vested in the overseers, to the poor of Great Stainton; and in respect of this sum, 5s. is distributed annually at Easter amongst five poor widows.

STRANTON PARISH.

The parish of Stranton originally comprised the townships of Brierton, Seaton Carew, and Stranton; it was bounded on the north and west by the parish of Hart, on the south-west by Elwick Hall, on the south by Greatham, and on the east by the German Ocean. In 1841, Seaton Carew was constituted a distinct chapelry; and the district parish of West Hartlepool, situated in the north-east part of the township of Stranton, was formed in 1852.

BRIERTON, or BREARTON, township, contains 748 acres, divided into three farms, and its annual value is £465. It contained, in 1801, 22 inhabitants; in 1821, 21; in 1831, 22; in 1841, 27; and in 1851, 33. The manor was held in ancient times by the Greystocks, and in the reign of Henry VII., was transferred by marriage to the Dacres, of Gilsand. It was afterwards the property of the Howards; and, in the reign of Charles II., was held by Sir William Blackett, Bart.: it subsequently came in the possession of the Turner family; and is now the property of Kirkleatham Free School, and the executors of the late Mrs. Lamb. The corn-tithes of this township, belong to John Paverley, Esq., and are commuted for £80 a-year; the vicarial tithes, commuted for £28, are the property of the Vicar of Stranton. The manorial rights, &c., are vested in the landowners.

Directory.—Robert Hird, and William Smith, farmers.

STRANTON township (which includes West Hartlepool and Middleton), comprises an area of 3,695 acres: its annual value is £17,579. The population in 1801 was 325; in 1811, the whole parish (including Stranton, Brierton, and Seaton Carew) had a population of 659; in 1821, that of this township alone was 371; in 1831, 381; in 1841, 1,491; and in 1851, 4,008. This great and rapid increase has been caused by the large number of labourers, with their families, employed at the Hartlepool and West Docks, and to the increase of the coal-trade. In 1851, there were 637 inhabited houses, 13 uninhabited, and 56 in process of erection. The Stockton and Hartlepool Railway extends into this township. Stranton was formerly part of the ancient Hartness; and the manor was held under the Bruces and Cliffords by the Lumleys. The Greshams, the Wilsons, the Gibsons, and Whartons, afterwards possessed property here; the great tithes of the whole parish belonged to the latter family. The present landowners are Frederick A. Milbank, Esq., William Robson, Esq., Ralph Walker, Esq., John Smith, Esq., Mrs. Ann Surtees, William Lloyd Wharton Esq., Wilbraham Egerton, Esq., William Barrass, Esq., John Richardson, Esq., and John Paverley, Esq.

The Village of Stranton is pleasantly situated about a quarter of a mile from the sea, to which the ground slopes gradually. The rapidly rising town of West Hartlepool now adjoins the village on the east, and is incorporated with it for the poor-rates. Stranton is also included in the Hartlepool Improvement Act, and is lighted with gas; but the water is not as yet laid in, there being a good supply in the village. An annual feast is held here on the Sunday after Old Martinmas-day.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is supposed to occupy the site of that given by Robert de Brus to Guisborough priory; and consists of a nave and aisles, chancel, and lofty tower. In the north aisle, a porch, originally entered by an arch, was afterwards closed up, but is now thrown into the body of the church. Another porch, on the north side of the chancel, and which formerly served as a place of sepulture for the Fulthorpes of Tunstall, was afterwards turned into a vestry, but is now re-opened. A beautiful pulpit of Caen stone has replaced the old one of wood, and an organ, which cost about £70, has been erected in a recess on the south side of the chancel; and on the north side of the same portion of the edifice, a neat vestry has been erected in harmony with the style of the church. There are a few mural monuments to the memory of different persons; but some of the more ancient ones have been removed. The church will accommodate about 500 persons. The parish register commences in 1580. The living is a vicarage, valued in the Liber Regis at £17 10s. 0½d.; gross income, £325. The tithes were commuted in 1841: those of Stranton for £220, those of Brierton for £25, and those of Seaton Carew for £100. Patron, Sir Matthew White Ridley, Bart.; vicar, Rev. Henry Richard Ridley.

Fulthorpe's Charity.—The Rev. Christopher Fulthorpe, by will, June 30th. 1707, devised to trustees all his property in Tunstall, Modeston, Stranton, Throston, Hart, Hartlepool, and elsewhere in the county of Durham, that they, after paying certain legacies and annuities out of his estate at Catcote, should, with the residue, erect a school-house in such a place as he should direct, the master of which, who should be a deacon, or qualified as such, was to receive £20 per annum for teaching 15 children in Stranton and Hart parishes gratis. The further sum of £8 a-year was to be laid out in buying coats, shoes, and hats for four poor scholars, and 40s. for Common Prayer Books, Whole Duties of Man, and Bibles for such as should need them, and had made the greatest improvement. No school was for many years established according to the directions of this will; though two of the proprietors of Catcote admitted that £400 and £200 had been returned from their respective purchase moneys, on account of the claim that might possibly be made upon them in respect of this charity. At length, in 1841, a school-house was erected by the proprietor of Catcote, at the north end of the village. It is called Fulthorpe's School, and is under the management of five trustees, of whom the Vicar of Stranton for the time being is the acting trustee. The proprietor of Catcote, W. Robson, Esq., gives £30 annually, of which £20 is paid to the master, for which fifteen poor children belonging to this parish are educated gratuitously, and the remaining £10 is disposed of in clothes, books, &c., for the same children.

Tunstall, an estate to the west of Stranton, was anciently held by a younger branch of the Fulthorpe family; and it afterwards passed to the Radclyffes, Booths, and Strangways; but was again acquired, by marriage and purchase, by the elder branch of the Fulthorpes. It is now the property of William Robson, Esq., and others.

WEST HARTLEPOOL DISTRICT PARISH.

This district parish, comprising West Hartlepool, the populous suburb called California, and Middleton, which includes a large portion of the Old Dock, was formed by the Bishop of Durham in April 1854, in compliance with a petition presented to him, and in compliance with the provisions of the act of parliament for such purposes. The population of the parish, exclusive of the floating population in the shipping, is about 7,000.

THE TOWN of West Hartlepool owes its existence to the formation of the West Docks, in 1845, up to which period, the entire site was a barren shore, on which stood a solitary farm house. The ground becoming the property of the Dock Company, buildings began to be erected, the plan and arrangements of which are more systematic than is usually the case with places so hastily constructed; the parts more recently built, in particular, are judiciously laid out and the streets run at right angles to each other. The houses are generally of brick, and the shops neat and commodious. The district called California, situated to the north-west, is principally occupied by workmen, and forms an exception to the other parts of the town, the houses being crowded together, and mostly deficient in sanitary arrangements. Upwards of 100 acres of land are about to be added to West Hartlepool, as building sites for villas, &c.; the Dock offices, situated at the north end of Victoria Terrace, are about to be pulled down; and more extensive and suitable buildings will be erected for the purpose where the present Tower Buildings stand. The town is supplied with gas and water by the Hartlepool company. An Act for paving, lighting, watching, draining, cleansing, regulating, and otherwise improving the town, was obtained in 1854; and by its authority commissioners are appointed, for carrying out its provisions, who may purchase lands for opening new streets, regulate their width, and enforce flagging and draining. They are also empowered to construct sewers, to convert sewerage into manure, to supply water, to establish baths and wash-houses, to provide slaughter-houses, and construct a cemetery. For these purposes they have power to impose highway and borough rates, levy tolls, and may borrow £13,250 towards paying the expenses of the act, building a town hall, market house, and other public buildings; and £18,000 for the other purposes of the act. A sinking fund is to be set apart, of not less than one-thirtieth part, in one year, of the money borrowed. Slaughter-houses have already been erected, and a cemetery is at present in formation in the neighbourhood of the town. The usual professions and trades of a seaport flourish here; and besides engineers, builders, &c., there are eight shipbuilding yards, including one recently established by Mr. Pile, previously an eminent builder of clipper vessels at Sunderland. His premises adjoin the Jackson Dock on the north-west, and include a dry-dock, 320 feet in length, 92 feet broad at the bottom, with an entrance 60 feet wide, being the largest on the east coast. The shipyard contains every description of machinery necessary for building and repairing all kinds of iron and wood ships and steamers. The iron foundries of Mr. W. Taylor and Bastow Brothers are in Hope-street; there is a canvas manufactory in Tennant-street and several block and mast makers near the docks.

CHRIST CHURCH, West Hartlepool, is an elegant structure, in the early English style, consisting of a square western tower, nave and aisles, transepts, and chancel. It is situated on a piece of ground, of about an acre in extent, enclosed by a dwarf wall and iron palisading; and, as interments are not allowed in the churchyard, it is laid out with walks and green sward. The ground, as well as the stone and lime for the building, were given by the West Hartlepool Dock and Railway Company. The church is built from designs furnished by Mr. E. B. Lamb, architect, of London; Mr. W. J. C. West, being clerk of the works. Tenders were advertised for its erection in March 1852, and it was completed and consecrated by the Bishop of Durham on the 20th April 1854. The cost of erection was about £6,000. The tower, beneath which is the principal entrance to the church, is 100 feet high, with a stair turret at the south-east corner, and contains a peal of six bells, which cost £400. The tower is surmounted by a spire and vane, twenty-five feet high, which forms a conspicuous object from the sea. The interior length of the church is 125 feet, the width of the nave 28 feet, the length of the transept 89 feet, and its breadth 23 feet. At the west end of the nave is a rich stone gallery, containing a large and powerful organ, built by James Langley, Esq., of Greatham; and at the south-west angle is the font, which is elevated on three steps, and has a carved oak cover. The interior of the roof is open, and stained in imitation of old oak. At the intersection of the roofs of the nave and transepts, there is an octagonal lantern, containing eight quatrefoil windows for ventilation, and above which is a spire and ornamented iron finial. The south transept, which is appropriated to sailors, is called the Mariners' Porch, and bears on its gable a sculptured anchor. In each of the transept gables there is a circular window in twelve compartments; the centre of the northern one being occupied by a sitting figure of the Redeemer. The chancel is approached by three steps; and three compartments of the east window are filled with stained glass, containing representations of Our Saviour, St. Peter, and St. Paul. The other windows are filled with plain and coloured glass in geometrical forms, with painted borders. The sittings, which are all open, are of deal, stained in imitation of oak, and contain accommodation for 1,000 persons. 700 sittings are free and unappropriated. The doors, pulpit, and reading desk, communion table, &c., are of oak; the church is lighted with gas; and on Sunday evenings, with its large congregation, presents a most encouraging appearance. There is a spacious vestry, with an entrance porch, at the north-east corner of the church. As a preliminary, the sum of £1,000 was invested, being a foundation for an endowment, in the hands of the following trustees:—Ralph Ward Jackson, Esq., Charles Swainston, Esq., Rev. G. T. Fox, Rev. H. W. McGrath, and the Rev. John Lawson. The interest from this sum, with the pew rents and surplice fees, constitute at present the only source of income. Application was made to the ecclesiastical commissioners for a permanent grant, but the application was not complied with. Patron, the vicar of Stranton; incumbent, Rev. John H. Burgess, B.A.

A Parsonage House is now in process of erection on ground given by the Dock Company, on the south-east of the church. The cost is estimated at £1,200.

THE INDEPENDENT CHAPEL.—The congregational interest is quite in its infancy in this town. In the beginning of the year 1854, a few members of the Independent church at Hartlepool, and others, considering it desirable that an effort should be made to raise an interest of the same denomination in this town, succeeded in opening a room for the purpose, where religious services have been since regularly held. In the month of May, of the same year, a unanimous and cordial invitation was given to the Rev. J. H. Hughes, late of Demerara, to become the pastor, who continues to labour with great acceptance among the people, and to gather around him an intelligent and respectable congregation. The need of a larger place of worship being greatly felt, it was decided to erect a more commodious chapel; and, in accordance with this decision, a new structure is now in course of erection, on a site given by John Richardson, Esq., one of the deacons of the church, a little to the south of Christ Church, in Tower-street. The new chapel is in the early decorated style, from designs furnished by Mr. Thomas Oliver, jun., architect, of Sunderland, and consists of nave, east and west transepts, gallery, and square tower, with an octagonal spire. The edifice is of brick; the window-dressings, cappings, buttresses, and tower, will be covered with Portland cement. The roof is open; the pews are of stained fir; and the building is calculated to contain 700 sittings. Light and spacious school rooms, lecture rooms, &c., are under the chapel. The entire cost is estimated at £4,000; and the chapel is expected to be open for service in January 1856.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL, Dock-street, is a small building, erected by subscription, at an expense of £380; it contains 300 sittings.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CHAPEL, situated opposite to Christ Church, is a large brick building, erected in 1855, at a cost of about £1,000, and will seat 700 persons.

THE WESLEYAN METHODIST REFORMERS' CHAPEL is situated in Lynn-street, and will accommodate about 600 worshippers. It was rebuilt in 1851, at a cost of upwards of £732; and there is a large school room on the ground floor.

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL, &c.—A subscription was commenced, in 1854, for the erection of schools in connection with Christ Church, for the education of 800 children of both sexes. The Dock Company, with their usual liberality, presented the site on the south-west of the church, and offered to furnish the stone for the building from their quarries; in addition to which it is estimated that £2,400 will be required. There is a boarding school for young ladies at West House; and in the town there are several day schools.

THE ATHENÆUM, &c.—This fine structure occupies a prominent position in the new town, and was erected in 1851-2, from the designs of Mr. H. B. Robson, at a cost of £1,100, exclusive of the site and stone materials, which were furnished by the Dock Company. It is in the Italian style; the principal front is adorned with pillars and a well proportioned entablature, and the roof terminates with an elegant blocked cornice. The interior comprises a school room and store room on the basement floor; a news room, library, two class rooms, and two rooms for a housekeeper, on the ground floor; and on the upper floor a lecture room, 70 feet by 80, with gallery, &c. The large room is used for assemblies; and there are offices for the board of commissioners. A Mechanics' Institution was established in West Hartlepool in 1849; and since the completion of the Athenæum, the library and museum of the institute have been placed in the building; and classes for the modern languages, &c., formed. The number of members at present is above 200.

Ralph Ward Jackson, Esq., president; Messrs. Salmon and Brunton, secretaries; Richard Dove, librarian.

West Docks.—"Though the coal trade of the southern and south-western portions of Durham," says Mr. Fordyce, "was directed to the Tees by the Stockton and Hartlepool and the Clarence Railways, yet the intricate nature of that river was soon felt to be an inconvenience; and, in 1838, a branch of the Clarence Railway, in the township of Billingham, was projected, for the purpose of enabling those coals to be shipped at a new dock, to be formed in land purchased for the purpose, adjoining the stake, at Hartlepool. A company was accordingly formed, with a capital of £150,000, in 3,000 shares, at £50 each. It was estimated that 160,000 chaldrons, or 400,000 tons of coal would be annually vended by this railway, producing a revenue of £19,166 13s. 4d. Fish, it was calculated, would produce £1,000; passengers, £5,200; and merchandise, £1,500; whilst the expenses were calculated at £8,500, leaving a surplus profit of £20,366 13s. 4d. Though threatened with opposition by the parties shipping coal at the Old Hartlepool Docks, an act was obtained in 1839, for the formation of 'The Stockton and Hartlepool Railway.' It was completed in 1841, and is nearly eight miles in length. To avoid further competition, the old dock company entered into an agreement for three years, with the new railway company, to ship the coals and other traffic of the latter in their docks. The unsatisfactory termination of this agreement has been alluded to in page 505, and measures were taken in earnest for the construction of the new dock and harbour in the situation originally proposed. Application was made to parliament, in the session of 1844, for an act for the purpose, which encountered severe opposition from the old dock company, the pier and port commissioners, and others, backed by the opinion of Mr. Murray, C.E. The approval of the Admiralty was, however, obtained; and petitions, numerous and signed, were presented to parliament in favour of the new enterprise, from the shipping interests of the ports of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, North Shields, South Shields, Blyth, Sunderland, Scarborough, Whitby, Yarmouth, Lynn, Ipswich, and Hartlepool; also from the fishermen of the latter place, and from the owners of collieries in the southern and western districts of the county, desiring to ship in the West Dock, and representing an annual production of upwards of 500,000 tons. Not the least important petition, on this occasion, was from eight captains of vessels, who, in attempting to make the old harbour in a severe gale from the east-north east, on the 26th February, 1844 (while the bill was before parliament), were wrecked under distressing circumstances, on the very site proposed for the new harbour, and the whole of whom, according to the evidence of one of the captains, could have saved their ships if that harbour had then been formed. Through the energetic exertions of the friends of the bill, it was at length passed, and received the royal assent on the 23rd May, 1844. The promoters were thus incorporated as 'The Hartlepool West Harbour and Dock Company,' and hence the establishment of 'The West Harbour and Docks.' The works of the West Harbour and the inner dock were commenced in the spring of 1845. The harbour, formed by stone piers projecting from the land, contained an area of thirteen acres, and the dock, excavated in the neighbouring meadows, contained eight acres. They were opened, amidst great public rejoicings, on the 1st June, 1847, when the 'Prince' barque, of Jersey, and the 'Benbow' schooner, of London, entered from the sea; and so excellent were the shipping accommodations, that both vessels were laden with coals in two hours, and proceeded to sea the same tide on which they entered. The importance of the harbour of West Hartlepool was evinced by the fact that during the first seven months after its opening, ending December, 1847, 460 ships entered, and 54,202 tons of coal and coke were shipped. The entries and shipments in the following specified years were—1848, 1,242 ships, 169,021 tons; 1849, 2,753 ships, 388,954 tons; 1850, 3,882 ships, 589,990 tons; 1851, 3,782 ships, 574,742 tons. In 1851, the directors of the dock company and of the Stockton and Hartlepool Railway Company agreed, that by uniting the two undertakings and their properties together, upon fair and reasonable terms, the true interests of the proprietors in both would be best and permanently secured—their joint traffic conducted with more freedom and efficiency—greater vigour and economy in the united concerns practised—and all disputes as to rates, dues, provisions, and management for mutual traffic prevented. The amalgamation of the companies ensued; and the united income for the first year, ended June 30th, 1853, was £102,412 17s. 8d. The total amount of the working expenses was £45,391 13s. 1d., leaving a balance of £57,020 4s. 7d.; out of which a dividend of four per cent was declared, and £581 carried to the next year's account. At that period, the united companies and that of the Clarence Line had expended about £1,300,000, and possessed powers by their various bills to raise about £300,000 more, in case of need. Additional harbour and dock accommodation having become necessary, new piers were constructed, enclosing an area of forty-four acres. Another dock, called the 'Jackson Dock,' containing fourteen acres, was also formed, and opened on the 1st June (the anniversary of the first dock), 1852. The lock entrance to it is sixty feet wide, with a graving dock connected. Accommodation was thus provided, in the harbour and docks, for 500 vessels. New drops and staiths were provided; and every conceivable arrangement was made for facilitating the business of the place. Ships drawing eighteen feet water were sent to sea with coal cargoes for the East and West Indies, the Mediterranean, Baltic, Hanseatic, French, and other ports. The value of West Hartlepool, as a harbour of refuge, was demonstrated on several occasions after its being opened. The coals shipped at these docks are West Hartlepool Wallsend, Heugh Hill, do., Tennants' do., West Hetton do., South Kelloe do., West Kelloe do., Dennison's Bentley's do., Tees do., Coundon do., Backhouse's do., Hunwick do., Byer's Green do., Newfield do., Lepping's do., Willington do., Bowdon Close do., Brancepeth do., and Whitworth do. There are six coal fitting offices in the town. During the formation of the second dock, the Leeds Northern Railway was constructed, connecting West Hartlepool with the manufacturing districts of Leeds, Halifax, Huddersfield, Wakefield, Bradford, Manchester, Liverpool, Preston, and other parts of Lancashire. This undertaking, opened June 1st, 1852, constituted West Hartlepool the medium for the import of merchandise for the interior, with a corresponding facility of obtaining outward freight. The formation of the Darlington and Barnard Castle Railway, now in progress, will also tend to increase the traffic and revenue of the port. At a special meeting of the West Hartlepool Harbour and Railway Company, May 17th, 1853, it was resolved to construct a third dock, of from eight to ten acres, chiefly for foreign vessels. The works were speedily commenced; and the 'Commercial Dock' is now nearly completed. In connection with it will be a ship-yard and graving dock of still larger dimensions than the one at present in use; also a large timber pond, import timber yard, saw mills, &c., to meet a want which becomes daily more apparent, as it is now found necessary to pile the immense quantities of timber imported upon the quays and other places, or to float it in the docks among the shipping. Extensive and admirable warehouses have been erected along the greater part of the sides of the docks. A line of railway is laid through the centre of the whole, so that by the aid of turn tables and other appliances a cargo may be transferred from shipboard to the Stockton and Hartlepool Line or from thence to the warehouses and docks, with equal facility. A commodious railway station is immediately adjoining, and an electric telegraph communicates with London and other towns. Since 1852, in which year the second dock was opened, the following shows the number of ships entered, and the quantity of coal and coke shipped:—In 1852, 4,386 ships, 688,370 tons; 1853, 4,469, 680,536 tons; 1854, 4,826, 696,079 tons. Steam ships of large tonnage, run between West Hartlepool and London, and also to and from Hamburg and other ports on the Continent. West Hartlepool has been made a bonding port; and the propriety of erecting a custom-house has been under the consideration of the authorities. 'The West Hartlepool Mutual Marine Insurance Association' was formed in February, 1855, and in a few weeks, received tonnage for insurance to the amount of £25,000. The port charges are as follow:—Dock dues, vessels loading or discharging a cargo, 1½d. per register ton; ditto, not loading or discharging, ½d.; ballast discharging, 1s. 3d. per ton. Dues of commissioners, vessels loading or discharging a cargo, 1d. per register ton; ditto, not loading or discharging, ½d. Steam-boats, 1s. per keel. Pilotage, 1s. 3d. per foot in summer; 1s. 6d. in winter. The tonnage rates are graduated according to the length of the voyage, from 2d. per ton in the ports in the United Kingdom to 1s. 6d. from the West Indies, east coast of South America, Greenland, or Davis' Straits, or any place eastward of the Cape of Good Hope, or westward of Cape Horn." West Hartlepool Harbour and Railway Company's Station, Samuel Chester, general manager.

THE HARBOUR OF REFUGE.—Great and important as have been the changes wrought in this neighbourhood during late years, a work is now proposed which will go far to eclipse them all, and by means of which a large extent of the sea itself will be enclosed, and appropriated to the port of Hartlepool. The important works to be executed, and for which an act of parliament received the royal assent on the 8th July, 1855, are thus described:—"Powers to make, construct, and maintain, an outer harbour in the bay of Hartlepool, and for that purpose to make, construct, and maintain, a southern pier or breakwater, commencing upon and from the shore or high-water banks of the sea, at or near a certain building called Carr Cottage, in the township of Seaton Carew and parish of Stranton, in the county of Durham, and extending from such point, in an easterly and northerly direction, over, along, upon, or near to a certain reef of rocks called Long Scar, and the shore and bed of the sea, and terminating in the German Ocean, at a distance or extent of about 2,900 yards from the first-mentioned point. Also powers to make, maintain, vary, extend, or enlarge, a northern pier or breakwater, commencing from or near the cliffs called the 'Heugh,' in the township and borough of Hartlepool, in the county of Durham, at or near a pier now in course of construction, and extending from such point in a south-easterly direction, and terminating in the German Ocean, at a distance of about 400 yards from the head or seaward termination of the said southern pier; and to make or construct a sea wall or barrier, or sea walls or barriers, with all requisite and proper works and conveniences connected therewith, for the protection of the headland of Hartlepool, and the cliffs near or adjoining thereto, from the inroads of the sea; such sea wall or walls, barrier or barriers, to commence from a point on or near the sea-shore, at or near to a place called or known as the 'Far Kiln,' in the township of Throston and parish of Hart, and thence along, opposite, or near to the course of the cliffs or sea-shore, up to, and terminating at, or near the point on the sea-shore from which the said northern pier is hereinbefore described as commencing." The estimated cost of the works is £800,000; the area to be enclosed by the piers will be nearly 1,000 acres, in which the commissioners are empowered "to sluice, dredge, deepen, and improve the anchorage ground." The depth at the entrance at low water spring tide, will be thirty feet, and thus the harbour will be accessible at all times and states of the tide. "The utility of a harbour of refuge on the north-east coast of England," says a recent writer, "may be considered indisputable. Between Flamborough Head and the Frith of Forth, ships in distress must either run for some one of the coal ports, or risk being drifted ashore. The bay of Hartlepool, to which the Heugh presents a point on one side for the projection of a pier, and the Long Scar rocks a good foundation for an opposite one, may thus be easily secured and protected in all weathers."

LIFE BOAT AND PILOTS.—The West Hartlepool life boat, established in 1847, is maintained by the Dock Company, in accordance with the provisions of their act of parliament. It is kept in a suitable shed, a little to the south of the town. The Pilots are under the jurisdiction of the Trinity House at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; their number is at present thirty-four.

CEMETERY.—In accordance with the provisions of the improvement act, the commissioners have purchased a field, containing eleven acres, to serve as a cemetery, part of which is enclosed. Near the centre of the ground, two stone chapels in the Gothic style have been erected; one for the use of members of the Church of England, and the other for Dissenters. A lodge, with an entrance gate on each side, is built in a style harmonising with the chapels, and is surmounted by a bell turret.

MIDDLETON adjoins the tidal harbour of Hartlepool on the south-west, and derives its designation from a gentleman of that name, who purchased the property about the year 1766. When the harbour improvements commenced, this was the first part of Stranton parish which shared the prosperity of Hartlepool, by the formation of ship-building yards, &c. Here are the iron works of Messrs. Richardson and Co., and the works of the Hartlepool Bottle Company. A Wesleyan Methodist chapel, erected in 1835, has recently been purchased by the Dock Company; and the congregation meet for worship in the new chapel, West Hartlepool. A National School was erected here in 1840.

WOLVISTON PAROCHIAL CHAPELRY.

This chapelry is bounded on the north-east by the parish of Greatham, on the north by that of Elwick Hall, on the north-west by Grindon, and on the south-east by the townships of Billingham and Cowpen-Bewley. It comprises the two townships of Newton-Bewley and Wolviston.

NEWTON-BEWLEY township contains 1,562 acres, and its annual value is £1,393 3s. The number of inhabitants in 1801 was 88; in 1811, 84; in 1821, 86; in 1831, 92; in 1841, 87; and in 1851, 121. The manor-house of which no vestige now remains, and demesnes in this township were assigned to the twelfth stall in Durham Cathedral. The endowment and estates of this canonry became vested in the ecclesiastical commissioners in 1858. The rectorial tithes belong to the ecclesiastical commissioners, and amount to £133 per annum; the vicarial to the Rev. Philip Rudd, and are commuted for £21 8s.

The Village of Newton-Bewley is situated six miles north-by-east from Stockton.

WOLVISTON township comprises an area of 2,396 acres, and the annual value of the property assessed to the county-rate in 1853 was £2,188 13s. The population in 1801 was 411; in 1811, 390; in 1821, 341; in 1831, 582; in 1841, 588; and in 1851, 750 souls. The principal landowners are the dean and chapter of Durham, who also possess the manorial rights. This, like the other portions of the former parish of Billingham, is held by farmers under leases of twenty-one years, subject to a renewal fine every seven years. Here are a brick and tile works and pottery; the former carried on by Mr. Henry Mainwaring, is the property of Robert White, Esq., and was erected by the Rev. L. C. Clarke.

The Village of Wolviston occupies a pleasant situation on the Stockton and Sunderland turnpike road, about five miles north-by-east from the former place. An annual festival is held here on the first Sunday after Lammas Day; and on the following day, a horticultural show takes place; races and shows of various kinds follow; and, in the evening, balls take place at the public-houses.

The Chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, stands near the centre of the village, and consists of nave, chancel, and square tower: the latter was erected in 1830, at which time the chapel was enlarged. It now contains 320 sittings, and in consequence of a grant from the society for promoting the enlargement and building of churches and chapels, 130 of that number are free and unappropriated. An organ, purchased by subscription, was opened in 1854. The chapelry of Wolviston was severed from the mother church in 1577; from which year the register is dated. The emoluments of the living are derived from glebe lands belonging to it, and amount to about £180 per annum. The living, which is not in charge nor certificated, is in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham, and incumbency of the Rev. L. C. Clarke, B.A., who was appointed in 1832.

The Parsonage House is situated in a pleasant and healthy part of the village, and has been considerably enlarged and improved by the present incumbent. The great tithes of the chapelry are commuted for £337 16s., paid to the ecclesiastical commissioners; and the small tithes amounting to £70 per annum, are received by the Vicar of Billingham.

Here is a small Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, with a house for the minister, and a school.

The Parochial School was rebuilt by subscription in 1836, on a site given by the Rev. L. C. Clarke, at a cost of £175. The dean and chapter of Durham give £10 per annum for the free education of twelve poor children, and the present incumbent pays for the instruction of eight others.

In 1838, three Alms-Houses, containing six apartments, were erected in the centre of the village by Frances Ann Vane, Marchioness of Londonderry, for six poor widows, who are appointed by her ladyship.

Rose Villa, the residence of Wright Clunie, Esq., is situated south of the village, and commands a fine view of the surrounding country.
